Held, that, under the circumstances, the resident members, though occupiers of the houses, were occupiers as licensees of the company, and not as lessees, sub-lessees, or tenants, and that they were not, therefore, entitled as of right to enter into and use the garden.

Held, further, that the members of the club were not "friends" whose entry on to and user of the garden the company could authorize.

Argument of points of law.

This was an action brought by certain occupying tenants and owners of houses situate in Stanley-gardens and Kensington Park-gardens, Notting Hill, the backs of which abut on an ornamental pleasure-ground or garden, to restrain the defendant company, which carries on a club in certain other houses adjoining the garden, from authorizing the members of the club to use the garden.

By an indenture of the 25th of June, 1852, Felix Ladbroke, the then owner in fee simple of the site on which the houses in Stanley-gardens were afterwards built, of the houses in Kensington Park-gardens, and of the garden, conveyed to Charles Henry Blake in fee simple the site of the houses in Stanley-gardens, bounded on one side by the garden in question, which was therein referred to as then laid out for the use of the houses in Kensington Park-gardens, and he thereby also granted to the said C. H. Blake, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and his and their lessees and sub-lessees or tenants, being occupiers for the time being of the houses then in course of erection or at any time thereafter to be erected immediately adjoining the garden in question, and for his and their families and friends, in his and their company or without, free use and right of ingress, egress, and regress at all times thereafter into, out of, and upon the garden in question, he and they nevertheless conforming to such rules as to the user of the same as should be ordered by the said Felix Ladbroke, his heirs or assigns, and the committee (if any) of the resident inhabitants of the houses adjoining the garden to whom the management and control of the garden should be committed for the preservation and the keeping up of the same, and also paying an annual subscription for the maintenance of the garden.

The plaintiffs are occupiers, some being owners in fee simple and others tenants for terms of years, of houses in Stanley-gardens and Kensington Park-gardens.

Such of the plaintiffs as are occupiers of houses in Stanley-gardens derive their title through Charles

(a.) Reported by H. L. Ormiston, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Henry Blake, and, consequently, are entitled under the deed of the 25th of June, 1852, to use the gardens.

The remaining plaintiffs, occupiers of houses in Kensington Park-gardens, are entitled to use the garden in a similar manner as assignees of leases granted by Felix Ladbroke.

The defendant company, which is the owner in fee simple of four houses and the lessee of one house in Stanley-gardens, and as such is likewise entitled to the benefit of the deed of the 25th of June, 1852, was incorporated as a limited company in 1902, one of its objects, as stated in its memorandum, being "to provide furnished residential rooms and board at economical prices, for educated women workers engaged in professional, educational, literary, secretarial, or other similar work."

In pursuance of its objects the defendant company converted the five houses of which it was in occupation into a residential club for ladies, known as the "Twentieth Century Club."

The club is constituted and carried on by and in accordance with a printed document issued by the defendant company containing its "constitution" and "bye-laws."

The document states that the club was founded to provide a comfortable home, combined with the facilities of a club, for ladies engaged in work in London.

The club is the property of the defendants, and is managed by them, and members incur no liability beyond the annual subscription of 10s. 6d. a year. Sleeping rooms are provided at a charge of 10s. 6d. a week, payable in advance weekly. Country and non-resident members, by paying the annual subscription, can avail themselves of the facilities of the club, and have the use of a bedroom, if there be one vacant. Various restrictions are imposed on the user of the bedrooms; for example, members are not allowed to use oil lamps or stoves in the bedrooms for heating, lighting, or cooking, neither are lighted candles allowed therein. Domestic pets are not to be introduced; musical instruments and sewing machines are not to be used; and smoking is not allowed in the building. Any member wishing to withdraw from the club, or to vacate her apartment, can do so by giving one week's notice.

By the bye-laws, No. 15: "The directors do not undertake to reserve any particular bedroom for a member if vacated during holidays, &c., unless paid for."

By No. 17: "The directors reserve to themselves the right, notwithstanding anything stated or implied in the foregoing bye-laws, to remove from the club register the name of any member whose room may be required for other use. In every such case a proportionate amount of the last annual subscription will be returned."

The defendant company, which paid an annual subscription in respect of each house to the committee of management of the garden, permitted the resident members of the club during their resident membership to enter into and use the garden, and claimed that they were entitled to permit non-resident members of the club to use it.

Under these circumstances the plaintiffs brought the present action, to which the owner in fee of the garden was not a party.

By an order made, by consent, by Byrne, J., points of law were ordered to be set down to be argued before the court. In substance they were (1) Whether the resident members of the club were entitled as of right during their resident membership to enter into and use the garden; (2) whether the defendant company was entitled to authorize or allow such entry and user by (a) resident and (b) non-resident members of the club.

Buckmaster, K.C., and G. W. Brabant, for the plaintiffs.—The members of the club are not entitled in their own right to use the garden, for they are neither lessees, sub-lessees, nor tenants. To constitute a person a tenant he must have an estate in the land carved out of that of his landlord. Taking all the rules of the club into consideration, the inference is that the members are not tenants, but licensees: Watkins v. Overseers of Milton-next-Gravesend, 16 W. R. 1059, L. R. 3 Q. B. 350. Neither can the defendants authorize them to enter the garden; they are clearly not part of their family. A company cannot have friends in the sense in which that word is used in this grant, and, in any event, the members of the club would be more correctly described as the customers of the company.

Astbury, K.C., and Ashworth James, for the defendants.—There is no restriction in the grant as to the tenement which is to give a right to the use of the garden, or as to the owner, or as to the use to which the garden may be put. The defendants pay a subscription in respect of each house, and somebody, therefore, must be contemplated as intended to enjoy the right for which they pay. The resident members of the club are tenants within the wording of the grant. The rules show that they pay in advance for their rooms for a week, and have exclusive occupation of them. They thereby become weekly tenants, and, as such, are entitled to the benefit of the grant. There may be several tenants in respect of the same house: Harris v. Drewe, 2 B. & Ad. 164, and Kimber v. Admams, 48 W. R. 322, [1900] 1 Ch. 412, 415. A lodger may be a tenant if the premises are let to him: Newman v. Anderton, 2 B. & P. N. S. 224, and Cook v. Humber, 10 W. R. 427, 11 C. B. N. S. 30, 43. "Tenant" in legal parlance, is used in a wide sense: Stamper v. Overseers of Sunderland, 16 W. R. 1063, 3 C P. 388, 394, and Thompson v. Ward, 6 C. P. 327, 351. The company is entitled to license the members of the club to use the garden: Baxendale v. North Lambeth Liberal and Radical Club (Limited), 50 W. R. 650, [1902] 2 Ch. 427.

Buckmaster, K.C., replied.

BUCKLEY, J., after stating the facts, continued: The first question is whether these ladies are lessees, sub-lessees, or tenants of the company. In my opinion they are not. All those words imply the existence of some interest or estate in land—the estate or interest of a lessee, of a sub-lessee, or of a tenant. Under certain circumstances a person making a payment may be entitled to enter on and use land, of which, nevertheless, he is not a tenant. For example, if a man pays a sum of money for a stall at the opera, he pays for the right of occupying a particular seat to see a particular performance. Similar cases are payment for the right to enter a picture gallery, or to go into a strawberry garden and eat as much fruit as can be picked. In no such case does the person who makes the payment become a tenant, he is but a licensee. He has no estate, right, or interest in the land as land; he has a right to be there by license. To constitute a man a lessee, he must have some right in land, carved out of the estate of his landlord. In the present case the ladies are no more than licensees, the payment of 10s. 6d. in advance merely entitling them to use of a sleeping apartment for seven days, the company meantime retaining all their rights to the room.

Next, as to the words "being occupiers of the houses," it is true that an occupier of part of a house is an occupier of the house. It is plain, however, that the words "being occupiers" are words, not of grant, but of restriction of that which precedes. A lessee who is not an occupier cannot use the garden. To give a person such a right you must predicate that he is both a lessee and an occupier. Nothing, therefore, turns no the fact that the ladies are occupiers of the houses.

Then the class of persons entitled to use the garden includes "his and their families and friends in his and their company or without." Nothing arises on the word "family." The ladies are not of the family of the company. The question is whether they can be said to be its "friends." The first distinction to be drawn is that the freeholder, or any other person entitled to use the garden, as, for instance, the company cannot invite anyone to enter the garden merely from friendly motives. For example, a Sunday-school teacher could not invite her scholars, or a manufacturer his employes. The test must be whether the person invited is your friend. Without attempting to define the limits of friendship, I am prepared to say that these ladies are not friends of the company, but its customers. The defendant company is carrying on a business, and the persons who become members and make payments are accepted, not because they are friends, but by reason of the commercial relationship which exists between them and the company. In such a case it is very difficult to draw the line between persons who can and persons who cannot be spoken of as "friends." In each case it must depend on the nature of the relationship between the parties. For example, a visitor at the house of a lessee, or even a casual acquaintance whom he met in the street and invited to enter his garden, might be a "friend" for the purpose of this grant. As to whether a "paying guest" could be so denominated might be a nice question. I think, however, that the inmates of a boarding-house, a private hotel, a hospital, or a school would not be "friends." In the present case, I decide that the relationship between the company and the members of the club is not that of friendship. I therefore answer the questions stated in the negative.

Solicitors, Seaton Taylor; Caprons, Hitchins, Brabant, & Hitchins.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } March 22, 23, 29.

In re SHILSON, COODE, & CO. (a.)

Solicitor—Costs—Taxation—Commission for the collection of rents.

The taxing-master allowed a lump sum by way of commission to remunerate solicitors for the collection of certain rents.

Held, that the commission should be treated as struck out of the bill as an item improperly included, the solicitors remaining entitled to their proper remuneration for the work done.

Summons to review taxation.

The solicitors to a trust estate collected the rents and delivered their bill of costs to the trustees, and charged (inter alia) a commission of 5 per cent. on the amount of the rents collected.

The applicant was a beneficiary, and took out this summons to review the taxation.

Eve, K.C., and Ashworth James, for the applicant.

Vernon Smith, K.C., and J. G. Wood, for the solicitors.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

SWINFEN EADY, J., in giving judgment, said: The master has proceeded on the footing that, in the exercise of his discretion and in the absence of any agreement, he is entitled to allow the solicitors a lump sum by way of commission to remunerate them for their trouble in collecting the rents. The applicant seeks to review the taxation, not being satisfied with the taxing-master's decision on that point.

In my opinion the solicitors are in a dilemma. If this commission is a charge for professional work done by them as solicitors, they ought to deliver a bill of items in respect of it. In the absence of any agreement with their clients the master has no discretion to allow a lump sum for work of that character. The reasoning of Farwell, J., in In re Johnston, [1904] 1 Ch. 132, supports this view. On the other hand, if the work was not professional work the commission ought not to have been included in the bill.

The proper order to make upon this application is to vary the certificate by directing the master to treat the commission as struck out of the bill as an item improperly included. The effect of that will be to leave the matter at large between the parties. The solicitors will still be entitled to their proper remuneration for the work done; they will not be barred in respect of that claim; but on the other hand, they will not necessarily be entitled to receive this particular sum by way of remuneration. It may be that some application may hereafter be made for them to deliver a bill of items in respect of the work; or it may be that, if the work is treated as non-professional work (that is to say, as non-taxable work, but work for which the solicitors are nevertheless entitled to receive a fair remuneration), the trustees may agree the amount with the solicitors; and if the applicant is dissatisfied with that amount it may be it will be open to him to impeach the agreement at his own risk; but on the present application the charge must be treated as struck out. This may affect the costs of the taxation under the one-sixth rule. My view is that for the purpose of arriving at that sixth the item is to be treated as struck out of the bill—that is, as if the bill had originally been brought in at a reduced amount—and the one-sixth must be calculated on that footing. The certificate must be varied accordingly.

Solicitors, Church, Rendell, & Co., for Pitts-Tucker & Sons, Barnstaple; Coode, Kingdon, & Cotton.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J.) } March 19.

BAKER AND WIFE v. WICKS AND OTHERS. (a.)

Poor Law—Rating—Recovery of rates—Illegal distress—Liability of overseers—Poor Relief Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 12), s. 7—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 5, sub-section 1; s. 19, sub-section 5; s. 33.

Where a justices' warrant of distress for rates is handed by one of the overseers to the assistant overseer, who, by the terms of his appointment, is authorized to perform all the duties of an overseer, and the assistant overseer, in the execution of the warrant, is guilty of an illegal and excessive distress, the overseers are not liable for the assistant overseer's conduct.

Further consideration before Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., in an action that had been tried before him without a jury at the Lewes Assizes.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The action was for illegal and excessive distress, and was brought against three defendants, E. Wicks and W. E. Wright, the overseers of the poor for the parish of Ringmer, in the county of Sussex, and J. S. Webster, an auctioneer.

The plaintiff, Daniel Baker, was a farmer residing with his wife at Ringmer, and entertained a conscientious objection to the application of any part of the rates to the support of voluntary or non-provided schools under the Education Act, 1902, and with the object of recording his protest against such application he refused to pay the amount due from him in respect of rates in June, 1903; a summons was issued and an order for payment duly made by the justices for the county of Sussex.

On the 7th of July the justices issued a distress warrant in the statutory form given in Schedule C 1 and C 2 to the Distress for Rates Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14), addressed "To the overseers of the poor of the parish of Ringmer, in the county of Sussex, and to the constables of the East Sussex Constabulary, and to all other peace officers in the said county," commanding them to make distress of the goods of the plaintiff Daniel Baker to satisfy the demand for £7 19s. 7½d. in respect of unpaid rates, and the costs.

The justices handed the warrant to a police constable, who, acting under instructions, declined to execute it, and handed it to the defendant Wicks, who in turn handed it to a man named Washer, who was an assistant overseer for the parish of Ringmer, and who by the terms of his appointment was empowered to perform all the duties of an overseer. Washer was instructed to execute the warrant and to be careful not to overstep his duty.

On the 16th of July Baker paid to Washer the amount of the demanded rate, less fifteen shillings, the computed proportion of the rate appropriated to educational purposes, and this he refused to pay. The plaintiffs heard nothing further until the 3rd of September, when Washer came with the defendant Webster to the plaintiffs' farm, where they seized under the warrant of distress £100 worth of furniture and goods to satisfy the claim of fifteen shillings remaining unpaid, notwithstanding the fact, which they were both told, that with the exception of about £5 worth the furniture was the property of Mrs. Baker.

The plaintiffs thereupon brought this action against the three defendants. Washer was not made a defendant in the action, but was brought in as a third party by Webster.

Boxall, K.C. (E. E. Humphreys with him), for the plaintiffs.—There was an illegal and excessive distraint, and all three defendants are liable; the fact that Wicks and Wright did not authorize Washer to commit the illegal acts is no defence. Overseers are, with regard to an assistant overseer, in the same position as a sheriff to his subordinate officer, and as a sheriff who has delegated his authority to a subordinate officer is responsible for any illegal act committed by such subordinate officer when acting under that authority (see Gregory v. Cotterell, 4 W. R. 48, 5 E. & B. 571), so overseers are responsible for the misconduct of an assistant overseer to whom they have delegated the performance of their duty under a distress warrant. Overseers cannot delegate their authority in such a way as to relieve themselves of responsibility.

Avory, K.C. (Lawless with him), for the defendants Wicks and Wright.—The defendants Wicks and Wright are not liable for the illegal acts committed by the assistant overseers. Sheriffs and overseers do not stand on the same footing, for the sheriff's officer derives his authority solely from the sheriff and the latter is no doubt liable for an illegal act committed by his officer in the discharge of his authority, but the assistant overseer has an independent authority apart from that of the overseers. Lord Denman in Reg. v. Watts, 7 A. & E. 461, at p. 469, says the assistant overseer is not the servant of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, but of the vestry, from whom he directly receives his authority." Then, again, in Points v. Attwood, 6 C. B. 38, Coltman, J., at p. 49, says, speaking of an assistant overseer: "The acts done by him are not, therefore, to be considered as done by him as the agent of the other overseers, but as done by virtue of his own authority derived from the appointment of the vestry."

He also referred to Smith v. Keal, 31 W. R. 76, 9 Q. B. D. 340, and Morris v. Salberg, 37 W. R. 469, 22 Q B. D. 614.

Barnard Lailey, for the defendant Webster.

Clarke Hall, for the third party, Washer.

Boxall, K.C., in reply.—The cases of Reg. v. Watts and Points v. Attwood are not authorities against the plaintiffs, for the passages relied on in them are merely obiter dicta.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I cannot help regretting that the plaintiff, Mr. Baker, was not better advised as to the absurdity of attempting to raise in this kind of way this so-called conscientious objection to the rate for educational purposes. He might have raised it with equal dignity by paying the amount he objected to under protest. It is also much to be regretted that the police should have refused to execute the warrant. If they had carried out their duty no difficulty would have arisen. The matter now has to be dealt with as a question of law. The action is brought against the two overseers, Wicks and Wright, and Webster, an auctioneer, who brought in Washer, the overseer's assistant, as a third party. Washer had been appointed to exercise all the duties of an overseer of the poor, and an effective distress warrant had been addressed to the overseers of the poor in respect of the goods of the plaintiffs for 15s. for rates which had not been paid by Baker. If the overseers were in the position of sheriffs the plaintiffs would be entitled to obtain judgment against the defendant Wicks.

As to the defendant Wright, it has been shown that he had nothing to do with the matter. With regard to Wicks, he appeared to have given Washer, in whose hands the matter was placed, by no means unwise advice when Washer consulted him, but it is quite plain he made no attempt to take the matter out of Washer's hands. It is provided by statute that overseers may legally employ a duly qualified broker to levy execution, and the goods may be sold by the auctioneer. If I could come to the conclusion that the auctioneer only took an inventory of the goods under the direction of Washer, not only would he not be liable for illegal distress, but there would be some ground for saying he would be entitled to ask for some indemnity. The facts, however, prevent me from adopting the view that Webster did nothing more than take an inventory. According to the telegrams and letters under which Webster was engaged, it is said the costs were unlimited and fees as liberal as he liked. It is said that he was selected because, being a distance away, his business would not be affected, but the mere fact of taking an inventory would not hurt anyone's business. The evidence shows that he did a great deal more than take an inventory of the value of the goods under Washer's direction. He was, in fact, a principal in levying the distraint, and it was extremely improper conduct on his part.

The greater part of the goods were claimed by the wife, and not only was the seizure of the goods a highly improper and unjustifiable act, but it was a wrongful act and an excessive distress. It has been contended that Wicks must be held responsible for the unlawful act. With regard to the overseers, the question is whether they are responsible for the conduct of assistant overseers, and whether the same principle ought to be applied to them which is applied in the case of sheriffs, who are responsible for everything that is done during an execution. A sheriff has no right to delegate his authority, and is responsible for the acts of his subordinates. Overseers, however, are not in the position of sheriffs, and the principle does not therefore apply to the case of an assistant overseer, who under the statute is appointed to perform all the duties of an overseer. An assistant overseer is the servant of the vestry, and the overseers cannot be made liable for the acts of an assistant overseer. The act was done by the assistant overseer by virtue of his own authority, and where there is a statutory recognition of the office in question, the law in regard to the responsibility of a sheriff does not apply. The cases cited of Reg. v. Watts and Points v. Attwood are not direct decisions that the assistant is not the servant of the overseers, but the dicta to that effect are stated in the clearest and strongest terms, and lay down an intelligible principle upon which I feel bound to act.

In my opinion there was no act on the part of Wicks or Wright which makes them responsible for taking the goods of Mrs. Baker, and judgment therefore must go for Wicks and Wright. I find that Webster did levy the distress and took part in an illegal act. That being so, there is no remedy over against Washer, so that the third party notice fails against him as against the overseers. With regard to damages, the value of goods lost and damage done is £14 or £15, and I give judgment for the plaintiffs against Webster for £50, with costs, and judgment for the defendants Wicks and Wright, with costs. I make no order against Washer, but allow no costs in his favour on the third party notice. I think that the overseers are entitled to any costs occasioned to them by the third party notice, and they must be paid by Webster.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitor for plaintiffs, S. Lithgow, for D. A. Davies, Hove.

Solicitors for Wicks and Wright, Beale & Payne, for E. Bedford, Newhaven.

Solicitors for Webster, Needham, Tyer, & Barrow, for E. G. & F. J. Jackson, Belper.

Solicitors for Washer, E. M. Marx & Thompson, Brighton.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) Jan. 15.

KNUCKEY v. REDRUTH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Mine—Owner—Duty to fence—Public well in shaft of disused mine—Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), ss. 13 41—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 64.

By section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is provided that all existing wells "shall vest in and be under the control of" the local authority.

By section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, it is provided that "Where any mine . . . is abandoned or the working thereof discontinued . . . the owners thereof, and every other person interested in the minerals of the mine, shall cause the top of the shaft . . . to be kept securely fenced for the prevention of accidents."

By section 41 of the same statute "the term 'mine' includes . . . all the shafts . . . in and adjacent to a mine . . . and belonging to the mine"; and "the term 'owner' . . . means any person or body corporate, who is the immediate proprietor, or lessee, or occupier of any mine . . . but does not include a person or body corporate who . . . is merely the owner of the soil and not interested in the minerals of the mines."

The shaft of an abandoned mine having become flooded with water was used as a public well, and as such became vested in the defendants, the local authority. Owing to the top of the shaft being unfenced a horse belonging to the plaintiff fell down the well and was injured. In an action to recover from the defendants damages arising, owing to their negligence in not fencing the well as required by section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872,

Held, that the defendants were not the "owners" of the mine or of the shaft within the meaning of section 41 of that Act, and were, therefore, not liable in an action for damage sustained owing to the top of the shaft not having been fenced as required by section 13.

Appeal by plaintiff from the Redruth County Court.

The action was brought to recover from the defendants damages for the loss of a horse which had fallen down a well, which the plaintiff alleged the defendants had failed in their statutory duty to fence. The well was formed by the shaft of an abandoned mine, and was a public well. The plaintiff contended that the well was vested under section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in the defendants, who were the sanitary authority of the district in which the well was situated, and that they were bound under section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, to fence the top of the shaft in which the well was for the prevention of accidents, and that, the plaintiff's horse having fallen down the shaft in consequence of it not having been fenced, the defendants were liable in damages for the loss sustained by him owing to their neglect of their statutory duty.

The learned county court judge found as a fact that the well had become vested in the defendants, and that it was an old pit shaft, but he held that they were not the "owners" or "persons interested in the minerals of the mine" so as to compel them to fence the well in accordance with the provisions of Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, and he therefore gave judgment for the defendants.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From this judgment the plaintiff now appealed.

Section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, provides that all existing public wells "shall vest in and be under the control of the local authority."

The Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, provides as follows:

Section 13. "Where any mine to which this Act applies is abandoned, or the working thereof discontinued, at whatever time such abandonment or discontinuance occurred, the owner thereof, and every other person interested in the minerals of the mine, shall cause the top of the shaft and any s de entrance from the surface to be and to be kept securely fenced for the prevention of accidents."

Section 41. "In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term 'mine' includes . . . all the shafts . . . in and adjacent to a mine . . . and belonging to the mine: the term 'owner' when used in relation to any mine means any person or body corporate, who is the immediate proprietor, or lessee, or occupier of any mine, or of any part thereof, and does not include a person or body corporate who merely receives a royalty, rent, or fine from a mine, or is merely the proprietor of a mine subject to any lease, grant, or licence for the working thereof, or is merely the owner of the soil and not interested in the minerals of the mines."

Bethune (R. C. Glen with him) for the plaintiff.—The learned county court judge has found as a fact that this well is a public well, and it therefore is vested, under section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in the defendants and is under their control. They are therefore the owners of the well: Coverdale v. Charlton, 27 W. R. 257, 4 Q. B. D. 104; Taylor v. Corporation of Oldham, 25 W. R. 178, 4 Ch. D 395. Being the owners of the well, they are the "owners" of part of the mine within the meaning of section 41 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, and are bound by section 13 of the same Act to fence and keep fenced the top of the shaft which forms the well. They have failed to comply with this statutory duty, and they are, therefore, liable in damages for the injuries sustained by the plaintiff's horse.

He cited Evans v. Mostyn, 26 W. R. Dig. 143, 2 C. P. D. 547; Dublin United Tramways Co. v. FitzGerald, 51 W. R. 321, [1903] A. C. 99; and Foster v. Owen, 41 W. R. 240, 62 L. J. M. C. 7.

Schiller, for the defendants.—The defendants are not the owners of a mine and liable to keep the top of a shaft thereof fenced. They are not "interested in the minerals of the mine," and therefore by section 41 are not included within the term "owner" as defined by that section. [He was stopped.]

Bethune replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case the learned county court judge has found that the well was a public well and became vested in the defendants by virtue of section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875. I have no doubt there was evidence on which he could so find.

It seems to me that that is by no means conclusive of the case, and in fact goes a very little way to decide it. I agree that the vesting of the well under section 64 will, according to ordinary principles applicable to such vestings in public bodies, vest in the public authority some right of property in the well, and in so much of the land as is necessary to enable them to perform their statutory duties, and I have very little doubt that they would have the right to take steps to protect it from danger and make the well properly efficient if they thought right to do so. That is not the question we have to decide. It is not alleged against the defendants that they were the owners of the well and kept it in a dangerous condition. What we have to consider is, whether the defendants have been guilty of a breach of a statutory obligation imposed by section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872.

Now, section 13 says that where any mine to which this Act applies is abandoned the owner thereof and every person interested in the minerals of the mine shall cause the top of the shaft to be securely fenced.

If the words stood there by themselves without the interpretation clause in section 41, I think it could scarcely be disputed that the duty to fence is not only upon the owner of the mine, but upon every person interested in the minerals in the mine.

Then comes section 41, which extends the meaning of "mine" so as to make it include all the shafts, both below ground and above ground, in or adjacent to the mine. Therefore I agree that the person who owns the mine also owns the shafts, and it is the owner of the shafts in connection with that mine who is under the obligation imposed by section 13; but section 41, it seems to me, points to the owner of the mine and the minerals—the persons interested in the mine as distinguished from the mere owner of the soil for other purposes, and the exclusion from the word "owner" of certain persons is made abundantly plain. It says that the term "owner" when used in relation to any mine shall include bodies corporate, immediate proprietor or lessee or occupier of any mine, but expressly excludes a person who is merely the owner of the soil and not interested in the minerals of the mine. That being so, it seems to me, whether you take section 13 by itself, or together with section 41, it is not the mere legal owners of the soil which surrounds the shaft, but the person who is either the owner of the mine or interested in the minerals who is liable under section 13 to fence the shaft. That being so, what is the position of the defendants? They are not interested in the minerals of this mine, therefore I think they are not "owners" of the mine or the shaft so as to render them liable under section 13 to fence the well.

For these reasons I think the appeal must be dismissed.

WILLS, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I think the keynote of section 13 is that the liability to fence is cast either upon the owner of the mine or upon a person having an interest akin to ownership in the minerals of the mine. I think that is made apparent by the consideration of the definition of "owner" in section 41, which for certain purposes excludes from the term "owner" persons who are merely owners of the soil and who are not interested in the minerals of the mines. There is no pretence for saying that the defendants in this case are interested in the minerals of the mine, and they are, therefore, not liable under section 13 to fence the shaft.

KENNEDY, J.— I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that when you consider this question it is impossible to say that the public authority in whom, under section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the well becomes vested, and to whom control of the well passes, are the owners of the mine within section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Robbins, Billings, & Co., for Paige & Grylls, Redruth.

Solicitors for the defendants, Coode, Kingdon, & Cotton, for Walters, Camborne.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Kennedy, JJ.) Dec 11.

COMMISSIONERS OF POLICE v. ROBERTS. (a.)

Licensing law—Keeping open during prohibited hours—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.

In order to constitute the offence of keeping open licensed premises under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, it is necessary that the premises should be capable of being entered from outside, or that liquor could be supplied to persons outside.

Case stated.

Information against the respondent Roberts for unlawfully keeping open his premises after licensing hours.

The following facts were proved or admitted at the hearing:

The respondent, the licensee of the "Three Rabbits" public-house, Romford-park, Manor Park, was granted an occasional licence pursuant to section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, exempting him from the provisions of that Act relating to the closing of premises. The ordinary time for the closing of premises under the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1874, was from 11 p.m. on the 16th of April to 6 a.m. on the 17th of April.

The exemption of the occasional licence extended the time during which the respondent was entitled to keep open his premises from 11 p.m. on the 16th of April to 12.30 a.m. on the 17th of April.

At 12.30 a.m. on the 17th of April a police sergeant was on duty outside the premises. The outer doors of the house were then closed. The police sergeant drew the attention of the respondent's manager to the time. Singing was going on inside the premises, when the respondent came out and said to the sergeant: "I am very sorry they have stopped so late." The sergeant answered: "I shall report the matter." The respondent replied: "Do as you like; you have your duty to do. I thought that the licence was till 1 a.m instead of 12.30." Between 12.40 and 12.45 a.m. thirty-eight persons came out of the private door of the premises. The respondent was not called to give evidence, nor was any evidence adduced on his behalf. The doors of the premises were closed at 12.30 a.m. There was no evidence that any persons were served with intoxicating liquors after 12.30 a.m. It was contended upon the above facts that there was no evidence upon which the respondent could be convicted, and Jeffrey v. Weaver, 47 W. R. 638, [1899] 2 Q. B. 449, was cited in support of this contention.

Upon the facts, and in view of the statement of the respondent that he thought that the extension of his licence was till 1 a.m., the justices were of opinion that the closing of the doors at 12.30 a.m. was not with the intention of ceasing to supply intoxicating liquors to the persons already in the house; they found as a fact that the house was kept open for the sale of intoxicating liquors in the sense that it was intended by the respondent that intoxicating liquors should be sold to the persons already therein; but in view of the fact that the doors were physically closed and that no person in fact entered after 12.30 a.m., they deemed themselves bound by Jeffrey v. Weaver, and dismissed the information.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above facts and findings the justices came to a correct determination in point of law.

Danckwerts, K.C. (A. Gill with him).—The justices were mistaken in their view of the case. The authorities show that the mere physical closing of the doors is not the proper test, but whether there was an intention to supply intoxicating liquors.

He cited Tassell v. Ovenden, 25 W. R. 692, 2 Q. B. D. 383; Finch v. Blundell, 26 J. P. 71; Tennant v. Cumberland, 7 W. R. 161, 1 E. & E. 401; Jeffrey v. Weaver.

R. D. Muir, for the respondent, was not called upon.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I think it is too late, having regard to the authorities, to put the construction contended for by Mr. Danckwerts on the words "opening or keeping open for sale." Section 9 specifies three offences which may be committed during prohibited hours: (1) selling or exposing for sale in the premises; (2) opening or keeping open the premises for sale; (3) allowing intoxicating liquors to be consumed in the premises although purchased before closing time.

I express no opinion whatsoever as to what would have happened if the respondent had been charged under the first or third of these heads. A series of decisions, of which Jeffrey v. Weaver is only one, have settled that in order to constitute an offence under the second branch of section 9 there must be a keeping open of the premises in the sense that people can get in from outside. It was not intended by the Legislature that a prosecution should take place under that branch of the section merely because it may be thought the publican would have supplied liquor if he had been asked for it.

LAWRANCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The justices have not found that any offence was committed, and we cannot arrive at a different conclusion.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. Having regard to the offences created by the section, I think it would be wrong to construe the words "keeping open for sale" in any other than their natural sense. And all the authorities to which we have been referred support that conclusion. There may be a difficulty in proving an offence under the other branches of section 9, but that is not an adequate reason for construing this clause in a non-natural way.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellant, Wontner & Sons.

Solicitor for respondent, F. A. S Stern.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 25.

NEW BALKIS EERSTELING (LIMITED) v. RANDT GOLD MINING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Shares—Call for amount remaining unpaid—Forfeiture—Re-sale by company—Certificate stating that purchaser is discharged from prior calls—Subsequent call—Liability for future calls—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Table A, art. 22.

A limited company, as authorized by its articles of association, declared forfeited a number of partly paid-up shares for non-payment of calls and resold them to the appellants upon terms embodied in the certificate which followed the terms of article 22 of Table A, Schedule I., of the Companies Act, 1862. This provided that the purchasers of the shares should be held discharged from all calls then due. A new call was subsequently made upon the appellants in respect of these shares to the extent of the amount still outstanding and unpaid.

Held, that the appellants were liable, since, as the certificate stated, they were holders of shares not paid up in full.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 391, [1903] 1 K. B. 461) affirmed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Earl of Halsbury, L.C., Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Jeune, P.) (51 W. R. 391, [1903] 1 K. B. 461), which affirmed the decision of Bucknill, J.

The respondent company was incorporated as a limited company by shares, with a nominal capital of £80,000 in 80,000 shares of £1 each, which were subsequently subdivided into 320,000 shares of 5s. each.

The articles of association of the respondent company gave power to the directors to make calls, and in default of payment to declare the shares forfeited, and provided that any shares so forfeited should be deemed to be the property of the company, and the directors might sell, re-allot, or otherwise dispose of the same in such manner as they thought fit.

The articles were not expressed to exclude or modify the regulations in Table A. No. 22 of these regulations runs thus: "A statutory declaration in writing that the call in respect of a share was made and notice thereof given, and that default in payment of the call was made, and that the forfeiture of the share was made by a resolution of the directors to that effect, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated as against all persons entitled to such share, and such declaration and the receipt of the company for the price of such share shall constitute a good title to such share, and a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to a purchaser, and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such share, discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase, and he shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase-money, nor shall his title to such share be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale."

A number of the shares in the respondent company had been forfeited, among them were 40,000 shares held by the African Gold Properties (Limited), which the appellants purchased from the respondent company for £150. The terms of the sale were contained in the certificates which were issued by the respondent company to the appellants.

The certificate relating to the 40,000 shares was as follows: "This is to certify that the New Balkis Eersteling (Limited), of Winchester House, Old Broad-street, London, E.C., is the registered holder of 40,000 shares of 5s. each . . . in the above-named company, upon which the sum of 3s. 4d. per share has been paid. The remaining 1s. 8d. per share has been called up, and is payable by the African Gold Properties (Limited), who were the holders of the said shares prior to the same being forfeited, and the said New Balkis Eersteling (Limited) is to be deemed to be the holder of the said shares, discharged from all calls due prior to the date hereof." It was agreed before the Court of Appeal that the form of certificate was in fact copied from the wording of article 22 of Table A set out above. The African Gold Properties had paid sums amounting to between 3¾d. and 4d. per share on the 40,000, and there was not more than 3s. 8d. paid on those shares, and there was accordingly upwards of 1s. 3d. remaining unpaid on the shares.

In December, 1900, a call of 1s. 3d. per share was made on all the shares held by the appellants, who refused to pay, and the present action was commenced.

Bucknill, J., gave judgment for the respondent company, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

Haldane, K.C., and C. C. Scott (A. T. Lawrence, K.C., with them), for the appellants.—This was a sale of shares, and the decisions of Ooregum Gold Mining Co. v. Roper, 41 W. R. 90, [1892] A. C. 125, and Welton v. Saffery, 45 W. R. 508, [1897] A. C. 299, do not apply. The shares, being forfeited, became the property of the respondents, who sold them freed from all liability for calls, and we are protected by the language of the certificate. The company had exhausted their power of making calls, and therefore could not make a fresh call.

Sir R. T. Reid, K.C., and Clauson, for the respondents, were not heard.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—This case has been presented to your lordships on the part of the appellants with great ability, but, speaking for myself, I rather doubt whether there is any room for argument.

The facts are quite clear. There was a company called the African Gold Properties (Limited), who were holders of shares in the Randt Co. They had 40,000 shares, upon which calls to the amount of 3s. 4d. per share were made and paid. Then there was a call to the amount of 1s. 8d. which was not paid, and the shares were forfeited. They were disposed of to the present appellants, and a certificate of proprietorship was granted to them, which is to be found in the appendix.

It seems to me that the whole question depends upon the true construction of that certificate, bearing in mind, of course, that the certificate derived its efficacy from the general principles applicable to such a case as this, and the provisions of the enactment, especially in Table A of the Companies Act of 1862. The general principle in such a case is, I think, that every member of a company limited by shares is liable in respect of all moneys payable upon his shares to pay every call that is duly made upon him. It is contended by the appellants that the company had no power to make this call.

Now, the certificate is in these terms: "This is to certify that the New Balkis Eersteling (Limited) is the holder of forty thousand shares of five shillings each" (then it sets out their numbers) "upon which the sum of three shillings and fourpence per share has been paid." That, of course, means that 1s. 8d. per share has not been paid. Now, the provisions of Table A require that in the case of forfeiture "a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to a purchaser," and according to the provisions of the Act the certificate is to specify the shares held by him and the amount paid up on them, and the amount of liability upon those shares. Therefore, so far, the certificate in this case is entirely in accordance with the requirements of Table A; it leaves the appellants liable, on the face of the certificate, for the 1s. 8d. which is unpaid. The contest really has arisen upon the latter part of the certificate, which is in these terms: "The remaining one shilling and eightpence per share has been called up, and is payable by the African Gold Properties (Limited), who were the holders of the said share prior to the same being forfeited." That is a statement of fact which is literally and accurately true. Then it goes on to say: "And the said New Balkis Eersteling (Limited) is to be deemed to be the holder of the said shares discharged from all calls due prior to the date hereof." That follows the language of article 22 in Table A, which says that "A certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to a purchaser, and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such shares discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase."

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It seems to me that that was a very reasonable provision to make, because, if he had not been discharged from those calls, questions might have arisen as to whether he was or was not liable to pay interest upon those shares in respect of the call which had been made. The intention seems to me to be that he is to get a certificate of proprietorship like everybody else, specifying what had been paid on his shares, and leaving him liable, in respect of the balance, to any call which the company may properly make. As regards this call, there is no objection taken to it for want of formality or regularity, or anything of that kind. It seems to me that it is a call that has been duly made, and which the appellant is liable to pay; and therefore I move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord DAVEY.—I confess that in the course of Mr. Haldane's argument I had some doubt whether the order which is appealed from should be supported or not, but reflection has satisfied me that the decision of Bucknill, J., affirmed by the Court of Appeal, is correct. It appears to me that the certificate in question follows the terms of article 22 of Table A in the Companies Act. I will remark that if it is in accordance with article 22 no question of ultra vires can arise, because it would be ridiculous to say that that which is prescribed by an Act of Parliament, agreeing with other articles of a company formed under that Act, could be ultra vires. The question really, as it appears to me, turns upon the construction of a few words in article 22—namely, what is meant by saying that the purchaser of a forfeited share from the company is to be deemed to be the holder of such share, discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase? Does that mean that he is to be discharged from the liability to pay the amount of calls already due, or does it really mean that that demand which has been made is no longer to affect the title to his share? The words rather favour the first construction, because they are "discharged from all calls due." Now what is due is the amount of the previous call—not the demand itself; the demand itself is not due, but the amount of the previous call is. But if I look at the whole article and the context in which it is found, and also at the nature of the transaction, I think the meaning must be that the holder of the share as such is to be discharged from any liability under the previous demand. The reason why I say so is this: In the first place, the purport of article 22, and the effect of it, and, as you see if you read the whole of it, the intention, is to give the holder of the purchased share a good title—that is to say, a clean title to the share which he purchases, unaffected by the proceedings which had previously taken place, arising out of the non-payment of the previous demand. He is to have a clean title, unaffected by the fact of the previous call having been made, or, in other words, I think the effect is that, so far as the purchaser and any holder from him of that share are concerned, they are to be in the same position as if that prior call had never been made.

But that is a mere question of quieting and perfecting the purchaser's title, and it does not appear to me to affect the question of what it is that he purchases. Now what is it that he purchases? Upon this certificate there can be no doubt what it is that he purchases—namely, he purchases a 5s. share on which 3s. 4d. only has been paid up; and therefore the holder of that share under the Act of Parliament and the previous clauses (clauses 4 and 6, I think, are the clauses) in Table A will be liable to pay the extra 1s. 8d. Whether the company could make such a contract to relieve him from the payments of that 1s. 8d. is, I think, hardly doubtful. They could not do so unless they are expressly authorized. Now there is nothing in article 22, as I read it, which authorizes the company to relieve him from the payment of that 1s. 8d. Therefore the result is this—that the purchaser purchases the share talis qualis—that is to say, a share upon which 3s. 4d. only has been paid up. He is relieved from any liability under the previous demand or call which has been made by the company and from any consequences of not complying with that call, but the holder of it is subject to any call which the company may properly make. He holds his share in the same position, in all respects, as if those previous calls had never been made by the company. And with this consequence, that the company quoad these particular shares (I am speaking only of the forfeited shares which are the subject of the purchase) is at liberty to make another call, calling up the money over again. Therefore I think that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—When I first read the papers in this case I confess I shared the doubt to which my noble and learned friend Lord Davey has referred as having been entertained by him; but as the case proceeded it seemed to me that the result which has now been stated by my noble and learned friend was perfectly accurate.

The question is really contained in the last words which my noble friend has just uttered. It was contended at the bar, as I understand, that the company had no power to make a second call on the shares which had been forfeited. It seems to me that it is in that statement that the fallacy lies. I can see no reason why, when the shares have been forfeited and no call has been received on them, the power of the company should be taken away, and that it should be prevented from obtaining the amount that may be necessary to put it in funds for carrying on the business of the company by making a second call. The non-payment of a call cannot be equivalent to the receipt of it in any shape or form. That being so, there is nothing injurious to the public interest, or contrary to equities existing between the parties, that this call should be made and enforced against the present appellants.

Lord ROBERTSON.—I entirely agree.

Lord LINDLEY.—I am of the same opinion. I am not surprised at this certificate being construed in different ways by different people; but in order to understand it one must understand the subject-matter to which it relates. It is said that a forfeited share is like a table or a chair or any other property which the company has at its disposal. It is nothing of the sort. A forfeited share which is either sold or re-issued or parted with, with a view of future use, is a share in the company—which involves a great deal.

But the short answer to the appellants' case appears to me to be this: Nobody who knows anything at all about companies and shares and the forms of documents which are in use in business would dream of taking this certificate as a certificate for a fully paid-up share. It is nothing of the sort; it tells you it is nothing of the sort; it tells you how much is paid; it tells you what is not paid; and then it goes on to say that the person who takes this share is to be discharged from liability for all calls—which means that there is to be no liability on this share; he is not to be liable for the 10 per cent.; that call, so far as he is concerned, does not affect him; but it tells him, in language which I do not say is so plain that it cannot be misunderstood, because evidently it has been misunderstood, that he has become the holder of a share not paid up in full. Now what is the liability of the man who takes that? It is to pay calls as and when they are made.

Then it is said "You cannot make two calls." If you look at article 4 you will see that the appellants are asking the House to put a construction upon it which has never been put on it yet, so far as I know, and which would not work in practice at all. What would be the result if, under a certificate of this kind or proceeding of this sort, the company were endeavouring to raise more than 5s. per share I do not know; but that point has not arisen. I can conceive that there might be difficulties then; but, as I understand it, they have given credit to these gentlemen for the money they have actually got from the previous call, and therefore this point does not arise. They are not attempting by this machinery to raise more money per share than what they were by the Act authorized to raise.

I have no doubt myself that the decision is quite right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Dale, Newman, & Hood.

Solicitors for the respondents, Sanderson, Adkin, Lee, & Eddis.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — June 15.

SELLAR v. CHARLES BRIGHT & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice — Charging order — Debentures — "Stock or shares"—Ord. 46, r. 1—Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 14.

The court has no power, under section 14 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to make an order charging debentures in a company with the payment of a judgment debt.

Appeal from an order of Phillimore, J., in chambers.

The plaintiff recovered judgment in the High Court against the defendants for £2,537 10s. 2d., and, the judgment remaining unsatisfied, he obtained from Phillimore, J., in chambers, an order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, charging the defendants' interest in certain shares and debentures in a limited company standing in the name of one Charles Hudson Bennett on behalf of the defendants with the payment of above-mentioned amount due on the judgment. The defendants appealed from that part of the order which gave a charge on the debentures. By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, "if any person against whom any judgment shall have been entered up in any of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster shall have any Government stock, funds, or annuities, or any stock or shares of or in any public company in England (whether incorporated or not) standing in his name in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him, it shall be lawful for a judge of one of the superior courts, on the application of any judgment creditor, to order that such stock, funds, annuities, or shares, or such of them or such part thereof respectively as he shall think fit, shall stand charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment shall have been so recovered and interest thereon. . . ."

C. A. Bennett, for the defendants.—There is no power to make a charging order on debentures in a company. By ord. 46, r. 1, "an order charging stock or shares may be made by any Divisional Court or by any judge, and the proceedings for obtaining such order shall be such as are directed, and the effect shall be such as is provided by the Acts 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14 and 15, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1." Section 14 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which is the material section, gives power to charge "any stock or shares of or in any public company in England (whether incorporated or not)." The words "stock or shares" do not include debentures in a company. In the first place, the word "stock" does not include debenture stock. In section 23 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118), the distinction between debenture stock and "shares or stock" is recognized. A fortiori debentures are not included in those words. [He also referred to Palmer's Company Precedents, vol. 3, 9th ed., p. 5.] Nor do "shares" include debentures. Debentures are an acknowledgment of a debt with or without the creation of a charge. A debenture-holder is a creditor of the company; in no sense is he a shareholder in the company. A shareholder has a voice in the control and management of the company; a debenture-holder has not. In In re Bodman, 40 W. R. 60, [1891] 3 Ch. 135, Chitty, J., said that there was a material difference between debenture stock and proprietary stock in a company. The holder of debenture stock is a creditor of the company with a security on the assets of the company. The holder of proprietary stock is a member of the company and has the right of participating in the dividends or net profits of the company, whereas the holder of debenture stock is not a member of the company, and receives only a fixed rate of interest whatever the net profits may have been. It was accordingly held in that case that a bequest of all a testator's shares in a public company did not carry debenture stock. The charging order is therefore wrong so far as it purports to charge the debentures.

Alan Macpherson, for the plaintiff.—The word "stock" is wide enough to include debentures, and as wide a meaning as possible ought to be given to that word. The object of the Legislature is to enable a judgment creditor to obtain a security over property which cannot be taken in execution in the ordinary way, and this object will be carried out by giving a wide meaning to the words "stock or shares."

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COLLINS, M.R. — It seems to me to be quite clear, for the reasons given by the learned counsel for the appellants, that the order, so far as it purported to create a charge on the debentures, is wrong and cannot stand. That part of the order, therefore, charging the debentures must be discharged.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., agreed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, W. J. Hunter.

Solicitors for the defendants, Bennett & Chance.

From K. B. Div.
(Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) April 22.

WILLIAMS v. NORTH'S NAVIGATION COLLIERIES (1889) (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Wages—Deductions—Set-off—Sum payable under magistrates' order—Truck Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37), s. 3.

A workman having absented himself from work in breach of his contract of employment, his employers took proceedings against him under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and obtained an order against him for payment of a sum of money by instalments payable on days on which his wages became due. On the day on which the first instalment became payable, the employers when paying him his wages deducted therefrom the amount of the instalment.

Held, that such deduction was not an offence against section 3 of the Truck Act, 1831.

Appeal by the defendants from an order of Bucknill, J., at chambers.

The plaintiffs were six workmen who were in the employment of the defendant colliery company.

On the 22nd of December, 1903, the plaintiffs, in breach of their contract of employment, absented themselves from work without leave and without having given notice. The defendants thereupon proceeded against them in a court of summary jurisdiction under section 4 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, claiming damages from them for this breach of their contract of employment. On the 16th of January, 1904, the court of summary jurisdiction made an order on each of the plaintiffs to pay to the defendants 30s. as damages for the breach of contract, the money to be payable in three fortnightly instalments of 10s. each, the first instalment being made payable on Saturday, the 30th of January, and the other two instalments on Saturday, the 13th of February, and Saturday, the 27th of February. These respective dates were the fortnightly colliery pay days. In paying the plaintiffs their wages on the 30th of January the defendants deducted therefrom the sum of 10s. in each case.

On the 1st of February the plaintiffs commenced this action to recover the sums of 10s. so deducted from their wages, for a declaration that such deductions were illegal under the Truck Act, 1831, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from making any further deductions from the wages which might thereafter become due.

The plaintiffs applied at chambers for an injunction to restrain the defendants from making any similar deductions until the trial of the action. Bucknill, J., granted an interim injunction.

The defendants appealed, and it was agreed to treat the application as the trial of the action, the plaintiffs withdrawing their claims to any other relief than a declaration that the deductions were illegal as being contrary to the Truck Act.

J. E. Bankes, K.C., and Montague Lush, K.C. (A. J. Ashton with them), for the defendants.—The Truck Act, 1831, does not prohibit the making of these deductions. The sole object of that Act is to prohibit the payment of wages otherwise than in coin. Section 3, on which the plaintiffs rely, deals with the mode of payment, not with the calculation of the amount of wages due: Chawner v. Cummings, 8 Q. B. 311; Archer v. James, 10 W. R. 489, 2 B. & S. 61. Any question as to the right of making a deduction is a question as to the mode of calculating the amount of wages. The defendants have paid all the wages that are due to them They have a clear defence of set-off to the plaintiffs' claims. But in any case mere non-payment of wages is not an offence against the Truck Act, 1831. It was held in Willis v. Thorpe, 23 W. R. 730, L. R. 10 Q. B 383, that a deduction from wages of a fine for staying away from work without permission was not an offence against section 3 of the Hosiery Manufacture (Wages) Act, 1874. In Redgrave v. Kelly, 37 W. R. 543, and Beetham v. Crewdson, 55 J. P. 55, it was held that a deduction of a fine from wages was not a violation of the the Truck Acts, 1831 and 1887. The Truck Act, 1896, prohibits deductions from wages in respect, either of fines, or damaged goods, or the use of materials, except under certain specified conditions. The provisions of this Act do not touch the case of a deduction in respect of an admitted set-off.

They also referred to Smith v. Walton, 3 C. P. D. 109, 26 W. R. Dig. 140; Hewlett v. Allen & Sons, 41 W. R. 197, [1892] 2 Q. B. 662, 42 W. R. 670, [1894] A. C. 383; and Owner v. Hooper, 19 Times L. R. 601.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., S. T. Evans, K.C., and Bailhache (John Sankey with them), for the plaintiffs.—The Truck Act, 1831, prohibits an employer from deducting from the wages of a workman a sum due to himself from the workman, without the consent of the workman. The employer cannot, for the purpose of compliance with the statute, be both payer and payee; to hold otherwise would be to make the statute idle: see per Bowen, L.J., in Hewlett v. Allen & Sons. That case shows that the non-payment of wages earned and payable is a breach of section 3. This is not inconsistent with Redgrave v. Kelly, which merely decided that a case of non-payment is not covered by section 9. The statutory obligation is to pay the entire amount of the wages earned by or payable to the workman, and to pay it in coin. It may be that a deduction authorized by the workman is not thereby prohibited, for the amount represented by such deduction, though part of the wages earned by him, may be said to be not payable to him. It was held, under the Acts of 1831 and 1887 that such deductions might legally be made: Lamb v. Great Northern Railway Co., 39 W. R. 475, [1891] 2 Q. B. 281. But no deduction could be made which was not authorized by the workman: Smith v. Walton; Ex parte Cooper, In re Morris, 26 Ch. D. 693, 33 W. R. Dig. 23. The Act of 1896 now prescribes certain conditions with respect to deductions which may be made with the consent of the workman. But a deduction to which the workman has not assented is still invalid and illegal. The non-payment in full of these wages at the time of payment was a breach of statutory duty, and none the less so because the employers might have a good right of set-off in proceedings subsequently taken against them by the workmen to recover their wages.

Cur. adv. vult.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

April 22.—COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from an order made by Bucknill, J., at chambers, whereby he granted an interim injunction in an action brought by a number of workmen against their employers for non-payment in full of certain wages alleged to be due to them. The plaintiffs by the indorsement on their writ sought to recover the amount of certain deductions which were made on the payment of those wages, and they claimed a declaration that such deductions were illegal, and an injunction to restrain the defendants from making any further deductions of the same kind. The case first came before us as an interlocutory matter, when only two members of the court were sitting. We then came to the conclusion that the matter could not be conveniently dealt with in that way. There is one way, it is true, in which we might have dealt with it—viz., by discharging the injunction and leaving the real question in the case to be determined at the hearing. Both parties, however, were desirous that this court should deal with the merits of the case as a whole, and it was accordingly arranged to treat the case as a final appeal and to let it come on when the full court was sitting. To bring about that result the plaintiffs have been obliged to throw over the greater part of their suggested cause of action and to confine themselves to the question on which both parties desire to have a decision—viz, whether a set-off against wages insisted on by an employer at the time of the payment of wages is a violation of the Truck Act. We felt that there would be a difficulty in making the declaration which the plaintiffs asked for, even though we should be of opinion that such a set-off was a violation of the statute, because the declaration would not be ancillary to the putting in suit of any legal right. But with a view to meet the pressure which was put on us by both sides we agreed to hear the case and determine it on its merits.

The case arises in this way. The employers had a ground of complaint against some of their workmen in respect of a violation of certain rules, which violation gave them, the employers, a remedy sounding in damages. This remedy they put in suit, as they were entitled to do, under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, before a court of summary jurisdiction. The magistrates imposed on each of the workmen a fine payable by instalments, and by their order they appointed as the dates for payment, days which coincided with the usual days for the payment of the men's wages. When the wages came to be paid, the employers set off the sum of 10s., which by the exigency of the judgment of the magistrates was payable to them by each of the workmen on that day, against the sum which was payable by them as wages to each of the workmen. It is alleged that this is a violation of the Truck Act, 1831. And it is alleged that this is so, notwithstanding this fact, that by the terms of the Truck Act and under its authority the sum so set off could have been recovered by the employers from the workmen under a right of set-off in proceedings instituted by the workmen to recover wages due to them. Although the Legislature has intervened to allow this right of set-off, still it is alleged that an offence is committed if an employer having this legal right of set-off avails himself of it at the time when he pays his men their wages, though he could, by authority of the statute, avail himself of it next day in proceedings by the workmen to recover their wages. Now, nothing is to be treated as an offence against the Truck Act unless it is made so clearly. The question therefore is, Has the Truck Act constituted it an offence for an employer to withhold from a workman payment of his wages to the extent to which he, the employer, has a legal right of set-off against the workman—e.g., to the extent of the amount of a judgment obtained by him against the workman?

The object of the Truck Act, 1831, as has been pointed out in many cases, is to be ascertained from its title and its preamble. It is thus intituled: "An Act to prohibit the payment of wages in goods or otherwise than in the current coin of the realm." The preamble is: "Whereas it is necessary to prohibit the payment of wages in goods or otherwise than in the current coin of the realm." The statute proceeds to provide for what it thus describes as its main end and object. Section 1 provides that in all contracts for the hiring of any artificer wages shall be made payable in the current coin of the realm and not otherwise. That clearly gives effect to the main object—viz., the prohibition mentioned in the preamble. Then section 2 provides that contracts must not contain any stipulations as to the manner in which wages shall be expended. That is another provision giving effect to the same main end. Then comes section 3, the section with which we have to deal in this case. It provides as follows: "The entire amount of the wages earned by or payable to any artificer, in respect of any labour by him done in any such trade, shall be actually paid to such artificer in the current coin of this realm, and not otherwise; and every payment made to any such artificer by his employer of or in respect of any such wages, by the delivery to him of goods or otherwise than in the current coin aforesaid, except as hereinafter mentioned, shall be and is hereby declared illegal, null, and void." The plaintiffs seek to get out of this section something which is not to be found in it—viz., an absolute obligation on the employer, whether he has a right of set-off or not, to pay the workman the whole amount of the nominal sum which but for any such right of set-off would be payable as wages. It is said that a deduction in respect of a set-off is contrary to this provision of the Act. It seems to me that these words merely constitute a provision which is calculated to help in carrying out the central purpose of the Act—viz., that wages are not to be paid otherwise than in money. They deal with the mode of payment, not with the amount to be paid. The section speaks of the wages "earned by or payable to" the workman. The words "payable to" ought not to be rejected. The first thing is to ascertain the sum to be paid. Then comes the mandate of the statute, which says that the sum must be paid in coin and not otherwise. But the matter does not stand there. The Act proceeds, by section 4, to provide that wages not paid in coin may be sued for and recovered by the workman; it enacts that the right arising under and given by the Act may be enforced in a civil court. Then comes section 5, which deals with the question of set off. It says that in any proceeding for the recovery of money due to a workman as wages the employer shall not be allowed to make any set off by reason or in respect of any goods, wares, or merchandize had or received by the workman as or on account of his wages. That is another provision ancillary to the main purpose of the Act and emphasizing the intention of the Legislature not to interfere with the law except so far as is necessary for carrying out the central scheme of the Act—viz., the payment of wages in money and not in goods. In my opinion we have here a statutory sanction of all sets-off which are not struck at by the Act. Then, section 6 says that an employer shall not be entitled to maintain any action in respect of goods supplied to a workman as or on account of wages. The only other section I need refer to is section 9, which provides that any employer who shall enter into any contract or make any payment by the Act declared illegal shall be liable to penalties. It seems to me that the Legislature, in considering what they should constitute as an offence under the Act to be visited with penalties, selected this as the offence, the entering into any such illegal contract or the making of any such illegal payment. They deliberately refrained from constituting the non-payment of wages or the making of a set-off an offence under the Act. They made it an offence to pay wages otherwise than in current coin. The Truck Act of 1831 has been followed by other Acts dealing with new points which have arisen. But I think that this particular matter has not been enlarged on by any subsequent Act. The question has been the subject-matter of decisions from time to time. The leading case is Chawner v. Cummings. There Lord Denman said: "In order to form a correct judgment upon the nature of this agreement and of these deductions, it is necessary to attend to the provisions of the Act with some particularity. It was directed, as is well known, against what has been called generally the truck system, or, as the title of the Act is, against the payment of wages in certain trades in goods or otherwise than in the current coin of the realm. The prohibition extended to bank notes, because section 8 expressly legalizes payment by them under certain circumstances. The same purpose is declared in the preamble, and in the same terms, and is pursued in the earlier sections of the Act. Section 1 declares all contracts illegal where the wages are made payable in any other manner than in the current coin. Section 2 avoids all contracts where there is any provision as to the place or manner in which the wages, or any part, are to be expended. Section 3 makes all payments, except as aforesaid, illegal and void; and section 4 contains the proviso already referred to, that the artificer may recover his wages as if such prohibited payments had not been made; and section 5, also before noticed, takes away the right of set-off in such cases. Now, it is to be observed that payment otherwise than in money is alone prohibited. Deductions or charges are nowhere mentioned or alluded to before section 23, hereafter to be considered. Then are these deductions in the nature of payment at all? It seems to us to be the mode or calculating the amount of wages, and nothing more." The principle laid down in that case has been followed in subsequent cases, and has never been questioned. A legal set-off is merely a mode of calculating the amount of wages due, and the payment of the amount so found due is no violation of the Act. The fact of the passing of the Hosiery Manufacture (Wages) Act, 1874, shows that the Truck Act, 1831, did not make it an offence to adjust the amount of wages payable by introducing a legal set-off. In the case of Hewlett v. Allen & Sons Bowen, L.J., made observations which have been pressed as opposing the view which I am now taking. It is contended that those observations support the proposition that there is an obligation on the employer to pay the whole amount of the wages, whether there is a set-off or not. But when they are read in their context, I think they do not support the contention that it is a breach of statutory obligation to make a deduction in respect of an admitted set-off. The House of Lords, while affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, distinctly negatived the notion that any offence had been committed at all in that case, and they did not give any countenance to the dicta which are the basis of the plaintiffs' contention in this case. I therefore think that the judgment of Bowen, L.J., is not an authority in favour of the plaintiffs. In my opinion it cannot be said that any violation of the statute or any offence has been committed by giving effect to a legal right of set-off such as that which has been sanctioned in this case by the court of summary jurisdiction. Therefore, apart from the formal difficulty as to the making in this case of the declaration which the plaintiffs asked for, I do not think that any such declaration ought to be made.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: So far as concerns the relief actually sought in this action the plaintiffs do not dispute that the defendants are entitled to the set-off claimed by them. And in my opinion this is not a case which would justify an injunction being granted as sought by the plaintiffs. Nor is the court bound to make any declaration as claimed by the plaintiffs. But both parties have asked us to express our views on a question that has been argued, and I proceed therefore to give my opinion so far as it appears to me within my province to do so in the present action. I can give that opinion and my reasons for it very briefly. In my opinion the Act of 1831 did not constitute as a punishable offence the mere non-payment of part of a workman's wages, where the master, who is (apart from any special provisions of the Act) entitled to a set off in respect of an ordinary debt due to him from the man equal to the amount of wages retained, claims a set-off and a right of retainer in respect of that debt, the debt not being one in respect of goods, wares, or merchandize, a set-off of which is prohibited by section 5 of the Act. Nor, indeed, can I see that the Act makes a punishable offence any mere non-payment of a man's wages when they fall due, merely because the master had not the means of paying or neglected to pay the same exactly when they became payable. Of course I am only dealing with the Act of 1831, which governs the present case, and am not considering special legislation dealing with a special trade, like the Hosiery Manufacture (Wages) Act, 1874, the provisions of which are significant when compared with the provision of the Act of 1831. I come to the conclusion I have indicated with regard to the Act of 1831 by a consideration of its clauses taken as a whole, and in particular of sections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 9, which, in my opinion, ought to be considered together. It appears to me that section 9 was intended to specify what should be deemed punishable offences under the Act, and that apart from those offences, if a workman did not obtain payment of his wages, the only remedy contemplated by the Act as available to the man and to enable him to obtain payment is by civil action or proceedings. And even if this were not so, yet so far as concerns a case where a master does not pay part of the wages, because he has a set off not invalidated under section 5, it appears to me, having regard to the provisions of that section, it is not right to hold that the Act, which contemplated an action, suit, or other proceeding being taken by the man for his wages, and only prohibited a special set-off being set up against him by the master, could have contemplated that it would be a statutory offence for the master to claim at the time when the wages became payable a set-off, which is not prohibited, and which he could effectually set up as against any subsequent civil proceedings by the man to enforce payment. It appears to me that under this Act if the master sets up, as he may without committing any punishable offence, when the wages become payable, a right to set-off such a debt as we are considering in the present case, then the man can do nothing except commence a civil action or other civil proceedings in which the set-off will be a good defence. It follows that in the present case no declaration can be made in favour of the views of the plaintiffs and that the appeal should be allowed. After what the Master of the Rolls has said I do not think it necessary or useful to refer to the various cases cited before us.

MATHEW, L.J., read the following judgment: The question which we have to determine under the arrangement come to between counsel, to which the Master of the Rolls has referred, is whether the workmen have an absolute right under the Act of 1831 to be paid their wages in cash, or whether the employers may deduct the amount of an admitted set-off and hand the workman the balance. It was contended for the employers that the Truck Act did not apply. The statute, it was said, did not deal with non-payment. The object of the Legislature was not to enforce payment, but to prohibit and to punish payment not in money but in goods. It was argued for the workman that the Act went much further and was intended to make a failure to pay in current coin an offence for which proceedings of a criminal character might be instituted. It was argued that to dispose of the case the true construction of section 3 of the Act of 1831 had to be ascertained, and the counsel on each side relied with equal confidence, though not with equal success, upon its provisions. I am of opinion that the view of the meaning of the section indicated in previous decisions is the correct one—viz., that the statute does not apply to cases of non-payment. The workman who does not receive all that he has earned has the right to enforce payment in the ordinary way, and is not intended to have the right to prosecute his employers for breach of contract. Any other construction would lead to the unreasonable result that the employers of the workmen specified in the Act would be subject to a serious and vexatious liability not imposed on other employers. The same considerations apply to the question of set-off. There would seem to be no reason why the Legislature should impose on one class of employers a disability to which other employers are not exposed. This action was brought by the workmen to recover the balance alleged to be due to them, and they applied for an injunction to restrain the employers from making any further deduction. The answer of the defendants was that they had a set-off in respect of the wages which were unpaid. This would seem to be an adequate reason for refusing the injunction. But it was argued for the workmen that, although it could not be disputed that there was a set-off, still it was not available at the time when wages became due. The duty of the employers, it was urged, was to hand over the whole amount and to take steps to enforce their set-off at some future time. In other words, that the statute postponed the employers' right to pay themselves by deducting the amount admitted to be due from the workman. I am unable to adopt this reasoning, and I find nothing in the Act of 1831 or the later statutes to justify this contention. I agree that the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Smith, Rundell, & Dods, for Walter Morgan, Bruce, & Nicholas, Pontypridd.

Solicitors for the defendants, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for C. & W. Kenshole, Aberdare.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Feb. 10, 11.

In re DALLAS. (a.)

Mortgage—Equitable charge—Future property—Expectancy under will—Priority—Notice—Renunciation of sole executor—Executor mortgagor—Administrator—Property in court in lunacy.

Notice cannot be given so as to affect the priorities of incumbrances to a person who is himself the mortgagor both in the case of the incumbrance first created and of the subsequent incumbrances. The priorities of incumbrancers of future property are regulated by the order in which notices of their charges are in fact given to the legal holder of the property, after it has come into existence, and as between incumbrancers who have so given notice on the same day, in the order of the creation of their charges; the fact that the earlier incumbrancer has not been guilty of any negligence in the giving of his notice at a later date than the notice given by the later incumbrancer, is immaterial.

Whether, where the property charged is an expectancy under a will, an effective notice can be given to a sole executor who afterwards renounces probate, quære.

Decision of Buckley, J. (ante, p. 313), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Buckley, J. (reported ante, p. 313).

The question arose on a reference by the master to the judge as to the method of ascertaining the priorities of the several incumbrancers of a fund in respect of which a petition had been presented for its payment out of court.

By his will dated the 7th of July, 1893, Robert Dallas gave a legacy of £10,000 to his son Frederick, and appointed three executors, Frederick Dallas, W. Beedell, and E. F. Jenkins. E. F. Jenkins died on the 18th of January, 1898, leaving C. E. E. Jenkins his sole executor. W. Beedell died on the 21st of January, 1899. The testator's will was prepared by the firm of Brooks, Jenkins, & Co., of which E. F. Jenkins was then a member, and which subsequently consisted of S. H. Scott and A. E. Heatley.

On the 28th of June, 1898, lunacy proceedings in respect of the testator were taken, a receiver of his property was appointed, and his personal estate was paid into court in lunacy.

The testator died on the 24th of December, 1902.

In the interval between the date of the will and the death of the testator F. Dallas charged his expectant legacy for amounts in the aggregate largely exceeding the sum of £10,000.

On the 9th of January, 1903, F. Dallas renounced probate.

On the 4th of March, 1903, administration with the will annexed was granted to Mrs. Beedell, a daughter of the testator.

By an order in lunacy drawn up the 17th of March, 1903, and completed on the 27th of March, 1903, the funds in court were directed to be paid out to Mrs. Beedell.

On the 3rd or 4th of May, 1903, these funds reached her hands.

On the 24th of May, 1903, F. Dallas was adjudicated a bankrupt.

On the 28th of May, 1903, Mrs. Beedell paid the sum of £9,985, representing the legacy of £10,000, less costs, into court under the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1893.

By an order of the 4th of July, 1903, made on the above-mentioned petition, certain inquiries and an account were directed. The reference to the judge, which was made in pursuance of a direction in the order to that effect, was as to the principle to be adopted in determining the priorities of the incumbrancers having regard to the notices given.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The particulars of the incumbrances on the fund in question, and the steps the incumbrancers had taken to protect themselves by giving notice were were as follow: A charge dated the 30th of March, 1896, consolidating mortgages of the 13th of January, 1894, and a charge of the 18th of May, 1894, created in favour of Edgar Francis Jenkins; a charge dated the 8th of January, 1897, in favour of the British Mutual Life Assurance Society; charges dated the 18th of May, 1897, and the 3rd of November, 1898, in favour of Frederick Stuart; a charge dated the 28th of April, 1898, in favour of John Edward Evans; charges dated the 15th of June, 1898, the 12th of May, 1899, the 13th of November, 1899, and the 14th of December, 1900, in favour of Stanley Herbert Scott and Arthur Edward Heatley; a charge dated the 23rd of May, 1900, in favour of the Staffordshire Financial Co. (Limited).

On the 9th of January, 1903—i.e., before the grant of the letters of administration, Emily Beedell had received from Charles Edward Elliott Jenkins (the sole executor of Edward Francis Jenkins), the British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Society, Stanley Herbert Scott, Arthur Edward Heatley, and the Staffordshire Financial Co. (Limited) notices of their claims with the dates of their respective securities, referred to in the judgment of Vaughan Williams, L.J., as the "Brooks-Jenkins incumbrances."

On the 5th of March, 1903—i.e., after the letters of administration had been granted, Emily Beedell received notices from the same parties.

On the 12th of March, 1903, Frederick Stuart, on his first hearing of the grant of administration, gave notice to Brooks, Jenkins, & Co., who were the solicitors acting for Emily Beedell, of his charges.

On the 17th of March, 1903, and on subsequent dates, Emily Beedell received notices of the incumbrances held by various other persons.

Buckley, J., held that the charges must rank according to priority of notice given to the administratrix after the grant of letters of administration.

F. Stuart appealed.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Stokes, for the appellant.—The doctrine of notice has no application to the present case. That doctrine is based on this, that priorities are affected by the giving of notice because an incumbrancer who has failed to give notice has omitted a step which he ought to have taken for his own protection, and he must bear the consequences of his negligence. In the present case the appellant gave notice to the administratrix as soon as he heard of the grant of letters of administration. It is not suggested that he could have given notice earlier, and his rights ought not to be affected by the omission to do that which he could not possibly have done. Johnstone v. Cox, 30 W. R. 114, 19 Ch. D. 17, is the only case in this court which is against the appellant's contention. In that case, at the moment when the chose in action came into existence, there was a person —i.e., Cox, to whom notice could be given to complete the title to the charge previously created upon it. In the present case, when the fund came into existence there was no one to whom notice could be given except the executor who afterwards renounced. The executor was himself the mortgagor, and therefore he had notice. An assignment operates at the moment when the fund thereby assigned comes into existence.

The following authorities were cited in the course of the argument: Ward v. Duncombe, 42 W. R. 59, [1893] A. C. 369; Tailby v. Official Receiver, 37 W.R. 513, 13 A. C. 523; Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1; Foster v. Cockerell, 3 Cl. & F. 456; Buller v. Plunkett, 9 W. R. 190, 1 J. & H. 441; Webster v. Webster, 10 W. R. 503, 31 Beav. 393; Somerset v. Cox, 12 W. R. 590, 33 Beav. 634; Earl of Suffolk v. Cox, 15 W. R. 732; Calisher v. Forbes, 20 W. R. 160, 7 Ch. App. 109; Collyer v. Isaacs, 30 W. R. 70, 19 Ch. D. 342; In re Wasdale, 47 W. R. 169, [1899] 1 Ch. 163; Brown v. Savage, 7 W. R. 571, 4 Drew. 635; Lloyd's Bank v. Pearson, [1901] 1 Ch. 865, 49 W. R. Dig. 126; and Willes v. Greenhill, 10 W. R. 33, 4 De G. F. & J. 147.

Buckmaster, K.C., and Macklin, for the Brooks-Jenkins incumbrancers, Ryland, for the Staffordshire Financial Co. (Limited), and Vaughan Williams and H. Marshall, for other incumbrancers, were not called on to argue.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I think that the decision of Buckley, J., was right and ought to be affirmed. Really with regard to very nearly all the questions which have been argued before us to-day on behalf of the appellants we are concluded by authority. I will first shortly state sufficient to show how the question arises which we have to determine in the present case. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] There could be no effective notice given by an incumbrancer so as to enable him to obtain priority until the fund came into existence, and there was some person who had control of the fund and to whom notice could be given. Therefore we begin with the proposition that there could be no effective notice given during the life of the testator. The next period with which we have to deal is the period between the death of the testator and the renunciation of probate by F. Dallas. With regard to that period we have not to decide whether there could be a good notice so as to affect the priorities given to an executor who subsequently renounces before his renunciation, because it is plain on the authorities that if the person to whom notice is given is himself the assignor, both in the case of an incumbrance first created and also in the case of a later assignment, that notice cannot be effective. The reason is that, whatever view may be taken of the principle upon which notice is allowed to affect priorities, it is common to all theories of the principle upon which these notices are effective to alter priorities, that the notice is given upon the hypothesis that the trustee or other person who legally dominates the fund will give information to the person giving the notice if there is any prior incumbrance in question. But if you have a case where there is only one trustee, and that trustee has himself made the first assignment, it is plainly idle to give him notice of a second assignment—that is, an assignment which he proposes secondly to make, because his obvious interest is to conceal the first assignment from the would-be incumbrancer, for if the latter knew of the first incumbrancer he would probably refuse to advance money on the security of the second assignment. This part of the case may be disposed of at once by referring to Browne v. Savage. That was a case in which the actual question which had to be decided was whether notice to one of several trustees, that one being the assignor, was a sufficient notice of an assignment. It was held that it was not a sufficient notice upon the ground that it was the interest of such assignor to conceal from the person giving the notice the very fact the discovery of which if it existed was the object of the notice. I thought at first that the ground of the decision was that the assignor would be likely to conceal the second incumbrance from his fellow-trustees, but on looking closer into the case I see, more particularly from p. 640 of 4 Drew., that the concealment referred to by Kindersley, V.C., was not concealment from his co-trustees, but the concealment of the fact of the earlier incumbrance from the person who was invited to make the advance on the second mortgage. That this is so is made plain by the observations of Cozens-Hardy, L.J., in Lloyd v. Pearson. That also was a case where there were several trustees who had control of a fund; but it is the principle which is dealt with by Cozens-Hardy, L.J., and I propose to refer to what he says on p. 873 of [1901] 1 Ch.: "It would be whittling away the rule, and indeed would be making it a mere trap, if it were to be held that the knowledge which an assignor-trustee has of his own incumbrance is sufficient to give the assignee priority against a subsequent incumbrancer who gives due notice to all the trustees. This, I take it, was the view of Kindersley, V.C." The result of these authorities, to my mind, is this, that inasmuch as notice to or knowledge of a sole assignor-trustee is not an effective notice to operate upon priorities, we may dismiss at once from this case all considerations of the knowledge of Frederick Dallas, the named executor who subsequently renounced probate. Even if there had been an express notice to him, it would not have been an operative notice for this purpose.

When one passes from this and looks to see when the next notice was given, it seems to me that no notice was given by any incumbrancer until after the grant of letters of administration to Mrs. Beedell. That was on the 4th of March, 1903, and notice was given to her by the Brooks-Jenkins incumbrancers on the 5th of March, 1903, and any notice which was given by Stuart was given several days subsequently to that. In that state of things, therefore, the question which which we have to answer is, Ought those of the Brooks-Jenkins incumbrances which in point of date of creation were subsequent to Stuart's incumbrance to take priority of his incumbrance? All that any of the incumbrancers have got is an equitable title, and their equities would primâ facie be enforced in order of date. But the Brooks-Jenkins incumbrancers have been the first to give notice of their incumbrances. The ground on which counsel for the appellants sought to argue that that notice ought not to give any priority was this: They said that the whole principle upon which giving notice is allowed to affect priorities was that those who had not given notice have been guilty of some neglect of duty, and that if that be so, it cannot be said here that Stuart had been guilty of any neglect of duty whatever, because he could not have given notice during the lifetime of the testator. That, so far as Frederick Dallas—the assignor and named executor—is concerned, he could not have given any effective notice to him; and that, therefore, the first time at which he could have given an effective notice was upon the grant of the letters of administration, and he could not tell when that was to take place, and could not prevent the Brooks-Jenkins incumbrancers from giving the first notice, as it was through their solicitors that application was made for the grant of the letters of administration which were granted to Mrs. Beedell. I agree so far with counsel for the appellant that there is no reason to impute any negligence to Stuart. But the answer is, that that is not the true principle to be applied. The true principle has been determined once and for all by the case of Ward v. Duncombe. It seems to me that that case decides that the principle which has been suggested by counsel for the appellant in their argument as the ground on which notice when given has been allowed to have the effect which it is allowed to have upon priorities is not the true principle. That case has been a good deal discussed in the course of the argument here, and I do not propose to go into it at any length. But if one turns to the observations of Lord Macnaghten, at p. 390 of [1893] A. C., one finds the following: "It may perhaps be doubted whether the views of Sir Thomas Plumer in Dearle v. Hall were quite correctly appreciated in Foster v. Cockerell—that was a case in the House of Lords which gives the go-by to all considerations founded upon the conduct of the parties. But however that may be, Foster v. Cockerell unquestionably lays down that the rule known as the rule in Dearle v. Hall is independent of any consideration of the conduct of the competing assignees where the assignee second in date has no notice of the earlier assignment. Priority in such a case depends simply and solely on priority of notice." I cannot imagine any words which could more clearly lay dowh the principle upon which these notices are supposed to operate. They operate independently of any consideration of conduct of the competing assignees. Priority of incumbrance depends solely and simply upon the priority of notice. It is true that subsequently Lord Macnaghten goes on to say (at p. 394 of [1893] A. C.): "I have made these observations, not for the purpose of impugning the authority of the rule in Dearle v. Hall. The rule is settled law. But it seems to me that when your lordships are asked to extend the rule to a case not already covered by authority, it is proper to inquire into the principles upon which the rule is said to be founded. For the reasons which I have already given I do not think that those principles are so clear or so convincing that the rule ought to be extended to a new case." Having said that, I think that I ought not to occupy any time by referring to the arguments or to the opinion of the law lords in the case of Foster v. Cockerell to show that Lord Macnaghten's view of what was decided in that case is perfectly accurate further than to say this: That when one looks at those arguments it is obvious that the contention of the counsel for the appellants in that case was almost identical with the contention of counsel for the appellant in this case, and that contention was really answered by the court holding that the rule known as the rule in Dearle v. Hall was a rule to the effect and based on the principle stated by Lord Macnaghten in his judgment in Ward v. Duncombe. Having said that, I have now disposed of the principal argument in this case. But there is a word or two more to be said, because counsel for the appellant were relying rather on what Lord Macnaghten said with regard to not extending the rule in Dearle v. Hall. They suggested that in the present case there was no fund and no trustee at all until after the death of the testator, and that after the fund came into existence there was no person to whom an efficient notice could be given, and they said, therefore, that it would be an extension of the rule in Dearle v. Hall if we were to allow it to apply to such a case as this. That contention is really completely answered by what are commonly known as, and what are still called for short, "the army agents' cases." It is quite plain that in those cases there was a limit during which there was no trustee to whom a notice could be effectively given, and yet the result of those cases was that a notice given when there came into existence such a person was held to be a good notice effective to alter priorities. I think that there is no other point which we have to deal with in order to dispose of this case, and I have only to say that, in my opinion, the judgment of Buckley, J., ought to be affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have very little to add. The question to be determined here is whether the rule laid down in Dearle v. Hall is applicable to the present case. The rule is stated by Lord Macnaghten in Ward v. Duncombe, [1893] A. C., at p. 384, thus: "An assignee of an equitable interest in personal estate without notice of an existing prior assignment may gain priority simply by the act of giving notice to the person who has legal dominion over the fund before notice is given by the earlier assignee." It has been contended before us that that rule ought not to be applied to a case where the earlier assignee has not been guilty of any negligence in giving notice. But what was said by Lord Macnaghten in Ward v. Duncombe, [1893] A. C., at pp. 390 and 391, cited by my lord, appears to me entirely to negative that argument. It is quite true that Lord Macnaghten there points out that there is great difficulty in stating exactly the principle upon which the rule in Dearle v. Hall was established, and at least he warns those who have to apply that rule against extending it to cases not covered by that authority. The question, then, which we have to consider in the present case is whether this case is covered by that authority. If it is, we have to apply the rule. It may be said, possibly, that there is no case reported which is in its facts entirely like the present, but in my opinion in principle it is covered by the army agents' cases, and particularly by the principle stated by Bacon, V.C., in Johnstone v. Cox, the decision in which was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. At that time, in accordance with the law that then applied to the sale of commissions in the army, the Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 86), an officer when he retired from the service was entitled to certain money usually called "purchase-money for his commission." It was paid by the Government to army agents. It was placed on deposit and could not be paid to the officer until his retirement was gazetted. In that case the incumbrancer who was first in date gave notice of his charge to the army agents after the money had been paid to them but before notice of the officer's retirement appeared in the Gazette. The second and third incumbrancers gave notice the day after the retirement was gazetted, and then the first incumbrancer in point of date gave another notice five days after the notice in the Gazette. It was held that the order of priority of the incumbrancers was, first the second, then the third, and then the first; so that the second and third incumbrancers, by giving notice after the fund had become available for payment and was in the hands of the agents as agents for the officer, before the first, gained priority over the first incumbrancer. What happened here was that Frederick Dallas executed several assignments of his expectancy. At the death of the testator he was himself sole executor of the will, and no notice could in fact be given while that state of things existed. He renounced his executorship, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to his sister. Then notice were given to her by some of the incumbrancers on the 5th of March, 1903, and on the 12th of March notice was given by Stuart, another incumbrancer. Now, the question is whether the principle of Johnstone v. Cox does not apply to the facts of this case, and it seems to me that it does. In Johnstone v. Cox the principle was applicable in this way—that although at the time when the incumbrance was created there was no person who had legal control of the fund, yet the priorities could be altered the moment when a person came into existence who had legal control of the fund and to whom effective notice could be given. Here there was no person who had control over the fund until the grant of the letters of administration, and the fact that at the time of the death of the testator there was no one who had legal dominion over the fund does not make any difference. It was said that the distinction between the case and the army agents' cases was that in those cases directly the fund came into existence there was a person to whom notice could be given, while in this case there was not, but in my opinion that is a matter of detail and does not alter the principle. Then as regards the point that Frederick Dallas was himself the executor, and the position was the same as when notice of an incumbrance has been given to a trustee who has died or retired, and ought not to be prejudiced by the fact that there is an appointment of a fresh trustee who is not aware of the notice already given and receives a fresh notice, I agree with what has been said by my lord on this point. I only say that we are not now deciding whether notice to an executor who does not act and renounces is of any value whatever. I should, personally, be very slow to adopt that proposition.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I agree with what has been held by Buckley, J., and I am so entirely satisfied with the reasons assigned by him for his decision, and also with what has been said by my brethren, that I shall not occupy more than a few minutes in giving my judgment. It is not open to us since Ward v. Duncombe to hold otherwise than that the rule in Dearle v. Hall is independent of the conduct of the incumbrancers. It is also clearly settled that the rule applies, although there was no trust fund and no trustee in existence at the time of the several assignments. The army agents' cases are only intelligible on that view. Johnstone v. Cox was a clear decision on the point. The matter was not elaborately dealt with both by Bacon, V.C., and by the Court of Appeal in that case, but it had been dealt with before in Calisher v. Forbes, and the principle was recognized by Lord Selborne in Addison v. Cox, 21 W. R. 180, L. R. 8 Ch. 76, in 1872, so that it is not open to us to reconsider it. Therefore there is only one point left. It was said that Frederick Dallas as assignor had knowledge—as, of course, he had—of his own incumbrances, and that the knowledge which he possessed of his own incumbrances, he being an executor named in the will, must be regarded as equivalent to a notice entitling the assignees to priority in order of date. I do not agree. It seems to me that the knowledge of the assignor is an entirely different thing from the knowledge obtained by notice given by the assignee to the person who has control of the fund. Under these circumstances it is not necessary, therefore, to decide whether notice to an executor who renounces and disclaims has or has not any force or validity. But, speaking for myself, I should require a great deal of argument to induce me to accede to the proposition submitted to us in the present case on that point.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, George S. Warmington & Co.; Brooks, Jenkins, & Co.; Smith & Co., for Duignans & Elliot, Walsall; Arthur J. Speechly; Marshall & Marshall.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Warrington, J. } May 9.

In re THE LEAD CO.'S WORKMEN'S FUNDS SOCIETY.

LOWES v. GOVERNOR AND COMPANY FOR SMELTING DOWN LEAD WITH PIT AND SEA COAL. (a.)

Friendly society — Unregistered society — Continuance impracticable—Dissolution—Jurisdiction to wind up.

Where there is a fund which belongs to a number or society of persons who have individually certain interests therein regulated either by a trust deed or by a body of rules, and especially where the fund is vested in a trustee upon trust for those persons, if the rules cannot be carried into effect modo et forma and the society continued without giving certain members more than they are entitled to as between themselves and the other members, the Court has jurisdiction to interpose and wind up the society for the purpose of administering its funds and distributing them equitably among its members.

A fund was formed for the purpose of providing the workmen and others employed by a company with allowances during sickness or infirmity and pensions during old age. Rules concerning the membership of the society of those entitled to the fund were made, and from time to time altered, under which entrance fees were paid, the sums for allowances and for subscriptions were fixed, and provision was made that when members attained sixty-five years they should cease to contribute to the funds or to have any allowance for sickness, but they should become entitled to have a weekly allowance or pension for the remainder of their lives. Under these rules the society existed for nearly a century. The society was governed by a committee chiefly composed of the officials of the company. The company having ceased to employ workmen, and having practically ceased business, and no new members having for some years joined the society, it became impracticable to carry out the rules, and it was found that if the society continued the funds would become exhausted for the benefit of some members only. At a meeting of the members a majority, both of pensioners and non-pensioners, voted for a dissolution.

Held, that, under such circumstances, although the society was not a partnership, yet the court had jurisdiction to wind it up, and, not being able to do more justice by continuing it, would wind it up for the purpose of distributing its funds equitably among its members according to their respective interests therein under the rules.

Action.

This was an action, brought on without pleadings, asking for a certain declaration with regard to the rights of members of the above society who had attained the age of twenty-one years, and to have the society dissolved and its affairs wound up by the court. Two questions arose, one of construction of the rules of the society, and one of the jurisdiction of the court to have the society wound up. The case is reported only upon the latter question.

The society was established in connection with the defendant company, which was established by royal charter in the early part of the eighteenth century principally for the purpose of working lead ore in Durham, Cumberland, and Westmorland. In the early part of the nineteenth century a fund was started for the benefit of the workmen employed by the company. The persons entitled to that fund formed the above society, which from the year 1828 was governed by certain rules, but which was never registered under the Friendly Societies Acts. Alterations of the rules were from time to time made down to the year 1891. No deed of any kind was entered into by or on behalf of the company with reference to the society, but the funds of the society stood in the name or in the books of the company. The rules stated that the objects of the society were to promote and establish union, friendship, and mutual assistance among its members, and to provide for them, by means and out of the society's funds, aid towards a comfortable subsistence in times of sickness and old age, and other benefits and advantages; and that the purposes to which the funds of the society should be applicable should be a provision of such benefits and advantages as aforesaid in accordance with the rules of the society. Provision was made for certain entrance fees and for contributions from each member until attaining the age of sixty-five years. The society was to be managed by a general committee assisted by a finance committee and by local committees. Membership was confined to regular workmen, agents, clerks, and others in the employ of the company.

The company was to be the custodian of the invested funds of the society so long as it continued to be willing to act in that capacity.

Rule 22, after providing that the benefits given by the society to its members should include an allowance of 7s. a week to every member who had not attained sixty-five years and was confined to his bed by sickness or infirmity, with a smaller allowance in the event of partial incapacity, continued: "Every member upon attaining the age of sixty years shall cease to contribute to the society, and he can then no longer claim any allowance for accident or sickness, but shall become indefeasibly entitled to a weekly allowance of 6s. for the remainder of his life, whether in sickness or in health, and without being under any restriction as to work; and such weekly allowance shall not be liable to forfeiture under any of these rules."

Owing to a fall in prices the company discontinued working their mines, and had ceased their business, and were selling off their property. The local officials of the company had been discharged, and workmen were no longer employed, and no new members of the society had been admitted since 1899. The result was that the rules as to the management of the funds of the society could no longer practically be carried into effect, as the officials who constituted the committee whose duty it was to frame and carry out the rules in many instances no longer existed as such.

Evidence was given by the actuary to the society, which his lordship accepted, that if the society were allowed to go on and no immediate division of the funds were made they would soon become exhausted, and there would be a large deficiency in the payment of the existing pensions and sick allowances.

The invested funds of the company consisted at the time of the trial of some £32,000 in Consols standing in the name of the company. There were 439 members of the society, of whom eighty-eight were sixty-five years old.

The matter came before Byrne, J., in March last, and in accordance with his desire a meeting of the members was convened at which fifty-four pensioners and 250 non-pensioners voted for a dissolution of the society by the court, and twenty-nine pensioners and thirty-one non-pensioners voted against a dissolution in any form either by the court or under the Friendly Societies Act.

The present action was brought by two plaintiffs who were members of the society, under the age of sixty-five years, on behalf of themselves and all other members under that age against the company as custodian of the trust funds, and against four members of the society who had attained sixty-five years and were pensioners, two of whom had voted for and two against the dissolution of the society. The plaintiffs, after claims upon the construction of the rules as to the rights of the members over sixty-five years to have their weekly allowances paid without regard to the members under that age, claimed to have the society dissolved and its affairs wound up under the direction of the court, and to have the rights of all parties beneficially interested in the trust funds ascertained and declared.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Norton, K.C., and MacSwinney, for the plaintiffs.—This is a partnership, and the court has jurisdiction to wind it up: Lloyd v. Loaring, 6 Ves. 773; Pearce v. Piper, 17 Ves. 1; Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180; Silver v. Barnes, 6 Bing. N. C. 180, 186; Cunnack v. Edwards, 45 W. R. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679; In re Alfreton District Friendly and Provident Society, 11 W. R. 301; Independent Protestant Society, [1895] 1 Ir. 1; Jones v. Lord Charlemont, 16 Sim. 271; Clements v. Bowes, 17 Sim. 167; Ward v. Sittingbourne and Sheerness Railway Co., L. R. 9 Ch. 488; Duke of Bedford v. Ellis, [1901] A. C. 8; Lindley on Partnership (6th ed.), p. 465. The partnership being formed before 1862 is not illegal: Shaw v. Simmons, 32 W. R. 292, 12 Q. B. D. 117.

They also cited McKenny v. Mayor and Corporation of Barnsley, 10 Times L. R. 553; Kemp v. Wright, [1895] 1 Ch. 121; and Botten v. City and Suburban Permanent Building Society, 44 W. R. 12, [1895] 2 Ch. 441.

Cave, K.C., and Adler, for the defendants who voted for the dissolution, supported the above arguments and cited In re Sinclair, 45 W. R. 596, [1897] 1 Ch. 921. The society being trustees of the fund, the court has jurisdiction to dissolve it by way of execution of the trust.

Rowden, K.C., and P. F. S. Stokes, for the defendants who voted against the resolution.—The association is not a partnership (see Lindley on Partnership (5th ed.), book 1, chap. 1, s. 5), and there is no precedent for winding it up.

Carson, K.C., and A. J. Spencer, for the company.

WARRINGTON, J.—Mr. Adler, the actuary, says that if the society is allowed to go on as at present the funds will soon be exhausted, and there will be a deficiency in the payment of the existing pensions and sick allowances, with the result that a number of those who are now in the position of having some interest in the fund and the expectation of getting some tangible benefit out of it will be deprived of any such benefit. The fact also that the company has given up its business seems to me to go a long way to deprive the society of the substratum upon which it was founded—namely, to be a society for the benefit of persons who were or had been employed by the company. Now, what is proposed to be done—if that is material for the present purpose, which I rather doubt, but I may as well allude to it—is that judgment should be pronounced for winding up the affairs of the society, that the contributions should cease, and that the existing assets should be divided among the members of the society equitably, according to the interests which under the rules they have. With regard to that it is said that the court has no power to make such order. Mr. Norton, on behalf of the plaintiffs, in the first instance, put the case upon the ground of partnership. He said that this was a partnership, and could be wound up like any other business, and he cited in support of that contention Lloyd v. Loaring, Beaumont v. Meredith, and Silver v. Barnes. In each of these cases a society having some similarity to the one in the case before me was referred to as a partnership, but it was referred to as such for a different purpose, and not, I think, with a view of founding upon it any decree for dissolution, or any relief such as is usually given in partnership cases. It has been pointed out in Lindley on Partnership, in the passage which Mr. Rowden referred to, that the use of the word "partnership" in connection with these societies was really a misuse of the term, and I quite agree with that, if I may say so respectfully. I think that they are not partnerships either within the definition of the Partnership Act of 1890, or within the general acceptation of the word "partnership." But does the jurisdiction of the court to deal with the funds vested in a number of persons for their joint benefit depend upon its being shown that that number of persons constitute what is properly and technically a partnership? That is where I differ from the argument that has been presented to me by Mr. Rowden. Under what particular jurisdiction it should be put, it is perhaps rather difficult to say, but it seems to me that where you have, as you may have in the present case, funds which belong to a number of persons who have individually certain interests therein regulated by a trust deed, or, as in the present case, by a body of rules, and especially where, as in the present case, you find those funds vested in a trustee for the members of that society, then I think that the court has jurisdiction to interpose. If it finds that the interests of those to whom the funds belong cannot be carried into effect modo et forma, as they have at other times determined amongst themselves they shall be divided, then I think that the court has power to interpose and say that justice cannot be done by allowing these rules to go on as they have gone on hitherto; because if that is allowed, certain members of the society will get benefits to which as between themselves and the other members they were never entitled to get; and the only way in which justice can be administered on equitable principles is to endeavour to do the best one can to give to each member of the society that interest in the funds to which he is justly entitled; and that can only be done by winding the society up. It seems to me, therefore, that on that ground I must make an order for the winding up of the society and its affairs, and for the distribution of the fund among the persons beneficially interested therein. With regard to authority, no case has been cited to me on either side, and I can find no case which tends to show that I have no jurisdiction such as I am minded to assume. On the other hand, no case has been cited directly showing that I have such jurisdiction; but the case of Pearce v. Piper has been cited, where it is, I think, clear, when the case is carefully examined, that the Lord Chancellor, perhaps without deciding it, assumed, and acted upon the assumption, that he had jurisdiction to deal with the fund in a case very much like the present one. In that case there was a society called "The Amicable Society of Master Bakers." It had been established in the year 1798 under certain articles of agreement which I need not read in detail, but they were very like the rules in the present case. It is sufficient for me to say that it was a society established for the purpose of raising a fund to provide certain annuities for superannuated workmen, and to provide sick pay. The society had got into difficulties very much as the present society has, and the Master of the Rolls, before whom the matter came, at the suggestion of the plaintiffs, dealt with it in this way. The plaintiffs in that case, unlike the plaintiffs in the present case, did not claim a dissolution, but they claimed to have the society continued, and to have directions given which would ensure their funds, and so enable them to go on; and the Master of the Rolls, in compliance with the prayer of the plaintiffs, made a decree for an account against the trustees, and directed an inquiry to ascertain what was due to the plaintiffs for arrears of their annuities, and to have the produce of the fund applied in payment of the annuities, and if the subscriptions and the rents and the produce of the fund were not sufficient to provide the annuities in full, then to have the subscriptions increased. That was appealed from to the Lord Chancellor. There had been a resolution apparently of a majority of the members to dissolve the society, and the prayer of the petition of appeal insisted "that the bill should be dismissed, that the resolution to dissolve the society was proper, and that a court of equity ought not to lend its aid and give effect and duration to an undertaking founded in mistake, and the consequence of which must inevitably involve in ruin many of the parties." It will therefore be observed that the appellants desired that the undertaking should be ended, and the respondents, supporting the decree of the Master of the Rolls, desired to have it continued. It is difficult to follow the case throughout because it extended over many days, and there are detached bits of judgment, some on one day and some on another, but at the end, on p. 19, (17 Ves.) we find the Lord Chancellor saying: "This society will be sensible that it is much more easy for them than for the court to arrange this"—that is, to arrange their affairs generally. He continues: "If they cannot agree on some plan, I must refer it to the master to make similar inquiries to those directed by Lord Thurlow, taking the assistance of a calculator, and to inform me, if this society cannot longer exist, what will be an equitable distribution of the fund subscribed. But that course is not to be taken unless the court is unable to do more justice by securing to those who have and may become entitled to annuities the enjoyment of them." I think it is clear that the Lord Chancellor considered that if, as he says, the society could not longer exist the proper course was, after having obtained the advice and the assistance of the master and of a calculator, to make an equitable distribution of the funds which had been subscribed. It will be observed that he inserts one condition—namely, that that course is not to be taken unless the court is unable to do more justice. The Lord Chancellor, therefore, in that case, does not provide me with an authority sufficient to enable me to pronounce the judgment which I am asked to pronounce. Having had the evidence read to me, I come to the conclusion upon the facts that the court is unable to do more justice by securing the annuities than by making a distribution of the fund. I think, therefore, that I must pronounce, under the third clause of the summons, a judgment declaring that the affairs of the society ought to be wound up by and under the direction of the court, and that the rights of all parties beneficially interested in the funds of the society ought to be ascertained, and that such funds should be distributed amongst the members of the society accordingly, and I direct a scheme for the purpose to be drawn up in chambers.

Winding up order made.

Solicitors, Ridsdale & Sons, for W. J. & H. C. Watson, Barnard Castle; Clarke, Rawlins, & Co.

K. B. Div. (Channell, J.) March 9.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. SANDOVER. (a.)

Copyhold—Fine on admittance—Colourable purchase—Amount of reasonable fine.

A. having agreed to purchase a copyhold property in the Manor of Richmond, in order to avoid payment of the fine on admittance subsequently purchased a smaller copyhold property. The agreement for purchase provided that the vendor should retain the rents and remain liable for the repairs. A. was admitted in respect of this property, and paid the fine on admission. Subsequently he was also admitted in respect of the larger property, paying (by the custom of the manor) a nominal fine only.

Held, that the Crown, as lord of the manor, was entitled to the fine on the larger property, as the sale of the smaller property was a colourable sale, and the Crown was entitled to be placed in the same position as if the admission had never taken place.

Held, also, that the rule that an arbitrary fine ought not to exceed two years' improved value does not apply when the admission exempts from fines in cases of future purchases.

Information on behalf of the King, as lord of the manor of Richmond, claiming that a fine was due to the King as the lord of the manor of Richmond.

By the custom of the manor of Richmond: "He that is a stranger and comes to be tenant of any copyhold lands belonging to the said manor is finable for the same at the will of the lord of the said manor as the first tenant, but never after he is once admitted to be tenant doth he pay any arbitrary fine for any other lands that he shall buy within the said manor. The fine certain paid by the copyhold tenants at the taking up of their estates or upon admittances to purchase among themselves is no more but two years' quit rent due for the lands or tenements to be taken up or bought."

The information stated that shortly before July, 1902, the defendant Sandover, who was not a tenant of the manor, agreed to purchase a messuage known as Ormond Lodge from John Thomas Billett for the sum of £1,750. The sum payable to the King by the defendant had been assessed at the sum of £400.

In order to avoid payment of the fine on the purchase the defendant Sandover arranged with the defendant Long, who is a tenant of the manor, for the purchase by Sandover from Long of a copyhold cottage known as 11, Prospect-place, Richmond.

The agreement in writing, which was dated the 22nd of July, 1902, provided that Sandover should purchase the cottage at the price of £100, and should reconvey the same to Long for the sum of £75, and bear and pay all costs in connection with the transfer. The rents were to be retained by Long, who was to pay the outgoings. If Sandover wished to retain the cottage he was to pay the further sum of £80.

The steward of the manor had no notice of this agreement of the 22nd of July, 1902.

Sandover completed the purchase of the cottage from Billett, and on the 13th of August, 1902, 11, Prospect-place was surrendered by Long, and on the same day Sandover was admitted a tenant and paid a fine of £32.

Subsequently, on the 29th of September, 1902, Billett surrendered Ormond Lodge to Sandover, who was admitted on paying a fine of 6d. only, being two years' quit rent.

The information prayed that it might be declared that the alleged purchase from Long by Sandover of 11, Prospect-place was colourable and void as against the Crown, and that the defendant Sandover was not a tenant of the manor before his admittance to Ormond Lodge, and that he be ordered to pay the sum of £400 less the said sums of £32 and 6d.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Sir R. Finlay, A.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.—If there had been a bonâ fide sale he would have been entitled to avoid payment of the fine in this way, but this was a colourable sale, as shown by the agreement, which provides that the vendor shall retain the rents and also remain liable for repairs. That being so, the lord is entitled to be placed in the same position as if the admittance had not been made: Rex v. Boughey, 1 B. & C. 565. As regards the amount of the fine, no doubt two years' improved value is the general rule, but that does not apply where payment of the fine gives the purchaser exemption on a future purchase: Watkins on Copyholds (4th ed.), p. 572.

Danckwerts, K.C., and Holman Gregory, for the defendant Sandover.—The transaction was a genuine one, and even if Sandover only became a trustee for Long, he would still have been bound to admit him: Rex v. Hendon, (1888) 2 T. R. 484. The fine here is bad, because it is at the will of the lord: Douglas v. Earl Dysart, (1861) 10 C. B. N. S. 688, 10 W. R. Dig. 21.

Cave, K.C., and Gilbert Smith, for the defendant Long.

Finlay, A.G., in reply.—Douglas v. Earl Dysart turned upon the peculiar form in which the question was left to the court.

CHANNELL, J.—I think in this case I must find for the Crown. In my opinion the transaction was colourable; not that I think there was anything fraudulent about it, because any purchaser has a right, if he can, to evade this custom—that is, so to conduct his purchase as not to subject himself to the larger fine. It was, I think, perfectly legitimate for Sandover to purchase the cottage from Long with an understanding that, if desired, Long should purchase it back again. The transaction would then have passed the property in the cottage to Sandover, and the rents and profits of it and the liability to repair it would have been his; and it would have been immaterial that he wanted to become the owner for the purpose of getting on the roll as a tenant and of getting thereby the advantage of being able to get on the roll in respect of another property for a less fine than he would have to pay if he was not a tenant. But it must be a real transaction, and if he pretends to purchase the property when there is no intention that the property should pass, then the transaction is not real, but colourable. And if not, notwithstanding that it is colourable, he is in fact admitted, then, inasmuch as the admittance was procured for the express purpose of escaping payment of the larger fine, the lord is entitled to treat him as not having acquired any rights under the admittance. That is in accordance with the law as laid down in Rex v. Boughey, and seems to me in accordance with general principles. Whether, if the tenant of a copyhold were to surrender his tenement in favour of a person who had not acquired any beneficial interest, and whom it was desired to put on the roll merely as a trustee for the surrenderor, I need not here decide. In all probability, if the surrender was not made for the purpose of depriving the lord of a fine, the lord would be bound to admit him; but if it were shown that the object was to affect the lord's right to a fine, I think it is clear the lord would be entitled to refuse admittance. The reason why I think that this transaction was colourable is not that there was an agreement by the vendor to repurchase, but that the supposed purchaser was not to have the rents and profits of the property he purchased and was not to be liable for the outgoings. That seems to me to show clearly that it was a purchase only in name, and that being so the property never passed. Now, that being so, I think that the lord is entitled to be put in the same position as he would have been in if he had never admitted the tenant—that is, he is entitled to a reasonable fine on the admittance to Ormond Lodge. I do not agree that because in the custom the amount of the fine is stated to be at the will of the lord the custom must therefore be bad. Arbitrary fines have always been construed by the court as being limited to a reasonable amount, and as a general rule that amount must not exceed two years' improved value. But there is authority for saying that there is an exception to that general rule in a case in which, as here, the admittance purchases a special right to be admitted to any other property thereafter purchased at an almost nominal fine. In such a case it is only reasonable that on account of this special advantage something should be added to the two years' value which constitute the maximum fine in manors where this custom does not prevail. As to how much should be added, it seems to me that regard should be had both to the value of the property to which admittance is sought and also to the question whether there is any reason to think that the property has been bought for the purpose of getting admittance to other property at a future date. If, for instance, I had to decide what would be a reasonable fine on admission to the small cottage in Prospect-place I should be inclined to hold that seven years was the proper fine, as Dolben, J., held in a case cited by Watkins (King v. Dollington, 1 Show. 83). I think, on the whole, that to double the maximum fine where the property is of substantial value would not be fair, and I therefore fix the fine at three years' value—viz., £300.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor to Woods and Forests.

Solicitors for the defendant Sandover, Trinder, Capron, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant Long, Skewes-Cox, Nash, & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Kennedy, JJ.) Dec. 17, 21.

RAVEN v. JUSTICES OF SOUTHAMPTON. (a.)

Licensing law—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions—Evidence at quarter sessions.

On appeal to quarter sessions against the refusal to renew a licence the only evidence produced in support of the refusal was a map showing that there were a large number of other licensed houses within a short distance of the licensed premises in question.

Held (Kennedy, J., dissenting), that this was not evidence on which the quarter sessions could refuse to renew the licence of the house.

Case stated.

The facts of the case and the arguments sufficiently appear from the judgments.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Avory, K.C. (Temple Cooke and Emanuel with him), for the appellants.

C. T. Giles (Bassett with him), for the respondents.

The following cases were cited: Rex v. Howard, 51 W. R. 21, [1902] 2 K. B. 363; Evans v. Conway Justices, 48 W. R. 577, [1900] 2 Q. B. 224; Sharpe v. Wakefield, 39 W. R. 561, [1891] A. C. 173.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21.—KENNEDY, J.—I need not say that in differing from my lord and my brother Lawrance I feel the greatest possible doubt as to the correctness of my judgment, but I feel that, having formed an opinion, I ought to give fully my reasons for the view which I do take. In this case the court of quarter sessions have affirmed the refusal of the respondents to grant the renewal of the licence to the "George and Henry" public-house in Orchard-lane, Southampton.

George Raven is the tenant, Crawley & Co. are the owners of this house. The ground of objection to this house was that it was not required in the locality and neighbourhood.

On the hearing of the appeal the respondents, according to the proper and universal practice in such matters, began. They called William Henry Killick, the assistant borough surveyor, and John Neish, a detective in the borough police. Killick proved that if the "George and Henry" was taken as the centre of a circle of 100 yards radius there were within that circle two fully-licensed houses and seventeen beer-houses; and if that circle were enlarged so as to have a radius of 300 yards there would be included within it no less than fully twenty-five fully-licensed houses and forty-seven beer-houses. The same witness stated that no objection had been served in regard of any of these other houses; that the neighbourhood was thickly peopled; and that the character of the people had remained the same while its numbers had increased in the last ten years, during the whole of which period the appellant Raven had held a licence. The witness produced an ordnance map to illustrate his figures and distances, and to show the site both of the "George and Henry," and of the other licensed houses within the area to which his evidence related by means of circles and marks drawn upon the map. The witness Neish corroborated Killick, and further testified the neighbourhood was a troublesome one to the police. The appellants thereupon called witnesses, but neither their names nor the nature of their evidence appear in the case. The court, after hearing the arguments of counsel, affirmed the decision of the licensing justices and refused the renewal of the licence subject to the opinion of this court upon the point intended to be raised by the statement of this special case.

That point in substance is that the court had not any evidence that this house was not required in the locality and neighbourhood. If there was such evidence of course we cannot overrule their decision. In my judgment it is impossible to say that the state of the locality and the neighbourhood, and the evidence given in regard to the throng of inns and beerhouses, and the evidence as to the position of this house in regard both to all those public-houses and to the neighbourhood did not afford any evidence which entitled the court of quarter sessions, acting judicially, as, of course, they are bound to act, to affirm the decision of the licensing justices in refusing to renew the licence of this house. As I understand the effect of the judgment of the House of Lords in Sharpe v. Wakefield, both justices at the licensing sessions and also the court of quarter sessions on appeal, exercising their discretion, of course judicially, are entitled to refuse to renew a licence if they are of opinion that the public-house to which it relates is not required for the wants of the neighbourhood. To my mind there can be no question that the sworn evidence in this case, with the justifiable inference to be drawn from the position of the public-house in relation both to the neighbourhood and to the other public-houses, might be held by the tribunal before which the evidence was adduced to establish the necessary point, unless—and this is the gist of the appellant's contention—it is not merely relevant, but absolutely essential to the proof that it be further shown by evidence that there are some better grounds for refusing the renewal of the licence to the house objected to than could be shown to exist in regard to the licence of any house within the neighbourhood under consideration, as, for example, in regard to convenience of site, or business, or character, or the extent of business done. Now, speaking for myself, I know of no authority, either in the licensing statutes or in the reported cases, which can be cited in support of this argument. On the contrary, as I have already said, the law accepts as justification for the refusal to renew a licence the fact that, in the opinion of magistrates or the court of quarter sessions, the renewal of the licence is not required by the locality.

It may, I think, properly also be borne in mind in considering the appellant's arguments, firstly, that to attempt really and satisfactorily to compare the relative claims to continuance of some sixty or seventy houses as against the one house objected to would plainly involve a long, most difficult, and probably in most cases an impracticable inquiry; and, secondly, that direct evidence as to the wants of the locality being over-supplied has been given in this case. In my opinion the burden of counterbalancing this evidence should be on the applicants for the renewal of the licence to show that the particular licence is less superfluous than all, or even than some, of the other public-houses. The applicants in this case did not succeed in proving any of these matters on their own behalf. It has been urged that there is hardship in not renewing a licence without evidence of its uselessness or inconvenience as compared with the other houses in the vicinity. I agree that unless all the houses are compared in evidence what might be deemed a hardship may arise. But our duty is to administer the law, and in my view the thing to be decided is whether or not this public-house, owing to the advantages of its situation or to its accommodation or trade, ought to keep its licence in view of the wants of the area in which there are a number of public-houses. No doubt other considerations may be taken into account by the justices, such as the length of time during which a licence has been yearly renewed, or to evidence, if it is given, of the relative superiority of the public-house in question as compared with other public-houses in the same locality. But in dealing with the appellants' contention here, which is that certain evidence is not merely relevant, but indispensable, before a renewal can be refused it appears to me to be essential to comprehend the nature of that which is, after all, the real and essential issue.

The only other matter that I think calls for notice was a subject of discussion at the hearing before us which is contained in paragraph 5 of the special case: "It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the map and facts there proved were facts on which we could find, and were evidence to support a finding, that the said licence was not required as aforesaid; and although such evidence did not differentiate the said "George and Henry" from the other licensed houses in the neighbourhood, yet if it were necessary so to differentiate it weight should be given to the fact that the said notice of objection had been so served as aforesaid by the respondents, who had local knowledge and could therefore differentiate, and had in fact differentiated, between the said licensed houses."

As I read that paragraph it means this, that the appellants here contended that you must do that which I have endeavoured to express—namely, before dealing with this licence, even though you know where it is, and know its position in relation to the locality, you must give evidence to make the case of renewal less desirable in this case as compared with all these other public-houses.

And as I understand—and I dwell upon this because I think my lord and my brother Lawrance take a different view—I think that the justices held they had sufficient evidence and did not agree with the contention of the appellants that it was necessary to differentiate the "George and Henry" in this way, but that if it was necessary so to differentiate it they thought they were entitled to look at and consider the fact of the notice of objection having been served by direction of the local justices. The judgment of the Court of Appeal in Evans v. Conway Justices, to which I have already referred, and by which it was decided that the court of quarter sessions are not entitled to refuse a licence without some evidence to ground the objection, decided also that the tribunal ought to proceed as a court of law with regard to the reception of evidence and the requirements of legal proof. It may therefore be said to partake of the nature of an administrative tribunal, though proceedings before it are not an ordinary litigation. With regard to the question of differentiation I feel considerable doubt as to how far, if at all, quarter sessions may in such a case consider as to the differentiation of the "George and Henry" from other public-houses in the same locality. It is not, however, necessary to decide this point in view of the opinion I have already expressed, that there was evidence before the justices which entitled them in my view to come to their decision. I will therefore only say that I am inclined to think that while the origin of the objection to the renewal of this licence could not in itself be treated as affording some evidence that the "George and Henry" was, as between itself and the other public-houses, the one that could best be dispensed with in reference to the wants of the neighbourhood, the court would not be entitled wholly to exclude from their consideration the fact that the objection to this renewal did not come from a private or irresponsible objector.

LAWRANCE, J.—I will state very shortly the grounds on which I have arrived at a conclusion different from that of my brother Kennedy.

I think the magistrates had not before them any evidence which justified them in acting as they did in this case. It seems to me impossible to read paragraph 3 of this case without seeing that the evidence which was called added nothing to the knowledge of the justices with regard to the number of public-houses in the locality. That is to say, the witnesses came there to prove the map and nothing else. The map shows that there is in this district two public-houses fully licensed within 100 yards of this house and twelve within 200 yards, and it seems to me the magistrates acted on that without having before them any direct evidence as to the "George and Henry" public-house licence. Now I am of opinion that the magistrates are bound to act judicially in the matter. I do not think they can be said to have acted judicially in dealing with the case in this way—namely, by taking the map and then deciding to take away the licence of this public-house, against which, so far as I know, there is not a word to be said. If there had been, there would have been evidence forthcoming from the witnesses who were called; but they took that public-house alone, and without any more evidence than that there were too many public-houses within a short distance of it, they deprive it of its licence. Now, the question is, is that acting judicially? It is impossible, of course, to lay down any rule as to what may be done, but it certainly does appear to me that what was done in the Farnham case (Rex v. Howard) ought, in the interest of justice, to be done in cases of this kind. What the magistrates did there was this: they formed a committee of their own members, who did inquire into all the respective merits of the different public-houses in that district. They made a report to the justices, and the justices acted on that, and they were held by the court to have acted rightly in doing so. The words of the Master of the Rolls seem to me most important in that view: "They were of opinion that the only satisfactory way of dealing with the question was to cause objections to be served on all the owners of licensed houses, so that the case of each might be formally inquired into, and for this purpose authority was given to the justices' clerk to object to such renewals on the ground that the houses were not required, and also on special grounds set out in the notice." That is a reasonable and proper way of acting. Nothing of that kind was done here. All that was done was to act upon the map, taking the map alone, acting upon the fact that there were an enormous quantity of public-houses in the the neighbourhood, and it was necessary to begin with one of them, and as to that one no evidence was given. For that reason I come to the conclusion that the appeal should be allowed. I should be sorry to tie the hands of justices who are interested in decreasing the number of public-houses in an overcrowded district, but I think they must have before them some evidence on which they can act, and it is fair to the owners of public-houses they should have some.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I agree with the judgment of my brother Lawrance, but as the matter is of great importance I think it better to state my reasons. I do not differ in substance from the view of the law expressed by my brother Kennedy. Where we part company is in the application of the law to this particular case, and I think it right to state one or two matters that I assume for the purpose of this judgment. I recognize that the justices may of their own motion give notice that a licence will be objected to on the ground that a particular licence is not required. That was discussed in the Farnham case, where we held, and the Court of Appeal affirmed our view, that that course might be taken; but it must be remembered in this particular case the justices only are respondents to this appeal. I further desire to point out that it by no means follows that it is necessary to differentiate between different houses because the justices are going to refuse, or think they ought to refuse, a particular licence on the ground it is not required. There may be circumstances in connection with the character of the house, or with its present accommodation, which would justify the magistrates in thinking that that house, having regard to all its circumstances, is not required in the neighbourhood, and they may act accordingly. We have to consider whether or not the court of quarter sessions in this case acted as a court upon evidence that they could lawfully receive, having regard to the objection that was raised by the justices, "That the licence is not required in the locality or neighbourhood." I presume the quarter sessions have stated the whole case. If they have not done so I may be doing an injustice to them; but that is their own fault, because they have stated the case on which our opinion is asked, and I must assume that they have given us all the evidence on which they acted. It has been suggested that there was other evidence. All I can say is that the quarter sessions ought not to have stated a case for us and asked our opinion unless that case was stated having regard to the whole of the evidence, and that is why I wish to read the evidence. [His lordship read the evidence from the case, set out in the judgment of Kennedy, J., and continued:] Now, I take it as the basis of my judgment that it is on that evidence, and that evidence only, that the quarter sessions affirmed the decision of the justices not to renew the licence. I do not think it unfair to say, as my brother Lawrance has said, that all that evidence amounted to is the map and nothing else. It showed no peculiarities of the particular house, and it did not even show the surrounding circumstances of the locality of the particular house, its accommodation, or anything to do with it. It was nothing but the map, and I think it is not unimportant to point out that the map itself shows that immediately opposite the "George and Henry," and in the same street, stands another fully-licensed house. I mention that, not for the purpose of showing that it was necessary for the justices to differentiate that house from the "George and Henry," but in order to point out that if they acted on the map only, as I think they did, it is not only easy to see how in the absence of any evidence about the plaintiff's house they could avoid differentiating. I wish to enforce what has been laid down by the Master of the Rolls in the Farnham case. I accept it as binding upon me, and as indicating what ought to be done in these cases. In that case, which was much more difficult than this, there were a great many houses involved, and the Master of the Rolls says this: "It is clear from their report that they—that is, the justices—were of opinion that the only satisfactory way of dealing with the question was to cause objections to be served on all owners of licensed houses so that the case of each of them might be formally inquired into, and for this purpose authority was given to the justices' clerk to object to the renewals on the ground that they were not required, and also on special grounds set out in the notice. These objections were signed by the clerk, stating that he was acting under the instruction of the justices present at the annual licensing meeting." All I point out is that in a case much more complicated than this the Master of the Rolls, at any rate, considers the fair method would be to serve objection on all the licensed houses. I mention that only for the purpose of showing that in the absence of circumstances relating to any particular houses, differentiation (or rather comparison) may be the only means of dealing fairly with this question; but I wish again to point out that I do not consider such comparison and differentiation is necessary when there is evidence as to the character of the house in respect of which the licence is refused. Now, that being so, I come to the conclusion—and this is where my brother Kennedy and I differ—that the court of quarter sessions had no evidence before it except the map, and if they did not rely on the differentiation as contended for by the respondents they had no evidence on which they could act. I think it is a very serious matter to lay down that justices at quarter sessions may act on that which is not evidence in a court of law. There was, therefore, in my opinion, no evidence before the justices on which they could properly decide that this house was not required for that neighbourhood, and the appeal ought to be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Speechly, Mumford, & Co., for Lamport, Bassitt, & Hiscock, Southampton.

Solicitors for the respondents, Barlow & Barlow, for Bassett, Southampton.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). } Feb. 15.

EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Person authorized by statute to purchase property—Purchase of realty and chattels—Finance Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 16), s. 12.

By section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, where "any property" is purchased under statutory authority, a duly stamped instrument of conveyance of the property must be produced to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

Held, that the ad valorem duty was payable on personal as well as real property purchased under the special statutory powers.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (50 W. R. 161, [1902] 1 K. B. 403) affirmed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) (50 W. R. 161, [1902] 1 K. B. 403), affirming a decision of the King's Bench Division (Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) (50 W. R. 59, [1901] 2 K. B. 773).

This was a special case, stated by consent, pursuant to ord. 68, r. 2, and ord. 34, r. 1, which is set out at length in the report in the Divisional Court.

The question turned on the construction of section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, which is as follows: "12. Where, after the passing of this Act, by virtue of any Act, whether passed before or after this Act, either (a) any property is vested by way of sale in any person, or (b) any person is authorized to purchase property, such person shall within three months after the passing of the Act or the date of vesting, whichever is later, or after the completion of the purchase, as the case may be, produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue a copy of the Act printed by the Queen's printer of Acts of Parliament, or some instrument relating to the vesting in the first case, and an instrument of conveyance of the property in the other case, duly stamped with the ad valorem duty payable upon a conveyance on sale of the property, and in default of such production the duty, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the passing of the Act, date of vesting, or completion of the purchase, as the case may be, shall be a debt to her Majesty from such person."

In April, 1899, the appellants and the Eastbourne Electric Light Co. (Limited) (the undertakers supplying electricity under the Eastbourne Electric Supply Order, 1890), entered into a contract of purchase and sale, and the contract was sanctioned by the Eastbourne Electric Supply Order, 1899. The total purchase-money was £88,749 2s. 9d., of which £37,929 was admitted by the Crown to have been paid in respect of personal chattels.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Crown claimed ad valorem duty upon the whole of the consideration, and the courts below decided in its favour.

Danckwerts, K.C., and Ritchie Macoun, for the appellants.—Some limitation must be placed upon the word "property" in the section. Personal chattels pass by delivery, and no conveyance is necessary. Otherwise, a new burden created, which was not the object of the Act.

Sir E. Carson, S.G., and Rowlatt, for the Crown, were not heard.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—We have had a very long and ingenious argument on this question, which seems to me to be a very plain one. I certainly do not mean to go through all the different and ingenious hypotheses which have been put forward in order to show that the plain words of the Act of Parliament may be cut down and reduced to an absurdity. I think, so far as there is any argument at all, the whole question turns upon the word "conveyance," and although, with some hesitation and a considerable amount of circumlocution, the learned counsel has addressed to us what I must admit to be a learned and ingenious argument, it simply comes to this: that the statute is intended in its operation to apply only to land, or what would be equivalent to land, in its natural sense. But, as I have before said, the whole of that argument seems to depend upon the use of the word "conveyance," which he says only means, according to the technical view of that question, a conveyance of land, or realty in some form whether it be land or not. My answer to that is that it is not true. The word "conveyance" means what it says: it conveys any property. I find in Wharton's Law Lexicon that it is defined as "an instrument that transfers property from one person to another." That is all; and although it may be perfectly true to say that where you are dealing with personal property it may pass, and does pass, completely by mere delivery, it is a very illogical consequence of that proposition to suggest that it may not pass in any other way, and that you may not convey it by an ordinary conveyance. I think you may.

I think that really disposes of the whole argument. When I look at the statute itself and see what it does, I am content to apply it to the particular facts with which your lordships have to deal. It seems to me that it would be impossible to say, having regard to the particular facts with which your lordships have to deal, that the case is not included in the language of the statute. We have heard a great deal about confusion, about ambiguity, and about alternative constructions; but when I apply the language of the statute to the transaction which is engaging our attention, it appears to me to be as clear as possible that in the ordinary natural meaning of the words therein employed the statute does apply to this transaction.

I decline to go into hypotheses about other cases in which it might be supposed that this language would be too wide and would include something else. It is enough for me to say that, as applicable to this particular transaction, the words seem to me to be absolutely clear, without confusion and without any alternative construction at all, and to apply literally and strictly to the transaction in question.

For these reasons I move your lordships that the judgment appealed from be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion.

Lord SHAND.—I also am of the same opinion. It appears to me that the very purpose of the Act of 1895 was to enlarge the subject of taxation so that personal property bought by sale should be liable to duty just as heritable property was previously liable. The Act, I think, succeeded in its purpose, and I agree in the opinion of their lordships in the court below and with my noble and learned friend on the woolsack and Lord Macnaghten that the judgment must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Lord LINDLEY.—I am of the same opinion. I think the case becomes absolutely clear if you read the section shortly, leaving out the words which are not applicable to the present case. The section runs thus: "Where, after the passing of this Act, by virtue of any Act, whether passed before or after this Act, any person is authorized to purchase property, any such person shall (within three months after the completion of the purchase) produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue an instrument of conveyance of the property" (that is, of the property which the purchaser is authorized by an Act of Parliament to purchase) "duly stamped with an ad valorem duty payable upon a conveyance on sale of the property." Now, what is that? What is the property of which an instrument of conveyance is to be produced, and what is the property the ad valorem value of which is to govern the stamp? It is obviously the property which the purchaser is authorized by an Act of Parliament to purchase. I think it is plain beyond all question that this Act was not intended to affect ordinary purchases made in the ordinary course of business. It was confined, and intended to be confined, to purchases authorized by some special Act of Parliament, expressly authorized, the property being, if not accurately defined, at all events described in such Act of Parliament. That gets rid of the whole difficulty. There is no ambiguity about it all. Every word in this section has its natural meaning and requires no forced construction whatever. The whole fallacy of the argument on the part of the appellants appears to me to be this: that because personal chattels pass, or can pass, by delivery without any instrument at all, you cannot have an instrument of conveyance for them. That is not the case. In this case the Act of Parliament is addressed to cases where an instrument is required, and being required it must be stamped. The little difficulty, if there is any difficulty about it, arises entirely from not seeing that it does not apply to ordinary purchases in the ordinary course of business, but to special purchases specially authorized.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for H. W. Fovargue, Town Clerk, Eastbourne.

Solicitor for Crown, Sir Francis Gore, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Court of Appeal.

Original Motion. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling, L.J.) June 7.

DAVID v. REES AND OTHERS. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Set-off—"Parties"—Independent proceedings—Ord. 65, r. 14; r. 27, sub-rule 21.

Ord. 65, rr. 14 and 27 (21), do not allow a set-off of costs in separate actions.

Motion by the plaintiff for a stay of execution as to costs.

The plaintiff advanced sums of money to certain persons, including Thomas Rees and Ernest Henry Rees, for the use of the Aberaman Football Club, upon their joint and several promise to repay the same. The club was an unincorporated body, Thomas Rees being its treasurer and Ernest Henry Rees its secretary, and the other persons were members of the committee of the club. A sum of £78 8s. 9d. being due in respect of the advances, the plaintiff brought an action in the High Court against Thomas Rees and Ernest Henry Rees and the others to recover the above amount. Thomas Rees and one other defendant did not appear to the writ, and judgment was signed against them for the amount claimed and £5 12s. costs. The other defendants, including Ernest H. Rees, appeared, and upon an application for judgment under order 14, the judge at chambers gave unconditional leave to defend and remitted the action for trial to the county court. At the trial in the county court judgment was given for the plaintiff for £72 8s. 9d. and costs, which were taxed at £33 2s. 2d.

The club received certain moneys, the proceeds of gate money, amounting to £84 12s. 5d., which were placed in a bank in the names of Thomas Rees, Ernest Rees, and Thomas William Griffiths, who held the moneys on behalf of the club. The above judgments remaining unsatisfied, the plaintiff instituted garnishee proceedings in the High Court, alleging that there was a debt of £48 due from the Aberaman Football Club to Thomas Rees as treasurer of the club, and that Thomas Rees was entitled to an indemnity against the club's funds in respect of the judgment debt due from him to the plaintiff. The garnishee proceedings were entitled as between "Morgan Richard David, judgment creditor, and Thomas Rees, judgment debtor; the Aberaman Football Club, Thomas Rees, Ernest Henry Rees, and Thomas William Griffiths, the persons in whose names the funds of the club stand, garnishees," and he claimed to be paid the amount of the judgment debt due from Thomas Rees out of the said sum of £84 12s. 5d. There being no denial of the debt of £48 from the club to Thomas Rees, the master and the judge at chambers made an order that the garnishees should pay to the judgment creditor £48, the debt due from the garnishees to the judgment debtor. Ernest Henry Rees appealed from this order, and the Court of Appeal allowed the appeal with costs there and below to be paid by the plaintiff to Ernest Henry Rees, and discharged the garnishee order as against Thomas Rees, Ernest Henry Rees, and Thomas William Griffiths so far as the same purported to attach funds in their hands. Ernest H. Rees' costs of the garnishee proceedings were taxed at £34 4s.

The plaintiff thereupon applied by way of original motion to the Court of Appeal that the execution in respect of the taxed costs of the garnishee proceedings should be stayed upon the ground that the county court judgment which the plaintiff had recovered against Ernest H. Rees for £72 8s. 9d. debt and £33 2s. 2d. costs remained unsatisfied, and he claimed that the costs of the garnishee proceedings should be set off against his unsatisfied judgment.

W. D. Benson, for the plaintiff.—Ord. 65, r. 14, and ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 21, allows a set-off of those costs. The action against Thomas Rees and Ernest Rees was the same action, started by the same writ, though as against Ernest Rees the action was remitted to the county court, and under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, it became as regards him a county court action. There was, however, only one action, and the two sets of costs were incurred in that one action. The decisions of the Divisional Court in Edwards v. Hope, 33 W. R. 672, 14 Q. B. D. 922, and of Chitty, J., in Hassell v. Stanley, 44 W. R. 405, [1896] 1 Ch. 607, that ord. 65, r. 14, does not apply to costs in independent actions are not applicable. Secondly, if those decisions are applicable, they ought not to be followed. The Court of Appeal in Edwards v. Hope expressly left the question open; and there is no reason for limiting the rule to costs in the same action. It would be unjust to make the plaintiff pay costs to Ernest Rees, who already owes him a large sum for debt and costs. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Barker v. Hemming, 28 W. R. 764. 5 Q. B. D. 609, went upon the old ord. 6, r. 19, which corresponds with ord. 65, r. 27 (21), and as that rule deals with the power of the taxing officer on the taxation of costs, the court in that case might well say that it was limited to costs in the same action. That reasoning, however applicable it may be to ord. 65, r. 27 (21), does not apply to ord. 65, r. 14. There was, therefore, jurisdiction to allow the set-off.

Harold Simmons, for Ernest Rees.—The action against Ernest Rees, which was remitted to the county court, and the garnishee proceedings on the judgment recovered against Thomas Rees in the High Court were independent proceedings. Thomas William Griffiths, who was a party to the garnishee proceedings, was not a party to the action. By section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, an action when remitted to a county court becomes for all purposes a county court action. The decisions in Edwards v. Hope and Hassell v. Stanley, to the effect that ord. 65, r. 14, does not apply to a set-off of costs in independent proceedings, ought to be followed. Further, the decision in Barker v. Hemming that ord. 6, r. 19 (now ord. 65 r. 27, sub-rule 21), only applies to a set-off of costs as between parties in the same action is in point and applies to ord. 65, r. 14, as well as to ord. 65, r. 27 (21). But even if it can be said that the action remained one action, the garnishee proceedings were proceedings distinct from the action, and were therefore independent proceedings within the reasoning of Barker v. Hemming. He also contended that under the jurisdiction existing before the Judicature Acts there was no right to set off these costs.

COLLINS, M.R.—I am of opinion that this application fails. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the High Court against Thomas Rees upon his personal liability to pay a sum of £78 8s. 9d. which had been advanced to a number of persons, including Thomas Rees, for the purposes of a football club. Thomas Rees did not pay the judgment debt, and there did not seem to be much prospect of the plaintiff getting the fruits of his judgment. It appeared, however, that a sum of money came into the possession of the club, and the club were at the same time liable to Thomas

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Rees in respect of a debt due to him from the club. The sum of money belonging to the club was deposited in a bank in the names of three persons—Thomas Rees, Ernest Henry Rees, and Thomas William Griffiths. The plaintiff thereupon issued garnishee proceedings against the club and against these three persons. The master made the garnishee order absolute against all the garnishees, and the learned judge at chambers affirmed his order. Ernest Rees appealed from that order, and we held that Ernest Rees, as a trustee of this fund, was under no personal liability to the defendant, and discharged the garnishee order against the three persons in whose names the fund was standing, and ordered the plaintiff to pay to Ernest Rees the costs of the appeal and of the proceedings at chambers. These costs were taxed, and the plaintiff now applies to be allowed to set off the costs due to him under his county court judgment against Ernest Rees against the costs of the garnishee proceedings. It seems to me, when I look at the rules, that there is no power to allow the set-off. By ord. 65, r. 14, "a set-off for damages or costs between parties may be allowed notwithstanding the solicitor's lien for costs in the particular cause or matter in which the set-off is sought." The set-off is there allowed between "parties." Then by ord. 65, r. 27 (21): "In any case in which . . . by the order or direction of a court or judge, or otherwise, a party entitled to receive costs is liable to pay costs to any other party, the taxing officer may tax the costs such party is so liable to pay, and may adjust the same by way of deduction or set-off. . . ." That rule also deals with "parties." Both those rules have been the subject of decisions, one in the Divisional Court and one in the Court of Appeal. Edwards v. Hope was a decision upon ord. 65, r. 14. The head-note in that case is as follows: "The court, upon an application to set-off cross-judgments in distinct actions, are entitled, notwithstanding ord. 65, r. 14, to order that the set-off shall be subject to the lien for costs of the solicitor of the opposite party, for assuming that rule 14 applies to a set-off in distinct actions it leaves the court a discretion to allow the set-off, either subject to or notwithstanding the solicitor's lien, and if it has no application the court have the same discretion by the practice previous to Reg. Hil. Term, 1853, r. 63, which since the repeal of that rule by the new rules is revived." In that case the Divisional Court held that rule 14 only applies to damages or costs in the same cause. The Court of Appeal left that point open, and Bowen, L.J., after dealing with the old practice, said that "if we interpret the rule as applying only to a set-off in the same action, it has no application to the present case, and rule 63 of Hilary Term, 1853, having been abrogated, the old equitable jurisdiction of the court is revived. If, on the other hand, rule 14 is taken to apply to a set-off in different actions, the court, by the express terms of the rule, has a discretion as to the terms on which the set-off is to be allowed. Either way, therefore, the court below was at liberty to exercise its discretion, and we ought not to interfere unless we can see that this discretion was wrongly exercised, which we certainly cannot." In Hassell v. Stanley, which is another case dealing with ord. 65, rr. 14 and 27 (21), the head-note is as follows: "Costs incurred in the High Court cannot be set off against costs obtained in the county court, although the proceedings are between the same parties. Ord. 65, r. 14, does not apply to costs in independent proceedings." In that case Chitty, J., said: "As the question I have just refrained from deciding is now directly raised again, I am not going to avoid giving my decision on the point by sheltering myself under my judicial discretion; and I therefore say that, in my opinion, the principle adopted by the Divisional Court in Edwards v. Hope, 14 Q. B. D. 922, and by Kay, J., in Blakey v. Latham, 37 W. R. 569, 41 Ch. D. 518, applies to this case, and I therefore decline to make any order for a set-off of the costs of this motion against the costs obtained by the defendants in the county court." There is one other case to which it is necessary to refer — Barker v. Hemming, decided in 1880. The head-note in that case states that "under ord. 6, r. 19, of the Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs)—by which, whenever in cases specified a party entitled to receive costs is liable to pay costs to the other party, the taxing officer may adjust the costs by way of deduction or set-off—such set-off or deduction is limited to costs due to either party in respect of the same action, and cannot be enforced in respect of the costs of any separate proceeding between the same parties." Ord. 6, r. 19, which was under discussion in that case, was in the same terms as the present ord. 65, r. 27 (21). James, L.J., there said: "The plain meaning of ord. 6, r. 19, is that costs are to be set-off as between parties—not as between persons, but as between parties—in the same action, and in their character of parties to it. It cannot be supposed that the rule would apply to costs incurred by them in a distinct action in a different branch of the court, and it can just as little apply to the costs incurred in this interpleader, which is a proceeding distinct from the action." The ground of that decision was that the word "parties" was used in the rule, thereby making the rule inapplicable to the set-off claimed. The word "parties" is common to both sets of rules, which are addressed solely to a set-off as between parties. The set-off claimed in the present case does not, therefore, come within either of the rules.

It is then suggested that there is another principle independent of the rules—namely, the old principle recognized both at common law and in equity, allowing a set-off though the actions are different. But that principle is limited to the case of parties suing or being sued in the same right. In Lush's Practice (3rd ed.). vol. 1, p. 328, it is said that "a set-off will not be allowed even between the same parties where the judgments are in different rights; as where one of the parties is trustee only in one, and in the other is interested in his own right"; and for that proposition the case of Bristowe v. Needham, 8 Sc. N. R. 366, is cited. In the present case it is claimed to set off costs payable to a person in his capacity as a trustee against costs payable by him in his personal capacity. This is outside the principle, and also outside the above-mentioned rules. The set-off, therefore, cannot be allowed, and the application fails.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiff is a creditor of a football club, which is an unincorporated body, and Thomas Rees and Ernest Rees, among others, promised to pay the debt. The club did not pay the debt, and the plaintiff sued Thomas Rees and Ernest Rees in the High Court. Judgment by default was recovered against Thomas Rees, and the action as against Ernest Rees was remitted to the county court, and resulted in judgment for the plaintiff against Ernest Rees for the amount of the debt, with costs. Therefore a sum of money for costs became due from Ernest Rees to the plaintiff. The debt remaining unsatisfied, the plaintiff, ascertaining that there was a debt due from the club to Thomas Rees, took garnishee proceedings in the High Court against the club and the three trustees in whose names a sum of money belonging to the club was standing in a bank. Ernest Rees was one of those trustees. Those garnishee proceedings were entitled in the action against Thomas Rees. The plaintiff succeeded in those garnishee proceedings in chambers, and Ernest Rees appealed to this court against them. We held that the garnishee proceedings were wrongly instituted against the three trustees, and discharged the order as to them, and directed the plaintiff to pay to Ernest Rees the costs of those proceedings. An application is now made to us to allow those costs to be set off against the costs which Ernest Rees owes to the plaintiff in respect of the county court judgment.

The question is whether that can be allowed. The application is based first of all upon ord. 65, r. 14. It was, however, suggested that another rule—ord. 65, r. 27 (21)—might apply, and that the application might also be justified under the common law or equitable jurisdiction of the court. To begin with ord. 65, r. 27 (21), that rule is not applicable, because there is an express decision of this court in Barker v. Hemming, upon a former rule which was identical in terms with sub-rule 21, and the ground of that decision was that the set-off of costs must be between the parties in the same action and in their character of parties to it. Here the costs due to the plaintiff are costs recovered under the county court judgment, and the costs which Ernest Rees recovered against the plaintiff are costs of garnishee proceedings improperly instituted against him in the High Court. For that reason sub-rule 21 does not apply. Then rule 14 was mainly relied upon. That rule provides that "a set-off for damages or costs between parties may be allowed notwithstanding the solicitor's lien for costs in the particular cause or matter in which the set-off is sought." It is to be observed that the language of the rule is, "a set-off for damages or costs between parties." It seems to me that the reasoning in Barker v. Hemming applies to that rule. There is no decision directly in point in the Court of Appeal, but in Edwards v. Hope the Divisional Court expressly held that rule 14 only applies to costs in the particular cause, and not in independent proceedings; and Kay, J., in Blakey v. Latham, and Chitty, J., in Hassell v. Stanley, when sitting as judges of first instance, followed the decision of the Divisional Court in Edwards v. Hope, and held that rule 14 does not apply to costs in distinct and independent actions or proceedings. Therefore it appears to me that, both upon the reasoning in Barker v. Hemming and upon the weight of authority, ord. 65, r. 14, does not apply.

There remains the question of the old common law or equitable jurisdiction of the court, which, as was pointed out in Edwards v. Hope, is still applicable. But that jurisdiction was never applied where the parties were sued in different capacities. Here the action against Ernest Rees was against him in his individual capacity, and the garnishee proceedings were instituted against him in his capacity as trustee for the club. For these reasons the application must be refused.

Application refused.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, E. F. Turner & Sons, for David Richards, Aberdare.

Solicitors for Ernest Rees, Milner & Bickford.

From K. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — April 19.

HAMILTON v. SEAL. (a.)

Practice—Application for judgment or new trial—Misdirection of jury—Costs of successful application—Discretion of court.

If a new trial is granted by the Court of Appeal on account of the misdirection of the jury, the costs of the application rest entirely at the discretion of that court.

Bray v. Ford, [1896] A. C. 44, 44 W. R. Dig. 131, discussed.

This was an appeal of the defendant for judgment or new trial from a verdict and judgment of Grantham, J., and a special jury.

The action was to set aside a certain guarantee which the plaintiff had given, on the ground that there was no consideration, and that it had been obtained by duress.

A verdict having been given for the plaintiff, the defendant appealed on the ground that the jury had been misdirected.

THE COURT (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, STIRLING, and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ.) having granted the application for a new trial, a question arose as to whether the costs of the application that succeeded should be the applicant's, or abide the result of the new trial.

On this point

Scott Fox, K.C., and Thorn Drury, for the appellant.

Kemp, K.C., and F. M. Abrahams, for the respondent.

They cited Bray v. Ford, [1896] A. C. 44, 44 W. R. Dig. 131.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: In practice the order made in Bray v. Ford, [1896] A. C. 44, 44 W. R. Dig. 131, has not been considered as an order laying down any general rule, but as merely an order in that particular case. It appears that the Court of Appeal, in dealing with these common law cases, have generally done so upon the ground that there was no absolute rule applicable to all cases, but that there was a discretion in the court either to give, or to abstain from giving, or to reserve the costs. Therefore we have to exercise that discretion, and, for myself, although I cannot say that there is any general rule which can be applied to these cases, yet in the absence of special circumstances, where there is an application for a new trial, and one has been ordered, and the other side have opposed that application, I think that primâ facie the costs should be borne by those who opposed the application. In our judgment the costs of this application ought to be paid by the respondents. The costs of the first trial will abide the result of the second, subject to directions.

STIRLING and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, H. Ellis; Seal & Edgelow.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — March 25, 28, 29.

WELLCOME v. THOMPSON & CAPPER.
In re BURROUGHS, WELLCOME, & CO.'S TRADE-MARKS. (a.)

Trade-mark—Registration—Motion to rectify—Fancy word "Tabloid"—Presumption from long user—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Before 1884, B. & W. made and sold drugs of solid form and biconvex shape as "Tablets," and had registered "Tablets" as a trade-mark. In 1884 they coined and registered the word "Tabloid," as a trade-mark for substances used in pharmacy. They had since made and sold as "Tabloids" solid drugs of the same shape and size.

In 1903, T. applied to have the word "Tabloid" expunged from the register.

Held, affirming the decision of Byrne, J., (ante, p. 205), that, having regard to the long period of time during which the word stood unimpeached on the register, the presumption was that "Tabloid" was, at the date of its registration, a distinctive fancy word.

Appeal by Messrs. Thompson & Capper against the dismissal by Byrne, J., of a motion to rectify the register of trade-marks by expunging therefrom certain trade-marks of the respondents, Messrs. Burroughs, Wellcome, & Co.

Prior to 1884 the respondents manufactured and sold compressed drugs of a lenticular or biconvex shape as "Wyeth's Compressed Tablets." In 1883 they registered the word "Tablets" in class 3, but there being doubt as to the validity of of "Tablets" as a trade-mark, they invented the word "Tabloid," which was not then known in the English language, and in 1884 registered it in classes 3 and 42 in respect of chemical substances not included in class 1 used in medicine and pharmacy and preparations of food for human use. In 1885 they registered the word "Tabloids" in a frame in respect of the same substances. These registrations were still in force. From the date of the first registration of "Tabloid" the respondents had made and sold drugs of the original size and shape and also drugs of various sizes and shapes, chiefly however of a biconvex form. They had continually sold their compressed drugs in connection with the word "Tabloid" or "Tabloids." In 1890 they ceased to use "Tablets" as a trade-mark altogether. Subsequently they began to manufacture a great variety of compressed goods besides medicines, such as foodstuffs, and in 1899 they registered "Tabloid" in classes 1, 2, 39, 44, and 48.

A. J. Walter and J. H. Gray, for the appellants.—"Tabloid" has become part of current literature. [They referred to the current dictionaries and periodicals.] A fancy word must not be descriptive: In re Van Duzer's Trade-Mark, 35 W. R. 294, 34 Ch. D. 623; In re "Bovril" Trade-Mark, 45 W. R. 150, [1896] 2 Ch. 600. "Tabloid" is not an invented word: Eastman Photographic Materials Co. v. Comptroller-General, 47 W. R. 152, [1898] A. C. 571; Field & Co. (Limited) v. Wagel Syndicate, 48 W. R. 390, 17 Rep. Pat. Cas. 266; In re Hannay's Trade-Mark 7 Rep. Pat. Cas. 46; Meaby & Co. (Limited) v. Triticine (Limited), 15 Rep. Pat. Cas. 1, 14; In re Grossmith's Trade-Mark, 6 Rep. Pat. Cas. 180, 37 W. R. Dig. 184; Linoleum Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn, 26 W. R. 463, 7 Ch. D. 834; Perry Davis & Son v. Harbord, 15 A. C. 316, 320, 39 W. R. Dig. 239.

Moulton, K.C., Neville, K.C., Levett, K.C., Sebastian, and Kerly, for the respondents.—It is no objection to a trade-mark that the owner has not used it on all his goods: Kodak (Limited) v. London Stereoscopic Co. (Limited), 20 Rep. Pat. Cas. 337; In re Chesebrough's Trade-Mark "Vaseline," [1902] 2 Ch. 1, 50 W. R. Dig. 170. In re "Uneeda" Trade-Mark, 50 W. R. 467, [1902] 1 Ch. 783, was held bad because the word was a mere misspelling of known words. In re Van Duzer's Trade-Mark has no application to a new word. In re "Bovril" Trade-Mark shows that where a mark has been openly used for many years, the benefit of any doubt ought to be given to the proprietor: In re Chesebrough's Trade-Mark "Vaseline"; In re Bass, Ratcliffe, & Gretton's Trade-Marks, 51 W. R. 86, 19 Rep. Pat. Cas. 529, 539.

R. J. Parker, for the Comptroller-General.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I think one may say generally of the law that it is now defined by Van Duzer's case as modified by the "Bovril" case. The question of fact here is, what did "Tabloid" convey to those who heard it in 1884? We have had quoted to us dictionaries and literary productions published between 1884 and the present time, and I do not think that that sort of evidence has assisted us much. In fact it has had a direct tendency to make our task more difficult, because it is difficult to eradicate altogether from one's mind the statements which have been made about the user of "Tabloid" and its meaning at the date of registration. I think, as appears from the judgments of Stirling and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ., in the Chesebrough case, that the court, when it has had to deal with a question of fact of this sort long after the date of registration, has laid it down that the presumption ought to be in favour of the persons who have had that registered trade-mark for that length of time; and the onus of proof as to what was the user of the word, and what it was understood to convey at the date of registration, ought to be thrown upon the persons who seek, after such a lapse of time, to say that the trade-mark ought not to have been registered. But I take it, if the evidence showed clearly that it ought not to have been registered at the date when it was, no presumption would justify us in keeping it on the register. Now, what did "Tabloid" convey at the moment of registration? It was a distinctive word and suggested the source of the goods covered by it. It was not a descriptive word. It was a fancy word. Having regard to the "Bovril" case it cannot be said that a word is descriptive because it might suggest some idea to the hearer. In fact when a man chooses his trade-mark his mind will naturally run on words cognate to the articles with reference to which the trade-mark is proposed to be registered. His next care is that the cognate word shall not describe the quality, form, or purpose of those articles. A really descriptive word must describe something which is materal to the composition—i.e., the quality, form, or purpose of the article. The person registering must be careful never to violate the rule that you must not adopt as your trade-mark any word whatsoever which would deprive the public of the full and free user of that word, when it is a known word, and especially when it is a known word in a particular trade. Even at the present moment there seems to be a great difficulty in saying what "Tabloid" is supposed to convey. If you take the meaning of the word "table," or "tablet," it does not suggest to my mind anything of the form of these tabloids. As a juryman I cannot express my conclusion in fact better than Byrne, J. He says: "I think the case is near the line; but treating it as a matter of fact in the particular case, I come to the conclusion that in March, 1884, the word was not 'really intelligibly describing the thing sold,' which is the way in which Lindley, L.J., in the 'Bovril' case puts the form of direction to the jury." I agree that you cannot say that the word is absolutely unsuggestive; but any suggestion which you derive from it is a very inaccurate suggestion as to shape, and an inaccurate suggestion as to a matter which was in no sense essential, or of any practical materiality in the articles to which it was applied. As to the previous user of "Tablet," I think the word did not really convey anything material about the article to which the trade-mark was to be applied. Then I do not think it can be said that, because the respondents registered "Tabloid" two years afterwards, their previous user of "Tablet" converted that which, but for such previous user, would have been an invented word, into a word which by that time had acquired a meaning. In my opinion the judgment of Byrne, J., is quite right.

STIRLING, L.J.—The meaning of "fancy word or words," as used in the Act of 1883, has been considered in Van Duzer's case and In re "Bovril" Trade-Mark, and by those decisions we are bound. In the latter case Lindley, L.J., says: "It would be altogether wrong for us to take the Act of 1883 and substitute for the words 'fancy word' 'a non-descriptive word.' . . . But I agree that a word which describes the article to which it is applied will not do. Let us therefore ask ourselves whether 'Bovril' is a descriptive word." Then later he says: "I think it is purely and eminently a question of fact." That is the process which we ought to apply to "Tabloid." I can only say that I entertain greater doubt than Byrne, J., and my brother seems to have entertained as to the result of the evidence in this case. My difficulty is this. Before 1884 "tablet" was well known in connection with medicines. Further, the respondents had, prior to 1884, made up and sold medicines in the form of tablets, which were, broadly, small quantities of medicine of somewhat globular shape. They had registered "Tablet," but had been advised that its registration could not be maintained, and had fixed on "Tabloid," which suggests a connection either with "Table" or "Tablet." The termination "oid" is not uncommon and means of a shape or kind similar to that directed by the initial part of the word to which "oid" is affixed. I feel a great deal of hesitation as to whether "Tabloid" did not mean a preparation made up, not precisely in the same form as that which had been hitherto designated as "tablet," but in a somewhat similar form, and that it is descriptive in this sense. But when a trade-mark is impeached after such a long time, the person who has had his trade-mark on the register for that long period, and has openly and largely used it, should have the benefit of any doubt. For these reasons I am not prepared to differ from Byrne, J., or my brethren, and I think that the appeal fails.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I feel to a large extent the difficulties of Stirling, L.J. If this case had fallen to be decided ten years ago, I cannot doubt that the mark would have been taken off the register. The real difficulty is in putting a meaning on "fancy." It certainly means something more than new or newly coined or "invented." The real difficulty is to say what more it involves. The present case is extremely near the line, but there is nothing sufficiently near to description to distinguish it from the "Bovril" case. Under these circumstances, I cannot say that Byrne, J., was wrong in declining to remove from the register a mark which had been on for nearly twenty years; and I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the respondents, Markby, Stewart, & Co.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Alsop, Stevens, Harvey, & Crooks, Liverpool.

Solicitor for the Comptroller-General, Solicitor to the Treasury.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) March 23, 24, 25.

HAMBRO & SON v. BURNAND AND OTHERS. (a.)

Principal and agent—Authority of agent—Underwriters at Lloyd's—Policy guaranteeing that drawer of bill will put acceptor in funds to meet it—Policy authorized by terms of agency, but made to benefit agent and not in the interest of principal—Liability of principal.

Where an agent, who is authorized to make contracts "for and on behalf of" his principal, has acted within the terms of a written authority given to him by the principal, but the existence of which was not known to the other party to the contract, the principal cannot, if the other party has acted bonâ fide, repudiate liability, although such contract was made by the agent solely in his (the agent's) own interest and not in the interest of his principal.

Decision of Bigham, J. (51 W. R. 652, [1903] 2 K. B. 399), reversed.

Appeal by the plaintiffs, a firm of London bankers, against so much of a judgment of Bigham, J., given at the trial of the action as was in favour of four of the defendants. With regard to Burnand, the other defendant, there was no appeal, judgment having been given against him at the trial.

The action was brought to recover £1,000—£200 from each of the five defendants—upon a guarantee policy dated the 1st of October, 1902, which was in these terms: "To Messrs. C. J. Hambro & Son. In consideration of your accepting at our request the drafts of Henry Gaze & Sons (hereinafter called the drawers) to such an amount as you may think proper, such drafts to be drawn and accepted within one year from the 1st of October, 1902, and in consideration of the premium of 1 per cent. paid to us by the drawers on the execution hereof (the receipt whereof we hereby acknowledge), we, the underwriters, agree that, if the drawers do not at or before maturity of any such drafts put you in funds to meet the same, we will within thirty days of receipt of notice from you of such default on the part of the drawers pay to you in cash the amount of such drafts, and will further indemnify and hold you harmless against all moneys, loss, costs, charges and expenses which you may have to pay or to which you may be put by reason of your having accepted such drafts, or by reason of any claims made by any company or person in respect of the transactions above-mentioned, provided that our liability thereunder shall not exceed the amount of our respective subscriptions hereto with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the time of payment being demanded."

Messrs. Hambro had been in the habit of making from time to time advances to Henry Gaze & Sons (Limited), the tourist agents, who gave as security underwriting policies in the above form. Burnand was an underwriter at Lloyd's, and formerly was directly interested in that company. This arrangement was by him with the plaintiffs that they should finance Henry Gaze & Sons (Limited). The other defendants were his "names," and were the names appearing with his own on the policies covering these risks.

On the 9th of October, 1902, the plaintiffs accepted a draft of Henry Gaze & Sons (Limited), which was secured by the policy now sued on, subscribed with the names of all the five defendants—the names being all subscribed in the handwriting of Burnand, at ninety days' sight, for £1,000. The bill fell due on the 10th of January, 1903, and Henry Gaze & Sons made default in finding money to meet it. Thereupon the plaintiffs gave notice to the underwriters, who did not pay, and the writ was issued.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The substantial defence of all the defendants other than Burnand, was that Burnand had no authority to sign their names to such a policy, their authority being expressly limited to what is commonly known as underwriting business at Lloyd's.

On this point Bigham, J., held in favour of the plaintiffs, being of opinion, after hearing evidence, that this was a class of business which was ordinarily done at Lloyd's. The learned judge decided, however, against the plaintiffs so far as their claim was against the present appellants, on the ground that Burnand in these transactions was not acting for the benefit of or in the interests of his "names," but for his own benefit, and under these circumstances the plaintiffs were not entitled to treat the names as principals. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiffs against Burnand only, and entered judgment for the other four defendants.

The plaintiffs appealed, and the defendants other than Burnand gave notice by way of cross-appeal against the finding of the learned judge, that the underwriting of such a policy as that sued on was within the ordinary course of business of an underwriter at Lloyd's.

Asquith, K.C., Scrutton, K.C., and Mackinnon, for the plaintiffs.—The evidence called at the trial proved that the underwriting of guarantee policies like the one sued on came within the ordinary business of an underwriter at Lloyd's. And the judge so held. Therefore the defendant Burnand was acting within the scope of his authority in underwriting this policy in the names of his co-defendants. The defendants other than Burnand cannot set up that they are relieved from liability because this contract made by Burnand with their authority was really made in the interest of himself alone and for his own purposes: Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. v. Durant, [1901] A. C. 240, 49 W. R. Dig. 41. The plaintiffs cannot be in a worse position because they did not see Burnand's authority or ascertain that he was acting as agent for the other names on the policy. Had they been shown those authorities it would not have been incumbent, even if possible, for them to have instituted an inquiry to see whether he was acting in the true interests of his principals. Bigham, J.'s, attention was drawn to the judgment of Nelson, C.J., the dissentient judge in the American case of North River Bank v. Aymar, (1842) 3 Hill 262, and he said that it appeared to be so much in point that he referred to it in some detail; but this point has been since then dealt with in other American cases which were not brought to his attention, and has been settled adversely to the view taken by Nelson, C.J.: see Exchange Bank v. Monteath, (1863) 26 N. Y. (12 Smith) 505; New York and Newhaven Railway Co. v. Schuyler, (1865) 34 N. Y. (7 Tiff) 30. Lord Brougham in his judgment in Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, (1849) 7 Moo. P. C. 61, at p. 74, expressed a decided opinion against the defendants' contention, and so does Lord Macnaghten, who adopted the view taken by the American Court in President, &c., of Westfield Bank v. Cornen, (1867) 37 N.Y. (10 Tiff) 320, when he gave his reasons in the Judicial Committee in the Privy Council in Bryant, Powis, & Bryant v. Quebec Bank, [1893] A. C., at p. 180.

Montaignac v. Shitta, 15 App. Cas. 357, 39 W. R. Dig. 178; In re Tiedemann & Ledermann Frères, [1899] 2 Q. B. 66, 47 W. R. Dig. 161; Story on Agency (9th ed.), s. 73, p. 91; and Summers v. Solomon, 5 W. R. 660, 7 E & B. 879, were referred to.

Lush, K.C., and A. J. Ashton (Isaacs, K.C., and Maurice Hill with them), for the defendants other than Burnand.—We submit, first, that on the evidence the learned judge was wrong in holding that the underwriting of guarantee policies was a class of business ordinarily undertaken by underwriters at Lloyd's. Therefore we say that Burnand had no authority to subscribe the names of the defendants for whom we appear to the policy now sued on. [COLLINS, M.R.—The decision of Bigham, J., on that question was a finding of fact, and as there is at any rate some evidence to support it, we cannot hold, even if that was not our own view of the evidence, that he was wrong.] Then we say, secondly, that the view of the law taken by the learned judge was right. There was no holding out of Burnand by his co-defendants as their agent to sign these policies. Therefore the defendants other than Burnand are not estopped from repudiating liability on any such ground. As between Burnand and his principals he was acting solely in his own interests, his object being to keep the company of Gaze & Sons, in which he himself was interested, afloat as long as possible in the hope no doubt that they would tide over the difficulties that have since overtaken them. No premiums ever appear to have been paid on any of the series of policies he underwrote, and he incurred very heavy liabilities on behalf of each of his co-defendants on one risk—the solvency of Gaze & Sons. It is suggested that he intercepted letters addressed to them to keep from them any knowledge of these policies. Any such concealment from principals by an agent puts the transaction at once out of the class that it could be argued the authority he had to subscribe these defendants' names extended to. If, therefore, although professing to be, he was in fact not their agent, the plaintiffs must take the consequences. The cases of Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 7 Moo. P. C. 61, and Bryant, Powis, & Bryant v. Quebec Bank, [1893] A. C. 170, turned on the doctrine of the law merchant, and are not in point. [ROMER, L.J.—The indorsement on the negotiable instruments there appear to have been "per pro," which would have been notice to the holder that they were signed under a special authority.] The plaintiffs here ought to have inquired whether Burnand had authority to subscribe the "names." [MATHEW, L.J.—No business at Lloyd's could ever be carried on if that was the adopted practice.] The circumstances here were such as to place the plaintiffs on their guard, and they must take the consequences of not making inquiries whether Burnand was acting bonâ fide in subscribing these policies.

Grant v. Norway, (1851) 10 C. B. 665; British Mutual Banking Co. v. Charnwood Forest Railway Co., 35 W. R. 590, 18 Q. B. D. 714; Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank, 28 W. R. 677, 5 App. Cas. 317; Whitechurch (Limited) v. Cavanagh, 50 W. R. 218, [1902] A. C. 117; Coleman v. Riches, (1855) 16 C. B. 104; Barwick v. English Joint-Stock Bank, 15 W. R. 877, L. R. 2 Ex. 259; Solomons v. Pender, (1865) 3 H. & C. 639, were also referred to.

Scrutton, K.C., replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—The question raised in this appeal is one of great importance, but I have no reasonable doubt as to what the decision of the court ought to be, nor do I think that anything would be gained by taking time to consider our judgment. [His lordship after referring to the facts as already stated, continuing, said:] There was no doubt that the indebtedness of Gaze & Sons to the plaintiffs and the aggregate of the liabilities undertaken by Burnand on these policies became in process of time very large, and ultimately, the amount secured by the policy of the 1st of October, 1902, not being paid, this action was brought.

The defendants other than Burnand set up two defences.

They said first that they were not liable because the authority given by them to the defendant Burnand was limited to the purpose of underwriting policies of insurance and carrying on the ordinary business of an underwriter at Lloyd's, in accordance with the usual custom of Lloyd's, and that the underwriting of guarantee policies, such as that sued on is no part of the ordinary business of an underwriter at Lloyd's. Whether that is so or not is a question of fact.

Secondly, they say that, as a matter of law, having regard to the inference of fact drawn by Bigham, J., as to the motives which led Burnand to underwrite the policy, and his relation to Gaze & Sons, that he undertook this liability on their behalf without their authority.

As to the first point, Bigham, J., who had the advantage of hearing the witnesses, has come to conclusion that he was satisfied that the underwriting of guarantee policies of this class was within the ordinary business of an underwriter at Lloyd's. It had to be admitted on the part of the defendants that the underwriting of what are called "solvency policies" formed part of that business. The only distinction between those policies and the so-called guarantee policies is that in one case the underwriter undertakes to pay in the event of the insolvency of a debtor, and in the other he undertakes to pay in the event of non-payment by the debtor. The question is one of fact, and it appears to me that there was evidence to justify the learned judge, exercising as he did the functions also of a juryman, in coming to the conclusion of fact at which he arrived.

I now come to the question of law which has been discussed before us. It has been contended for the appellants, that although express authority was given in writing, as in the present case, authorizing an agent to make such a contract as he has made, it is open to the principal to say that, nevertheless, if it appears, on inquiring into the motives which exist in the agent's mind, that he intended, in making the contract, to misuse for his own ends the opportunity given to him by his authority, and apply it to a purpose which, if the principal had known of it, he would not have sanctioned, then, because the agent was so influenced by improper motives, the principal is not liable upon the contract made by him. I should have said myself, apart from authority on the subject, that such a proposition could not hold water. I am somewhat surprised to find that, in an American case, a view favourable to it has been taken by one of the judges. I gather that it was in consequence of what was said in that case that Bigham, J., for whose opinion on a commercial point I have the greatest respect, was led to the conclusion which he adopted. The case of the North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill N. Y. Rep. 262, was cited to him, in which there was a difference of opinion between the judges, one of them adopting the view that, though an agent had acted within the terms of his authority, it was competent to the court to look into the mind of the agent, and, if he had misapplied his authority for his own purposes, the principal was not bound. The two other judges did not take that view. Bigham, J., after examining the reasons given in that case, came to the conclusion that the reasoning of the dissenting judge was the stronger; and not being apparently informed that since the case was decided the question had been mooted several times in America, and that ultimately the American courts have authoritatively laid it down as the true principle that, where a written authority given to an agent covers the thing done by him on behalf of his principal, no inquiry is admissible into the motives upon which the agent acted. It would be impossible for the business of a mercantile community to be carried on, if a person dealing with an agent was bound to go behind the authority of the agent in each case, and inquire whether his motives did or did not involve the application of the authority for his own private purpose. But the matter does not rest there, for the view ultimately established in the United States by a strong concatenation of American authorities appears to have been anticipated in England, and at length finally adopted in a recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. There is a very remarkable passage in the judgment delivered by Lord Brougham in the year 1849 in the cases of the Bank of Bengal v. Macleod and Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, reported in 7 Moo. P. C. 61, at p. 74. Those were cases of a power of attorney to sell, indorse, and assign promissory notes. Lord Brougham says: "But it is said that the power was given to do the acts in question on the donor's behalf. This is really only saying that, what the agent is to do, he is to do as representing the principal; as doing it on behalf of, or in the place and in the right of, the principal. But it is further said that, even if the expression be read as only amounting to this, the indorsement is to be only made for the benefit of the principal and not for the purposes of the agent. We do not see how this very materially affects the case, for it only refers to the use to be made of the funds obtained from the indorsement, not to the power; it relates to the purpose of the execution, not to the limits of the power itself; and, though the indorsee's title must depend upon the authority of the indorser, it cannot be made to depend upon the purposes for which the indorser performs his act under the power." That passage seems by anticipation to deal with the very point which was the salient point of the judgment of Bigham, J., in this case, and of the argument before us. In the case of Bryant, Powis, & Bryant (Limited) v. Quebec Bank, [1893] A. C. 170, Lord Macnaghten, in delivering the judgment of the Committee of the Privy Council, says (at p. 180): "Their lordships agree with Andrews, J., that the fact that Davies abused his authority and betrayed his trust cannot affect the bonâ fide holders for value of negotiable instruments indorsed by him apparently in accordance with his authority. The law appears to their lordships to be very well stated in the Court of Appeal of the State of New York in President of the Western Bank v. Conern, 37 N. Y. R. (10 Tiff.) 322, cited by Andrews, J.: 'Whenever the very act of the agent is authorized by the terms of the power, that is, whenever by comparing the act done by the agent with the words of the power the act is in itself warranted by the terms used, such act is binding on the constituent, as to all persons dealing in good faith with the agent, such persons are not bound to inquire into facts aliunde. The apparent authority is the real authority, their lordships will therefore humbly advise her Majesty that this appeal ought to be dismissed."

That being the clearly established law on the subject, it is unnecessary for me to go into the various matters relied upon by the defendants in relation to the question whether in underwriting the policy Burnand was acting for his own benefit and in his own interests and not in those of the defendants.

The appeal succeeds and judgment must be entered for the plaintiffs with costs.

ROMER and MATHEW, L.JJ., gave judgments to the same effect.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Parker, Garrett, Holman, & Howden.

Solicitors for the defendants other than Burnand, Merriman, Pike, & Merriman; R. A. Read, jun.; Ward, Bowie, & Co.; Church, Rendell, & Co., for J. B. Clarke & Co., Birmingham.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Warrington, J. April 27, 28.

In re WHEELER.
HANKINSON v. HAYTER. (a.)

Married woman—Advances—No separate property—Acknowledgment in 1894 of debt—Contract to pay—Executor—Retainer—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1—Will—Construction—Money on deposit—"Ready money."

A married woman will not render herself liable, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, by acknowledging, in 1894, advances previously made to her by a testator in respect of which she could not have been sued, although the acknowledgment would take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. In such a case the executor cannot retain the advances to the married woman out of such portion of the testator's estate as is bequeathed to her. A bequest of "ready money" does not include money on deposit at a bank withdrawable on fourteen days' notice.

By his will, dated the 24th of June, 1897, J. B. Wheeler gave certain property to trustees upon trust to sell and divide the residue of the proceeds and his ready money into four equal parts, and to stand possessed of the same for the benefit of his four daughters and their issue. The testator also divided other property specifically amongst his four daughters. Neither the will nor the subsequent codicils contained any hotchpot clause or gift of residue. The testator died on the 6th of September, 1902.

During his lifetime, the testator had advanced to his daughter, Mrs. Hayter, sums amounting to £1,784, none of which she had repaid. She had married her present husband in 1880, and had, on the 6th of August, 1894, signed as correct a document containing particulars of advances amounting to £722 which she alleged had been made to her by the testator prior to 1893, when she had no separate estate. She also alleged that she never intended to admit any personal liability on her part by signing the document.

A sum of £1,011 7s., part of the testator's estate, was on deposit at a bank withdrawable on 14 days notice.

The executor took out an originating summons to determine whether Mrs. Hayter ought to bring the sums lent to her into account as against her share, and whether the sum of £1,011 7s. passed under the disposition of ready money in the will or was undisposed of.

W. J. Lewin, for the executor.

Norton, K.C., and W. J. Whittaker, for Mrs. Hayter.—Mrs. Hayter had not at the time of the advances any separate estate. Therefore they were not debts for which she could have been sued, and so she was not liable to bring them into account.

Christopher James, for another daughter of the testator.

Rowden, K.C., and Cozens-Hardy, for Mrs. Asheton, another daughter.—The document of the 6th of August, 1894, was a good acknowledgment of the statute-barred debts within the Married Women's Property Act, s. 1: Wolstenholme's Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts (8th ed.), p. 292. The executor can retain or set-off the amount of Mrs. Hayter's indebtedness. Beneficiaries must account for all moneys received from the testator if they claim against the estate: In re Akerman, 40 W. R. 12, [1891] 3 Ch. 212; Courtnay v. Williams, 13 L. J. Ch. 461; Cherry v. Boultbee, 9 L. J. Ch. 118.

Bryan Farrer, for another daughter.

WARRINGTON, J., stated the facts and gave judgment to the following effect: The sums amounting to £722 admitted by Mrs. Hayter to have been advanced to her were not advances made to her, and she could not have been sued for them, for she was not a single woman nor had she any separate estate at the time the advances were made. Counsel for Mrs. Asheton said that if, after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, you find that which under the Statute of Limitations would be a sufficient acknowledgment of the debts, that would be sufficient to constitute a contract under the Married Women's Property Act. Further, he said that the document of the 6th of August, 1894, would satisfy that condition, although it could not, by itself, amount to an obligation covering the whole of the indebtedness.

In my opinion that is not the correct view of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893. For the purposes of that statute you must find a contract entered into by the married woman after the date of that Act. It is not sufficient to find an acknowledgment of a pre-existing debt, even although it would be sufficient to take the debt itself out of the Statute of Limitations. Section 1 of the Act of 1893 contemplates a contract entered into by a married woman, and then entered into for the first time. Here, in the first place, there is no consideration, and even if there were, the terms of the document are not sufficient to amount to a fresh promise the pay the debts. There is not, and never was, any debt for which Mrs. Hayter could be sued. I need not trouble about the Statute of Limitations, because it is admitted that these advances, if they were debts, would be statute-barred.

Now comes the further question: If there is no debt for which Mrs. Hayter can be sued, is there any right of the executor to retain this sum out of the benefits which Mrs. Hayter will take in the testator's estate? It has been contended, and In re Akerman has been cited for the proposition, that, although there was no debt for which Mrs. Hayter could be sued, the executor is entitled to retain the money, from the money coming to her out of the testator's estate. I quite agree that if there is a debt—in the proper sense—due by a legatee, the remedy for which is statute-barred, the executor would be entitled to retain funds in respect of that debt; but you have first to find that the legatee owes the money in question to the estate. Kekewich, J., states the principle thus in In re Akerman; "A person who owes an estate money—that is to say, who is bound to increase the general mass of the estate by a contribution of his own, cannot claim an aliquot share given to him out of that mass without first making the contribution which completes it." Therefore, the executor here has no right of retainer.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[His lordship also held, following Mayne v. Mayne, [1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 324, that the sum of £1,011 7s. was not ready money, and was therefore undisposed of by the will.]

Solicitors, C. F. Ingram, for C. J. Lacey, Bournemouth; Balderston & Warrens; Cox & Lafone; Lowe & Co.

K. B. Div. (Farwell, J.) June 9.

ROBINS v. GODDARD. (a.)

Building agreement — Architect's certificate — Defective work—Damages.

By a building agreement it was provided, inter alia, that the architect, who was appointed by the employer for the purposes of the agreement, should have power (a) to order the removal of any materials which were not in his opinion in accordance with the specification, and the re-erection of any work done with improper materials; (b) to direct the contractor to make good at his own expense, unless the architect should decide that he ought to be paid, any defects appearing within twelve months from the completion of the works, and arising in the opinion of the architect from defective materials or workmanship. The agreement also provided that the contractor should be paid under certificates to be issued by the architect, and that no such certificate should be conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of any work or materials to which it related so as to relieve the contractor from his liability to make good all defects as provided by the agreement.

The plaintiff, the contractor, claimed payment under the architect's certificates for work done. The defendant, the employer, counterclaimed for damages in respect of defective work and materials and the cost of re-executing such defective work.

Held, that, in the absence of any order by the architect, as provided by the agreement, directing the contractor to make good defects, the court had no jurisdiction, and that the counterclaim could not be sustained.

This was an action by the plaintiff, a builder, for payment for work done under a building agreement dated the 15th of October, 1902, against the defendant, his employer.

There was no defence to the action, but the defendant, by way of counter-claim, claimed compensation on the ground that the work done was defective and that materials had been used which were not in accordance with the specifications contained in the contract and that he would be compelled to re-execute such defective work.

The material clauses of the said contract were as follows:

Clause 16. "The architect," who was appointed under clause 3 of the contract, "shall during the progress of the works have the power to order in writing from time to time the removal from the works within such reasonable time or times as may be specified in the order of any materials which in the opinion of the architect are not in accordance with the specifications or the instructions of the architect and the substitution of proper materials, and the removal and proper re-execution of any works executed with materials or workmanship not in accordance with the drawings, specifications, or instructions, and the contractor shall forthwith carry out such order at his own cost."

Clause 17. "Any defects, shrinkage, or other faults which may appear within twelve months from the completion of the works, arising in the opinion of the architect from materials or workmanship not in accordance with the drawings and specifications or instructions of the architect, or any damage to pointing by frost appearing within the like period, shall upon the direction in writing of the architect, and within such reasonable time as shall be specified therein, be amended and made good by the contractor at his own cost, unless the architect shall decide that he ought to be paid for the same," and, in case of default, power was given to the defendant to employ another or other person or persons to amend and make good such work, and to recover any sums so paid by him from the contractor.

Clause 24 fixed the 31st of January, 1903, as the date for the completion of the works.

Clause 30, after providing that the contractor should be paid from time to time on the certificate of the architect, contained the following proviso: "No certificate of the architect shall be considered conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of any work or materials to which it relates, nor shall it relieve the contractor from his liability to make good all defects as provided by this agreement."

Clause 32 was the usual arbitration clause, and provided that the arbitrator should have power to open up, review, and revise any certificate given by the architect.

The plaintiff brought this action to recover the balance of moneys due to him on the architect's certificates. The defendant counter-claimed as above stated, no order or direction in writing having been made by the architect under clause 17 of the contract.

The question to be decided was, whether having regard to the facts as stated the court had jurisdiction to determine the issues raised by the counter-claim.

Duke, K.C., and Beddall, for the plaintiff, cited Lord Bateman v. Thompson, 2 Hudson on Building Contracts, 166.

Marriott, for the defendant.—The employer may question the work done apart from the architect's certificate. The proviso contained in clause 30 of the contract entitles the defendant to open up the architect's certificates. The disputed matters should be referred to an official referee: Lloyd v. Milward, 2 Hudson on Building Contracts, 454.

FARWELL, J., in giving judgment, said: So far as the action is concerned it is an action upon certificates given by the architect in relation to this contract, and it is really an undefended action, but there is a counter-claim that gives rise to the argument that I have heard. It depends on the construction of the contract, but inasmuch as the contract, I observe, is issued under the sanction of the Royal Institution of British Architects, and is on a printed form apparently in common use, it is, perhaps, a little important as regards what is the true view to be taken in this case.

Now, one approaches contracts of this nature with the knowledge that the employer on the one hand desires to employ a builder, and on the other hand that the employer, for his own protection, uses an expert, an architect whom he appoints, and who is usually imposed on the builder as the judge in relation to any matters which may arise in the course of the construction of the buildings.

In the particular case before me the builder can recover nothing except under the certificates given to him by the architect under clause 30 of this contract. Now that particular clause is qualified by a provision which, in my view, is made explicable by the former clauses in the contract and is not to be extracted, as counsel for the defendant wishes me to do, and treated as a separate sentence or read as something apart and by itself. [His lordship here read clauses 16, 17, and 30 of the contract, which are set out above.]

(a.) Reported by H. WOLCOTT WARNER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Reading these clauses together, to my mind, makes the contract perfectly reasonable and plain. In the proviso in clause 30, I should prefer, instead of the word "nor," coupling the two sentences, to read as follows: "No certificate of the architect shall be considered conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of any work or materials to which it relates so as to relieve the contractor from his liability under clause 17." This, in my opinion, is its true effect. If it were not so, it would be open to argument to say clause 16 tells you the architect may give these directions as to proper materials, &c., during the course of the work; he has given the certificate and so far as materials are concerned he must be deemed to have dealt with the matter by that certificate; and it might be contended that such certificate is final and no longer open to question. The proviso in clause 30 is inserted to prevent this; but that being so, it is only for the purpose of letting in clause 17. That this is so, appears to my mind to be absolutely and conclusively shown by the words "unless the architect shall decide that he ought to be paid for the same." It obviously makes the architect, who, as appears in clause 3 of the contract, is a nominee of the employer and is employed by him for his own protection as between the two parties, the referee as between themselves.

I do not think the present dispute is within the arbitration clause, and at any rate that question is not before me now; the point before me is this, that the counter-claim asks me to decide, either by myself or by the official referee, questions as to workmanship and materials which are alleged to be deficient and not in accordance with the drawings and specifications.

Now that is a matter which is provided for by this particular clause 17, and unless the architect not only expresses his opinion that they are not in such accordance, but also decides that the builder ought not to be paid for them, I do not see how I can possibly adjudicate in any way. I have no jurisdiction, and the result is that in my opinion there is no question of counter-claim at all arising in this action, it is a mere undefended action on the certificates, and judgment must go for the amount claimed.

Solicitors, Booth & Smee; Goddard, Stanton, & Hudson.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Channell, JJ.) March 4.

HILL (Appellant) v. PANNIFER AND OTHERS (Respondents). (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Recovery—Distress—Costs—Charges of taking, keeping, and selling the distress—Distress (Costs) Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 93)—Distress (Costs) Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17)—Distress for Rates Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14), s. 1.

The provisions contained in the Distress (Costs) Acts, 1817 and 1827, limiting the costs and charges of distresses for poor rates and certain other rates, where the amount due does not exceed £20, are impliedly repealed as regards poor rate, by the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, section 1 of which authorizes, in connection with the levy of distress for such rates, the levy of the "reasonable charges of the taking, keeping, and selling of the said distress."

This was a case stated by justices of the peace for the county of Suffolk.

On the 24th of September, 1903, a complaint was heard before the justices sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction at Hadleigh, wherein the appellant, Robert William Hill, alleged that the respondents or some or one of them, having sold or caused to be sold certain goods of the appellant to satisfy a poor rate for the parish of Bildeston, in the county of Suffolk, and certain costs and charges levied by distress upon the goods, on or about the 28th day of July, 1903, levied and received from the appellant and retained and took from the produce of such goods sold greater costs and charges than are mentioned and set down in the schedule to the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 93), to wit, a charge of 14s. for the expenses of an "auctioneer," contrary to the form of that statute, and of the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17), and the Distress for Rates Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14).

Upon the hearing of the complaint it was proved that the respondent Robert Pannifer was assistant overseer, and the respondents Robert Grimsey and Josiah Shipp, overseers of the poor for the parish of Biddleston.

Robert Pannifer, on the 2nd of July, 1903, obtained from two justices a warrant of distress against the appellant, directing Pannifer to make distress of the goods and chattels of the appellant, and to sell the same if within the space of five days after the making of such distress, the sum of £1 then due and owing from the appellant in respect of poor rate, and the further sum of 5s. 1d., the costs of obtaining the warrant of distress, were not duly paid by the appellant.

The respondent Robert Pannifer, acting under the warrant duly made distress upon the goods and chattels of the appellant and demanded payment of the moneys aforesaid.

On the 13th of July, 1903, the appellant paid to the respondent Pannifer the sum of £1 4s. 1d., being the sum of 5s. 1d. in respect of the said costs and 19s. in respect of the poor rate, but declined to pay the balance of 1s. claimed to be due in respect of the said rate.

On the 28th of July, 1903, the respondent Pannifer sold the goods of the appellant so distrained as aforesaid to satisfy the unpaid balance of the poor rate. After the sale a statutory notice of costs and charges, as required by 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, was given to the appellant by the respondent Robert Pannifer.

The sum realized by the sale was £1 5s., from which the respondents took and retained, in addition to the sum of 1s. for the rate, the following costs and charges: Levy, 3s.; taking, keeping, and use of room, &c., 6s. 3d.; auctioneer, 14s.; and paid the balance of 9d. to the appellant. The said sum of 14s. was one-third of a fee of two guineas paid by the respondent to an auctioneer in respect of the sale at one time of the goods of the appellant and of two other rate-payers against whom distress warrants had been granted.

In all the matters aforesaid Pannifer acted with the knowledge and consent and under the authority and at the instance of the respondents Grimsey and Shipp.

It was contended before the justices by the appellant that the costs and charges to which the respondents were entitled were limited by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, as applied to the levy of a distress in respect of poor rates by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827, and that the charge of 14s. for the auctioneer's fee was an excessive and illegal charge.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The appellant further contended that the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, did not entitle the respondents to reimburse themselves by appropriating any higher or other costs or charges than those which were authorized by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, as applied to proceedings for the recovery of poor rates.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended that the words of the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, s. 1, and the express provisions of the warrant of distress, which cited those words, entitled them, notwithstanding the earlier provisions of the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, and the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827, to deduct and retain from the proceeds of the sale of the appellant's goods, costs and charges—to wit, in the words of the Act, "the reasonable charges of selling"—in excess of and other than those specified in the schedule to the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, and that the last mentioned statute must be considered to be pro tanto revoked and amended.

The justices were of opinion that the respondents' contention was correct, and as they found that the charge of 14s. was a reasonable and proper charge, and one that by law could properly be made in the circumstances of the case, they dismissed the complaint with costs. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the justices were right in so upholding the respondents' contentions. If so, the dismissal of the complaint was to stand; if not, the case was to be remitted to the justices with the opinion of the High Court of Justice thereon.

The Distress for Rates Act, 1849, s. 1, provides as follows: "Whereas provision is already made by law for the recovery of the sum or sums at which any person is rated or assessed to the relief of the poor . . . but no provision is made for levying the costs and expenses incurred by the overseers of the poor . . . in the recovery of the same, be it therefore enacted that it shall be lawful hereafter for all justices of the peace, if in their discretion they shall so think fit, in any warrant of distress they shall make and issue . . . to order that a sum, such as they may deem reasonable for the costs and expenses which such overseers . . . or the person applying for such warrant shall have incurred in obtaining the same, shall also be levied of the goods and chattels of the person or persons against whom such warrant shall be granted, together with the reasonable charges of the taking, keeping, and selling of the said distress."

Robson, K.C. (Bodkin and Bruce Williamson), for the appellant.—The provisions the Distress (Costs) Acts, 1817 and 1827, limiting the charges that can be made in connection with the levy of distress where the amount does not exceed £20 have not been repealed by the Distress for Rates Act, 1849. At the time that Act was passed there was power to levy the charges by virtue of the power to levy the rate itself, which included power to levy enough to cover such charges. In Moyse v. Cocksedge and Another, Willes 636, it was held that parish officers levying a poor rate under a warrant of distress might retain of the goods sold the necessary expenses of the distress and sale. Section 1 of the Act of 1849 only gave the overseers the power to levy for the costs incurred by them in obtaining the warrant. Previous to that Act there was no power to give the overseers such costs. The provisions of the Acts of 1817 and 1827 were left in force as regards distress for rent and taxes and for certain rates not coming within the purview of the Act of 1849. The limitations of the charges imposed by the earlier Acts are still in existence. Even if that contention be wrong the charges made in the present case are manifestly wrong: Ex parte Arnison, L. R. 3 Ex. 56.

W. Stewart (Nolan with him), for the respondents.—The decision of the justices was right. The respondents were entitled to deduct and retain from the proceeds of the sale of the appellants' goods the reasonable charges of selling in excess of and other than those specified in the schedule to the Act of 1817. Both that statute and the Act of 1827, so far as the provisions limiting the charges, must be taken to be repealed by the Act of 1849, as the provisions of the latter Act are quite inconsistent with those of the former Acts. If it had been intended to preserve them the Legislature would have said so.

He cited Lumsden v. Burnett, 46 W. R. 664, [1898] 2 Q. B. 177.

Robson, K.C., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In my opinion this appeal fails. For the purposes of this proceeding we have here to construe section 1 of the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, and the other sections of that Act and the schedules. The preamble of the Act is as follows: "Whereas provision is already made by law for the recovery of the sum or sums at which any person is rated or assessed to the relief of the poor or is rated or assessed in any rate for the highways, in England or Wales, by distress and sale of his goods and chattels, and in default of such distress by commitment to prison until the same shall be paid; but no provision is made for levying the costs and expenses incurred by the overseers of the poor or the surveyors of the highways in the recovery of the same respectively." If it be a just criticism to say that this is not an accurate recital because it ought merely to have referred to the costs of the obtaining of the warrant, to my mind that does not affect the true construction of the enacting words. Of course the preamble ought to be looked at for the purpose of finding a guide to any construction which is doubtful or of deciding between two constructions which may be put upon the words. But it seems to me, even if counsel for the appellant is right, there is a clear enactment that "it shall be lawful hereafter for all justices of the peace, if in their discretion they shall so think fit, in any warrant of distress they shall make and issue for the levying of any sum or sums to which any person or persons is or are now or may hereafter be rated or assessed in or by any rate or assessment for the relief of the poor or for the highways in England and Wales, or in or by any other rate or assessment which by law now or hereafter is or shall be directed to be enforced or recovered in the same manner as a poor rate, or in any warrant for the levying of any arrears of the same, to order that a sum, such as they may deem reasonable, for the costs and expenses which such overseers or surveyors, or the persons applying for such warrant, shall have incurred in obtaining the same, shall also be levied of the goods and chattels of the person or persons against whom such warrants shall be granted"—that deals with the particular point which counsel for the appellant said had been left unprovided for by the existing enactments—"together with the reasonable charges of the taking, keeping, and selling of the said distress."

Then the statutory form of the warrant of distress again contains the words "together with the reasonable charges of taking and keeping the said distress," and directs that if they shall not be paid then the goods and chattels are to be sold, rendering the overplus on demand, "the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling, the said distress being first deducted." Counsel for the appellant contends that the earlier statute, the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, is still in force as extended to poor rate by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827. The Act of 1827 extended the Act of 1817 to "land tax, assessed taxes, poor's rates, church rates, tithes, highways rates, sewer rates, or any other rates, taxes, impositions, or assessments whatever." Therefore it may be regarded as a general statute. Having regard to the existence of that Act, counsel for the appellant suggests that the provisions as to the Act of 1849, as to the costs of distress, mean one of two things—either reasonable charges within the statutory maximum, or else they mean statutory charges.

I think it would require much clearer words than there are in this statute, and much clearer expression of an indication that the old statutory maximum was to be applied, to enable us to put that construction on the Act. It seems to me we must either find words which state that the charges are limited or are provided by law as now existing, or are to be charges not exceeding those that are already provided in respect of the levying of distress by virtue of these statutes. I cannot help feeling that the Act of 1849 is a special statute with regard to poor rates. It is a statute that is enacted in reference to poor rates, and I can well imagine that the Legislature, in dealing with poor rates, meant to give the overseers, subject to the charge being reasonable, a protection against the costs and charges they had to pay. I am satisfied that the construction contended for has not been put upon the charges which have been allowed to be levied under warrants for poor rates, and I can find no trace of any authority which says that with regard to the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, the maximum scale in the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, was intended to apply. I think the language of the statute is too strong for us.

I think that the statute did mean to say that the overseers of the poor should be entitled to have their reasonable charges for keeping, levying, and selling goods. The magistrates have found the charge of 14s. is a reasonable charge, and I think that this was in accordance with the statute providing that the overseers should have their reasonable charges. Therefore I think this appeal should not be allowed.

KENNEDY, J.—On the whole, though, I confess, not without very great doubt, I think the view my lord has taken is the preferable one. It is not very easy, I think, in many cases where there is no direct reference in any shape or form in a later Act to an earlier Act, to say whether the proper inference is that the later Act has overruled the earlier Act, and abolished it in so far as its directions or enactments are concerned, or whether we ought not to find some way in which both statutes can be applied to a certain extent, the one merely being treated as modifying the other. The argument, which I confess seems to me to be an argument of considerable power, which counsel for the appellant has used in this case is this: That while this last Act—the Distress for Rates Act, 1849 — provides that the magistrates may make an order for a distress that shall include the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the chattels, yet that ought to be read with the Acts of 1817 and 1827, which certainly have never been specifically repealed, and which, in cases of distress for poor rate, among other things, have enacted that these charges of taking and keeping shall not exceed a certain sum. It is suggested that the fair construction of the later Act is that the charges are to be reasonable, but not to exceed those which by the two earlier Acts have been thought by the Legislature to be sufficient; that the later Act means reasonable within these statutory limits, which are imposed by unrepealed Acts of Parliament. It is true that even the later of these Acts is now an old Act, and that costs and charges will vary, but on the other hand it does seem to me that there is a great deal at any rate to be said in favour of the view that when Parliament passes a later Act without reference to an earlier Act, and that earlier Act is one which has been in force for a long time and is therefore well known, one should try to construe the two consistently, if possible. Another, and it seems to me a still weightier argument was this: The poor rate affects a number of people not of great means with regard to whom Parliament has long ago, as these earlier statutes show, given protection in the form of a limitation of costs. Apparently the procedure for questioning the reasonableness of the charges has disappeared so far as the magistrates are concerned, if the view of the respondents be right. So far as I can see, and so far as the argument has called our attention to the sections, the right of a person who had unreasonable charges attempted to be forced upon him in the levying, would be by bringing an action to recover money which had been obtained by a sort of duress. In other words, he would be driven to the ordinary courts instead of having the speedier and cheaper method of going before the magistrates by such a summons as was taken out in the present case. I think, however, on the whole that we ought to face the conclusion that the Legislature has done two things which are inconsistent. It would have been very easy in the later Act, if it was intended to retain the old and well-known maximum, to have used such words as "the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the distress, not exceeding those at present by law allowed." That has not been said; therefore, on the whole, although I think there is a great deal to be said for the other contention, as regards the protection of those upon whom these distresses are made, which seems to me a serious matter, I think the case is strong enough to allow me to say, since Parliament has chosen in the later Act to use the words "reasonable charges" without reference to the past, or the existing limitation, that inferentially the earlier sections, so far as poor rate is concerned, have been repealed.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree. I think the only question we have to consider is whether the words of the operative part of the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, are inconsistent with the continued existence of a statutory limit on the charges for these distresses which had previously existed. To me it seems the words are inconsistent. It is inconsistent with there being a limit by way of maximum on the charges to be made to say that the person levying is to have his reasonable costs—the present case shows it. These are costs which do exceed that maximum limit, and which are found to be in fact reasonable. It seems to me, therefore, that the statute of 1849 is necessarily inconsistent with the continued existence, not of the other statutes of 1817 and 1827, but of those other statutes as applicable to poor rate.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellant, Lloyd-George & Co., for Birkett, Ridley, & Francis, Ipswich.

Solicitors for respondents, Salmon & Son, Bury St. Edmunds.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Kennedy, JJ.) Dec. 8.

HARDWICK v. LANE. (a.)

Gaming law—Sweepstakes—Illegal lottery—Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 119), s. 2.

A beerhouse keeper arranged a sweepstakes on his premises and offered certain prizes, but the amount of these prizes did not equal the amount subscribed as entrance money.

Held, that this was an illegal lottery within the meaning of section 2 of the Gaming Act, 1802.

Case stated.

At a court of summary jurisdiction an information was preferred by the appellant against the respondent, a beerhouse keeper, alleging that the respondent on the 27th of March, 1903, unlawfully and knowingly did suffer, exercised, kept open, and exposed to be played and drawn by numbers and figures and by other contrivances a certain lottery usually called a sweepstakes not then authorized by Parliament—to wit, a lottery for money prizes in respect of horses who should win, or run second or third to the winner in a certain steeplechase, contrary to the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided.

The following facts were proved or admitted:

The respondent is the proprietor of a beerhouse, and on the 24th of March, 1903, arranged for a sweepstakes to be held in connection with the Grand National Steeplechase. There were 61 entries, each person paying 6d. to the respondent. The respondent offered three prizes of 15s., 10s., and 5s. respectively. One of the conditions of the sweepstakes was that the winner of the first prize was to pay for two gallons of beer to be consumed in the respondent's house; the winner of the second prize was to pay for one gallon, and the winner of the third prize for two quarts. The sweepstakes was drawn for in the usual manner, and the prizes, less the price of the beer to be paid for, were paid by the respondent. The magistrates dismissed the summons on the ground that it was not a lottery within the meaning of section 2 of the Gaming Act, 1802. By that section it is provided that "No person or persons whatsoever shall publicly or privately keep any office or place to exercise . . . any game or lottery called a little-goe or any other lottery not authorized by Act of Parliament . . . upon pain of forfeiting for every such offence the sum of £500 . . . and every person so offending shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent of an Act passed in the seventeenth year of his late Majesty King George the Second . . ."

Avory, K.C. (Stutfield with him), for the appellant.—This is plainly a lottery. A sweepstakes has in all the authorities been held to be a lottery.

He cited Allport v. Nutt, 1 C. B. 974; Gatty v. Field, 15 L. J. Q. B. 408; Mearing v. Hellings, 15 L. J. Ex. 14.

J. B. Mathews, for the respondent.—It is essential to constitute an illegal lottery that the respondent should have made a profit. Here the profit was so trifling that it may be disregarded. The magistrates were therefore right.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This is clearly a lottery. If it be necessary to prove that the respondent made a profit out of the sweepstakes then it is clear that he did so, as the prizes awarded did not equal the amount subscribed; but in the absence of that evidence I should have been prepared to hold that the mere fact that persons were attracted to the respondent's licensed premises by means of the sweepstakes was quite sufficient evidence of profit. The appeal will be allowed, and the case must go back to the justices for them to convict.

LAWRANCE and KENNEDY, JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Blundell, Gorden, & Co., for Thornely, Worcester.

Solicitor for respondent, Ernest W. Moore, Tewkesbury.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

C. C. R.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Grantham, Bruce, Darling, and Channell, JJ.) March 12, 30.

REX v. HUMPHRIS. (a.)

Criminal law—Bankruptcy—Property divisible amongst creditors—Execution of deed of arrangement—Debtor absconding with property—Whether property of trustee or debtor—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 12.

The prisoner being in difficulties, on the 24th of April, 1903, voluntarily assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors. The assignment was expressed to be as between the debtor, the trustee, and the creditors, but was not communicated to his creditors, and it was executed by the trustee and the prisoner only. The trustee took possession of the business on the 25th of April. On the 28th of April the prisoner left England with £120, which he ought to have handed over to the trustee. On the 13th of May a receiving order was made against him, and on the 30th of May he was declared a bankrupt.

Held, that he was rightly convicted under section 12 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for having within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him quitted England and taken with him a part of "his" property—viz., £120, which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors, as no irrevocable trust of that sum had been created, the trustee never having got possession of the money.

Reg. v. Crease, 22 W. R. 375, 2 C. C. R. 105, distinguished.

Case stated by the Recorder of Banbury.

The prisoner was tried at quarter sessions for the borough of Banbury on an indictment charging him with a felony under section 12 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for having within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him quitted England and taken with him a part of his property to the amount of £20 or upwards—that is to say, a sum of £120 which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors. The prisoner, prior to the execution of the deed hereinafter mentioned, carried on business as a hay and coal merchant in Banbury. On the 24th of April, 1903, the prisoner executed a deed of assignment in favour of his creditors. The assignment was an indenture dated the 24th of April, 1903, and expressed to be made by the prisoner (therein called the debtor) of the first part, William Booth of the second part, and "the several persons and firms whose names and seals are hereunto described and set, being respectively creditors of the debtor, of the third part." The prisoner, as beneficial owner, assigned to the trustee all his property, including sums of money, the trustee being directed to sell the property and to pay to himself the costs of the sale and divide the residue among all the creditors. It was witnessed that the trustee and the creditors named in the schedule thereby released the debtor from all claims, but in case a receiving order should be made against the prisoner within three months the release should be void and of no effect.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The deed was executed by the prisoner and the trustee, but had never been executed by any creditor, nor was the name of any creditor or his debt inserted in the schedule. At the time the prisoner executed the deed he had in his possession the sum of £161, which he retained instead of handing it over to the trustee.

On the 25th of April, 1903, the trustee took possession of the prisoner's business, and continued it until the appointment of the official receiver under the bankruptcy hereinafter mentioned.

On the 27th of April, 1903, the deed was registered under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887.

On the 28th of April, 1903, the prisoner went to Canada, taking with him £120, part of the £161, the remainder having been spent by him between the 24th and the 28th of April.

On the 30th of April, 1903, a bankruptcy petition was presented against the prisoner. A receiving order was thereupon made on the 13th of May, 1903, and on the 18th of May, 1903, the prisoner was adjudicated a bankrupt. There was no evidence before the recorder that any creditor knew of the prisoner's intention to execute the deed, or that any creditor had ever in any way assented thereto, or that any creditor ever knew of its existence, or that the trustee had ever done anything under the deed beyond taking possession of prisoner's property and effects, and carrying on the business.

At the close of the prosecution it was submitted by counsel, on behalf of the prisoner, that there was no case to go to the jury, because, on the evidence, the said sum of £120 was, under and by virtue of the deed, the property of the trustee, and therefore, on the authority of Reg. v. Creese, 22 W. R. 375, 2 C. C. R. 105, the case was not within section 12 of the Debtors Act, 1867. The recorder declined, however, to withdraw the case from the jury, but consented to reserve the point. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the prisoner was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the second division.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the sum of £120 so taken away by the prisoner when he quitted England as aforesaid on the 28th of April, 1903, was "his property" within the meaning of section 12 of the Debtors Act, 1869.

By the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 12, it is provided: "If any person who is adjudged a bankrupt or has his affairs liquidated by arrangement after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months before such presentation or commencement quits England or takes with him, or attempts or makes preparation for quitting England and for taking with him, any part of property to the extent of £20 or upwards which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors he shall (unless the jury is satisfied he had no intention to defraud) be guilty of felony punishable with imprisonment for a time not exceeding two years with or without hard labour."

Vachell, for the prisoner.—This case is covered by Reg. v. Creese.

Sutton, for the prosecution.—Reg. v. Creese is distinguishable. The deed there was communicated to the creditors. Here no irrevocable trust was created, as the creditors never knew of the deed: Acton v. Woodgate, 2 My. & K. 492; Johns v. James, 26 W. R. 276, 2 Ch. D. 744. The trustee never had possession of this money, and it therefore remained the property of the prisoner.

Vachell replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 30.—Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., read the following judgment: This was a case stated by the Recorder of Banbury on the conviction before him of the prisoner on a charge of having within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him quitted England and taken with him a part of his property to the amount of £20 and upwards—that is to say, a sum of £120, which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors. The prisoner was proved to have so quitted England, but he had shortly before going executed a deed of assignment of all his estate to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, and it was contended on his behalf, on the authority of Reg. v. Creese, that the £120 was not part of his property within the meaning of the section. That case is undoubtedly somewhat similar to the present, and we have to consider whether it is distinguishable. There the charge was preferred under sub-section 5 of section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for fraudulently removing "any part of his property," and it is impossible, we think, to put a different meaning on the words "any part of his property" in section 12 to that which they bear in section 11, sub-section 5. But for the doubts created by the decision in Reg. v. Creese we should certainly have held that "his property which ought to have been divided amongst his creditors" included property which had been his, which remained in his possession, and the title to which, so far as parted with at all, had only been parted with by him in such a way as to leave it still divisible amongst his creditors in the event of bankruptcy. The concluding words in the section, "unless the jury are satisfied there was no intention to defraud," would be sufficient to protect the accused when he had acted innocently and not in contemplation of bankruptcy. We have, however, to see whether, if we so hold, it would be contrary to anything really decided in Reg. v. Creese, and for that purpose we have to consider the facts of that case and this.

In Reg. v. Creese the assignment of the 21st of December, 1872, had been acted upon, and was undoubtedly a genuine transaction, further advances were made upon it, Creese entered the service of Lakin & White, the trustees under the deed, pursuant to the terms of it, and for several months continued to act as the agent and bailiff of the trustees. The bankruptcy of Creese did not take place until the 17th of October, 1873, nearly a year after the date of the deed, and the removal, which was the alleged offence under section 11, sub-section 5, took place on the 14th, 16th, and 17th of October, 1873. The only ground on which the title of the trustees of the deed failed was that the deed of December, 1872, had not been registered as a bill of sale. It seems to us, therefore, that the court was right in holding that at the date of the alleged fraud the property really belonged to the trustees and not to Creese. We agree, therefore, that Reg v. Creese was rightly decided, the facts of that case being as stated; but if the reasoning of the court lays down any general rule which would exempt the defendant in this case from responsibility, we do not agree with it. The facts in this case appear to be different. Except by the trustee taking possession of the stock and effects the deed does not appear ever to have been acted upon. The £120 with which the prisoner absconded was, no doubt, money which the trustee under the deed might have claimed from him by virtue of his assignment, but he never did get it, as the trustees of the deed in Creese's case got the stock which Creese misappropriated, and at most the trustee here had a paper title. Nothing took place which would make this money—which the defendant was obviously keeping back from his creditors, and which he had in his actual possession, and was not holding for the trustee in any real sense—the property of the trustee under the deed executed three days before the absconding. We do not adopt the view that the deed was revocable so far as regards the property of which the trustee under it got possession, for the trustee had an interest in it. James, L.J., in Johns v. James says: "You cannot revoke the deed and cannot get the property out of the hands of the trustee until, at all events, you have satisfied all the charges and expenses he has incurred and any right he has acquired in the property. It is not a revocation of the deed, but it is a revocation of the directions given by the deed to the assignor's agent as to what he shall do with the proceeds." The deed was not revocable, but as to the money of which the trustee never got possession no irrevocable trust appears to have been created. We think the recorder was right in leaving this case to the jury, and that on the facts the £120 was, when taken away by the prisoner, his property which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors; and that any claim which the trustee under the deed might have to have the money handed over to him was insufficient to prevent the operation of section 12 of the Debtors Act, 1869. The conviction must be affirmed and the defendant serve the remainder of his sentence.

GRANTHAM, J.—I agree.

BRUCE, J.—I agree that the conviction should be affirmed, but I wish to add that I think the facts in Reg v. Creese were very different from the facts in the present case. In this case the deed of assignment was a voluntary deed executed by the debtor for the benefit of his creditors, and was not communicated to them, and was revocable by him except in so far as the trustee had acquired an interest in the property assigned, but so long as there were proceeds to meet the claim of the trustee for his expenses in acting under the directions of the deed, the debtor was at liberty to revoke the mandate contained in the deed so far as it related to the residue of his property. I think there was no evidence whatever to show that the trustee had acquired any interest in the sum of £120 in question. When, on the 20th of April, the debtor appropriated the sum of £120 which had never been in the possession of the trustee, I think he revoked the mandate to the trustee contained in the deed so far as it related to the bond. In the case of Reg v. Creese the deed was not a voluntary deed, for part of the consideration was a sum of £350 paid by one of the trustees to the debtor. The deed, therefore, in that case was not a revocable deed, and the money which the prisoner appropriated he had received as the servant or bailiff of the trustees, and the money was clearly the money of the trustee.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree.

Solicitors for prisoner, Crowther & Davis, Leamington.

Solicitor for Crown, Solicitor to Treasury.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 15.

HUNTER v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Deductions—Premium on policy of life insurance—Advance by insurance company of half premium—Premium partly paid with money borrowed from insurer at interest and charged on policy—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 54, Schedules D and E.

By the terms of a policy of life assurance it was provided that, if the assured should so desire, a part of the premium—viz., £33, should in each year be advanced by the insurance company, and that the money so advanced should, with interest thereon, be a first charge on the policy. The premium was expressed to be for £66 17*s.* 6*d. The assured paid in respect of premium each year* £33 17*s.* 6*d., and obtained a receipt for* £66 17*s.* 6*d., the balance of* £33 being advanced as provided for by the policy.

Held, that, under section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, the assured was not entitled to deduct from his assessment to income tax the sum of £66 17*s.* 6*d., as the amount of the annual premium paid by him for life insurance, but only* £33 17*s.* 6*d.*

Decision of the Court of Appeal (Lord James of Hereford dissenting) (51 W. R. 490, [1903] 1 K. B. 514) affirmed.

Appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Mathew, L.JJ.), (51 W. R. 490), which reversed that of Phillimore, J. (50 W. R. 618, [1902] 2 K. B. 255), on a special case stated by consent in a petition of right.

The suppliant, R. L. Hunter (appellant in this House), claimed the right to deduct from his assessment to income tax the sum of £66 17s. 6d., the full annual premium paid upon a policy of insurance upon his life, within the meaning of section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, the commissioners having allowed him to deduct only £33 17s. 6d. in each year.

The suppliant by a policy of assurance dated the 30th of June, 1896, effected an insurance on his life with the London Life Association (Limited) for £1,500. The policy recited that the sum of £66 17s. 6d., including an advance of £33 under the first clause thereof (being the premium for such assurance until the 30th day of June, 1897), had been paid to the association; and, inter alia, provided that a portion—namely, £33—of the renewal premium should, if the assured should so desire, be advanced by the association and be a first charge on the policy. By clause 4 it was provided that the association might at any time advance moneys for payment of any sum necessary to prevent the lapsing or avoidance of the policy, and that any such advance should bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum, reducible to 4 per cent. on punctual payment, and that any such advances and interest should be a first charge on the policy and the sum assured. The form of receipt received by Mr. Hunter was as follows: "Receipt No. 1625. The London Life Association (Limited), 81, King William-street, London, E.C. Received this 30th day of June, 1896, the sum of £66 17s. 6d. (including £33 advanced by the association), being the first premium on an assurance of £1,500, on the life of Mr. Robert Lewin Hunter, for which a policy No. 30540, and dated as above, will be issued in due course. C. D. HIGHAM, Actuary and Secretary. £66 17s. 6d. premium (including advance as above). Countersigned E. C. E. Sharpe."

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By agreement dated the 19th day of July, 1897, the suppliant, in consideration of £33 then advanced to him by way of loan, and of the same amount advanced to him by way of loan on the 30th of June, 1896, and of five further sums of the same amount to be advanced to him by way of loan, by the association under the terms of the policy, charged the policy and all moneys and benefits thereby assured as security for repayment to the association of the principal sums advanced and to be advanced, together with interest as mentioned in the agreement; and the suppliant further agreed to pay to the association the principal sums and interest, and also, as long as the principal sums or any part thereof remained owing, to pay interest thereon at the rate therein mentioned.

On the 19th of July, 1897, the suppliant paid to the association the sum of £33 17s. 6d. in cash, and the association lent to the suppliant the sum of £33, that amount making up the sum of £66 17s. 6d., the full amount of the renewal premium. A receipt was given in the words and figures following: "Receipt No. 1475. The London Life Association (Limited), 81, King William-street, London, E.C. Policy No. 30540. Due 30th June, 1897. Received this 19th day of July, 1897, the sum of £66 17s. 6d., being the amount of one year's premium, due as above, for the assurance of £1,500 by this policy on the life of Mr. R. L. Hunter. £66 17s. 6d. amount paid. C. D. HIGHAM, Actuary and Secretary. For one of the Directors of the Association. Countersigned, E. C. E. Sharpe."

On the 8th of July, 1898, the suppliant made a similar payment, and the association made a similar loan, which was applied in the same way. A receipt was given similar to that given on the 19th of July, 1897.

The association did not in any of the years 1896, 1897, and 1898 make any actual cash payment to the suppliant, but in each of such years the association debited the suppliant with the sum of £33 in the loan register, and in the renewal premium register he was credited with the full amount of the premium. The suppliant in each of the years 1897, 1898, and 1899 paid interest at 4 per cent. upon the total amount of the loans made by the association then standing to his debit in the loan ledger. In each of the years 1896-7, 1897-8, and 1898-9, Messrs. Hunter & Haynes, the firm of solicitors of which the suppliant was a member, were assessed to income tax under Schedule D in respect of the profits on their business as solicitors, the assessment being based on the assumption that the suppliant was entitled to relief to the amount of £33 17s. 6d. only, in respect of the premium for the said policy, and in each of the said years the special commissioners refused on appeal to grant relief in respect of the whole of the premium of £66 17s. 6d. The suppliant by his petition of right claimed repayment of the sum of £3 6s., being the income tax paid in respect of the sum of £33 in the three years in question.

The Attorney-General consented, in order to obtain the decision of the court in the promptest way, to waive any objection that might be raised, as a matter of law, that a petition of right did not lie, but such waiver was not to be taken as a precedent in other cases.

Phillimore, J., gave judgment for the suppliant, but this was reversed by the Court of Appeal.

Section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, provides that "any person who shall have made insurance on his life . . . shall be entitled to deduct the amount of the annual premium paid by him for such insurance from any profits or gains in respect of which he shall be liable to be assessed under either of the Schedules D or E of this Act."

Danckwerts, K.C., and Acland, K.C., for the appellant.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G. (Sir E. Carson, S.G., and Rowlatt with him), for the respondent.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—It appears to me that this judgment ought to be affirmed. The whole point is that the exemption or deduction, or whatever it is to be called, is to be allowed to the assured if the premium has been "paid by him"; and the whole reason I give for my judgment is that it has not been paid by him. I move your lordships that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I quite agree.

Lord DAVEY. — I am of the same opinion. No doubt the argument presented by counsel for the appellant based on the charge on the policy appears to have some weight, because it appears that, as between him and the insurance company, the premium has been paid. But that is not the question; the question is whether he has paid the premium so as to obtain the benefit of the exemption. Looking at the whole transaction, it appears to me that it was a scheme of some ingenuity whereby the insurance company invited people to insure their lives in their office on the footing of half the annual premiums for seven years not having to be found in cash, and the very merit of the scheme, as pointed out in some of the documents, in the invitation or prospectus, or whatever they are called, is that the insured will not have to pay in cash the whole of the premiums. In these circumstances I think the entry in the ledger is a perfectly accurate entry, that £33 17s. 6d. is paid and £33 remained "on credit." It may be that the insured was liable to be sued for that £33; but he was willing to run that risk, no doubt for the sake of obtaining the very favourable terms which were offered to him by the insurance company, who were not likely to spoil their business by taking such a step.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I have entertained considerable doubt in this case, and I express the opinion which I now do before your lordships with very great hesitation as to whether I am right or not; but on the whole I have come to the conclusion that this payment does in fact exist, and that therefore the appellant is entitled to succeed.

I am aware of the statement that this transaction as regards the £33 was described as "on credit"; that, of course, is substantially in favour of the opinion your lordships have expressed. But I am disposed to look rather at the real substance of the transaction as it is found in the charge on the policy. It is admitted that the parties have acted in perfect good faith in this arrangement which has taken place; whether it is an ingenious one or not, it is certainly an honest transaction, and there, as between the two parties, this sum is treated as an advance upon loan, and it is admitted that upon that document between them an action could have been brought, so that at any time if the company chose to take that course (although it may be one which they would not have taken in fact) they could have sued upon it.

It appears to me that there is nothing in the transaction that can be condemned either in the nature of the transaction itself or as being legally in fault. If one party chose to say to the other, "I will lend you money with one hand and receive it with the other," it seems to me that that was a transaction of loan with a charge of interest upon that loan; and that being so, it would be a "payment" in the same way, as has been mentioned at the bar, as if the money had been borrowed from a third person, or as if there had been two different departments in the same office in which the transaction had taken place.

For these reasons, with very great diffidence, I differ from my noble and learned friends who have expressed their opinion; for, looking at the case as a whole, which is full of difficulties—though it is a short one—it appears to me that the appellant is entitled to succeed.

Lord ROBERTSON.—I agree with the motion which has been proposed, upon the very simple and sufficient ground stated by my noble and learned friend on the woolsack. The whole argument of the appellant has been that, in a question as between the assured and the insurance company, he must be held to have paid the larger sum. But in point of fact, in a question of the extent by which his income was diminished during the year by the payment, there can be no doubt it was only by £33 and not by £66.

Lord LINDLEY.—I am of the same opinion. I think the judgment of Mathew, L.J., is absolutely unanswerable. I say this, bearing in mind that under the old common law plea of payment you could prove a plea by settlement of account on a balance payment; but that is not such a payment as is contemplated by the Income Tax Act at all.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Hunter & Haynes.

Solicitors for the respondent, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (In Bkcy.) (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — May 6.

In re O. C. S. (A DEBTOR). Ex parte THE DEBTOR. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Bankruptcy notice—Notice based on two judgment debts—Irregularity—Right of court to amend—Practice—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g); s. 143.

If a bankruptcy notice is founded on two judgment debts, and objection is taken to it on that account, leave to amend such notice will not be given by the court.

In re Collier, Ex parte Dan Rylands (Limited), 8 Morr. 80, 40 W. R. Dig. 21, followed.

This was an appeal by a debtor from an order of Mr. Registrar Linklater.

The facts were shortly as follows: The petitioning creditors of the debtor alleged that the debtor owed them a sum of £659 1s., which was the amount of two final judgments made against him in the King's Bench Division on the 30th of March, 1904, and that he had committed an act of bankruptcy in not complying with a bankruptcy notice, which had been served on him on the 30th of March. They presented the petition on the 12th of April. The notice was a notice requiring the debtor within seven days after service to pay the said sum of £659 1s., as being the amount due on the aforesaid two judgments in the King's Bench Division. The debtor opposed the making of any order, and disputed the debt. The registrar having made a receiving order, the debtor appealed, disputing the debt and the act of bankruptcy, and claimed that such notice was bad because it was based on two judgment debts.

H. Reed, K.C., and A. H. Carrington, for the debtor.—It is an invalid notice: In re Low, Ex parte The Argentine Gold Fields (Limited), 39 W. R. 181, [1891] 1 Q. B. 147.

Montague Lush, K.C., and H. Kisch, for the creditors.—The case of In re Low was quite a different case from this. The test is under section 143 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, under which the court can amend, and if no injustice will ensue, this order should be made. [STIRLING, L.J.—Section 143 appears to me only to apply to formal defects.] Here there are special circumstances. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Here is a case by Cave, J., and myself: In re Collier, Ex parte Dan Rylands (Limited), 8 Morrell 80, 40 W.R.Dig. 21.] It is too late to take this objection now, as the appellant did not do so before the registrar.

He also cited In re Wenham, Ex parte Battams, 48 W. R. 627, [1900] 2 Q. B. 698.

H. Reed, K.C., in reply.

He cited In re Bassett, Ex parte Lewis, 43 W. R. 427, 2 Manson 177 and 524, 43 W. R. Dig. 32.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—It is not in dispute here that this bankruptcy notice is defective, by reason of its being based upon two judgment debts; but having regard to the decision of In re Collier, Ex parte Dan Rylands (Limited), we ought not to amend this bankruptcy notice in this case. Speaking for myself, as the bankruptcy judge in that case, that case of In re Collier has been acted on for many years in bankruptcy administration, and I do not think we ought to depart from it now. Counsel for the creditors said in the course of argument that no injustice would result from allowing this amendment. I think we ought to be very careful about that. With regard to the costs, I think the successful appellant ought to have them as far as the appeal is concerned, but not the costs of the original hearing.

STIRLING and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Raphael & Co.; Beyfus & Beyfus.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — March 29.

In re CARR'S TRUSTS. CARR v. CARR. (a.)

Lunacy—Trust fund—Beneficiary of unsound mind not so found by inquisition—Maintenance of lunatic—Undertaking—Jurisdiction—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 116.

A lunatic not so found was absolutely entitled to a trust fund under a will and settlement. An originating summons was taken out in the Chancery Division for the purpose of having it declared that a certain part of the investments representing the fund might be expended for the personal benefit and maintenance of the lunatic, and also so much of the capital as the court should think fit. The fund was represented by some India Stock and mortgages.

Held, that if the trustees transferred the stock and deposited the mortgage deeds in court, and if the sister of the lunatic, who was also one of the trustees of the settlement, gave an undertaking to apply the income for the lunatic's benefit, the trustees might pay to the sister the income of the fund during the lunatic's life or until further order.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Decision of Joyce, J., who held the administration was more properly one in lunacy jurisdiction, reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Joyce, J.

The facts were as follows: By his will, dated the 24th of April, 1880, Mathew Carr directed that the trustees of his marriage settlement should, in pursuance of a power given to him therein contained, stand possessed of certain trust funds upon trust as to £4,500 for his daughter Caroline Emily Carr, subject to a trust for investment, and should, during a period of twenty-one years from his death, apply the income of said sum or of the investments thereof for her benefit. And the testator further added that the trustees should have absolute discretion either to apply the said income or any part thereof immediately for the purposes aforesaid or pay it or any part thereof at such times and in such manner as they should think fit into his daughter's hands, if they thought she was capable of managing her own affairs.

The testator died in 1882. The daughter was of unsound mind not so found and was living in an institution in Germany, where she had been placed in 1878. Since the testator's death, i.e., for twenty-one years, the whole of the income of the investments representing the £4,500 (except £164 18s. 5d.) had been applied by the trustees for her maintenance and benefit. The lady was under German authority, and she took out an originating summons, in the Chancery Division, in England, by her next friend against the trustees of the settlement and H. Carr, a son of the testator (as the person who might ultimately acquire under the will and settlement), to have the question determined whether proper directions might not be given for her maintenance out of the income of the said funds, and to have the residue thereof applied as required, and also whether she could be allowed by the court a certain portion of the capital, as the court should think fit, for her comfort and personal benefit, and also for administration by the court of the said sum of £4,500. The trustees were a sister and near relative, and the fund to which the daughter was entitled was represented by India 3½ per cent. Stock, and some mortgages. It was certified that it was unlikely she would recover.

Joyce, J., declined to make the order sought, as he was of opinion that, having regard to section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the application for maintenance should be more properly made in the lunacy jurisdiction.

The plaintiff by her next friend appealed.

Section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), is as follows: "(1) The powers and provisions of this Act relating to management and administration apply (a) to lunatics so found by inquisition; (b) to lunatics not so found by inquisition, for the protection or administration of whose property any order has been made before the commencement of this Act; (c) to every person lawfully detained as a lunatic though not so found by inquisition; (d) to every person not so detained and not found a lunatic by inquisition, with regard to which it is proved to the satisfaction of the judge in lunacy that such person is, through mental infirmity arising from disease or age, incapable of managing his affairs; (2) In the case of any of the above-mentioned persons not being lunatics so found by inquisition, such of the powers of this Act as are made exercisable by the committee of the estate under order of the judge shall be exercised by such person in such manner and with or without security as the judge may direct, and any such order may confer upon the person therein named authority to do any specified act or exercise any specified power, or may confer a general authority to exercise on behalf of the lunatic, until further order, all or any of such powers without further application to the judge. (3) Every person appointed to do any such act or exercise any such power shall be subject to the jurisdiction and authority of the judge as if such person were the committee of the estate of a lunatic so found by inquisition. (4) The powers of this Act relating to management and administration shall be exercisable in the discretion of the judge for the maintenance or benefit of the lunatic or of him or his family, or where it appears to be expedient in the due course of management of the property of the lunatic."

Micklem, K.C., and H. Greenwood, for the appellant.—The Chancery Division has jurisdiction, and this is a proper case for exercising it.

They referred to In re Watkins, 44 W. R. 609, [1896] 2 Ch. 336; In re Tuer's Will Trusts, 34 W. R. 751, 32 Ch. D. 39; Vane v. Vane, 24 W. R. 602, 2 Ch. D. 124; In re Brandon's Trusts, 13 Ch. D. 773, 28 W. R. Dig. 114; New York Security and Trust Co. v. Keyser, 49 W. R. 371, [1901] 1 Ch. 666; Didisheim v. London and Westminster Bank, 48 W. R. 501, [1900] 2 Ch. 15; In re Bligh, 27 W. R. 876, 12 Ch. D. 364. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In re Barlow's Will, 36 Ch. D. 287.]

L. F. Potts, for the trustees of the settlement.

THE COURT (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, STIRLING, and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ.), after conferring together, allowed the appeal, and simply ordered that the order of Joyce, J., refusing to give directions for maintenance, &c., should be discharged. Their lordships held that the stock must be transferred into court, and the mortgage deeds deposited in court; and that the sister, one of the trustees, must undertake to apply the income of the fund for the personal benefit of the plaintiff before they authorised the trustees to pay to the sister the balance of income in their hands, and the future income, for the purpose required, until further order. General liberty to apply reserved.

Solicitors, Carr; Scott; Smith & Gorringe.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — March 4, 7, 8.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. MAYOR, &c., OF WESTMINSTER. (a.)

Metropolis—Local government—Public health—Public convenience—Approaches—Subway—Trespass—Subsoil of roadway and footway—Injunction—Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 44.

By the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 44, power was given to a sanitary authority to construct and maintain public sanitary conveniences in situations where they deem the same to be required, and to defray the expense of providing such conveniences and of any damage occasioned to any person by the construction thereof, and the expense of keeping the same in good order; and for the purpose the subsoil of the road, exclusive of the footway adjoining a building, was vested in the sanitary authority.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A sanitary authority constructed under the middle of a public thoroughfare underground lavatories, which were so built as to infringe upon the subsoil of the plaintiffs, who were the owners of certain premises on one side. On each side of the street were staircases which communicated with subways, which ran from side to side of the street, and so communicated with the convenience. The subways were capable of being used as the means of persons passing from one side of the street to the other, and were wider than was absolutely necessary for persons using these conveniences. The statute did not empower the sanitary authority to construct subways.

Held, that, as it appeared from the evidence, the real object of the defendants was to construct a means of passage by which persons could cross the road in safety, it was a subway; that they had exceeded their statutory powers, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against the defendants.

Decision of Joyce, J. (50 W. R. 268, [1902] 1 Ch. 269), reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Joyce, J. (reported 50 W. R. 268, [1902] 1 Ch. 269).

The facts were as follows: The plaintiffs, by a conveyance dated the 26th of July, 1886, purchased certain freehold messuages and tenements, Nos. 34, 35, and 36, Parliament-street, and Nos. 11 and 12, Bridge-street, Westminster, occupying a portion of the corner house as building and offices. At the date of this conveyance the footway pavement in Parliament-street was twelve feet wide opposite to these premises. There were certain vaults belonging to the premises in Parliament-street under the pavement and projecting into the roadway. In 1899 Parliament-street was widened by the then local authority, and the footway pavement was increased to a width of twenty-one feet. A few years ago, the defendants considered the advisability of constructing certain public conveniences for the public and strangers visiting that part of London. They first of all thought that the north side of Parliament-street would be best, and hoped to be able to obtain some public authority to construct one, but soon abandoned it on account of the difficulty with regard to the traffic. In November, 1900, the defendants, as the sanitary authority of the district, constructed certain underground sanitary conveniences in the centre of Parliament-street, and provided them with approaches by means of a subway from either side of the street, with staircases down to them at either end, at or near the edge of the pavement. One of these staircases was opposite the plaintiffs' premises, and was situated partly in the roadway and extended for thirty-three feet along the footway, being fenced off from it and the roadway by an iron railing. This staircase to the to the extent of 2ft. 9in. was within the line of kerbstones of the pavement as altered in 1899. The wall of the staircase was quite close to the wall of the plaintiff's vault. The height of the subway was eight feet, and ten feet wide for its whole length. In the course of these operations, part of the subsoil of the plaintiffs, both under the footway and the road, had been used by the defendants.

The plaintiffs claimed that by the conveyance of 1886 the land to the centre of the roadway belonged to them, and they contended that the defendants had committed a trespass, and that the free access of the highway was interfered with by placing this staircase and railing opposite their premises, that the defendants had no power under the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 44, to make subways under the street, and therefore that the act of the defendants was ultra vires.

The plaintiffs further claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing their trespass upon the plaintiffs' premises by permitting the subway, staircase, and railings to remain; or in the alternative an injunction to restrain the defendants from so causing an obstruction to their use of the highway to the peculiar damage of the plaintiffs.

The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title to the soil to the middle of the roadway, and pleaded justification of their act by reason of their statutory powers under section 44 of the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891.

Section 44 of the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), is as follows: "(1) Every sanitary authority may provide and maintain public lavatories and ashpits and public sanitary conveniences other than privies, in situations where they deem the same to be required, and may supply such lavatories and sanitary conveniences with water, and may defray the expense of providing such lavatories, ashpits, and sanitary conveniences, and of any damage occasioned to any person by the erection or construction thereof, and the expense of keeping the same in good order, as if they were expenses of sewerage. (2) For the purpose of such provision the subsoil of any road, exclusive of the footway adjoining any building or the curtilage of a building, shall be vested in the sanitary authority."

Joyce, J., in the course of his judgment, held that the defendants' act was not ultrà vires. Their primary object was the construction of the conveniences with the requisite and proper means of approach. [His lordship referred to Pratt's Law of Highways (14th ed.), p. 39; Elphinstone, Norton, & Clarke on the Interpretation of Deeds, at p. 179; and Beckett v. The Corporation of Leeds, 20 W. R. 454, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 421, with reference to the question as to the vesting of the soil of the highway up to the middle of the road in the adjacent owners]. He granted an injunction, however, against the defendants for the removal of that portion of the staircase which projected over the plaintiffs' land to the extent of 2ft. 9in., but directed it to be stayed for six months, with liberty to apply to the judge in chambers to extend that period in the event of an appeal from his decision, and he further stated that in his opinion the result was most unsatisfactory, as he could not help suspecting that the land in question did not really belong to the plaintiffs, and that this order would do them no good; and also he could not compel the defendants to restore the old line of the kerb as it existed at the end of 1899. He made no order as to costs.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Further negotiations took place, which, however, proved abortive, and the appeal came on for hearing.

Younger, K.C., Montague Shearman, K.C., and Eustace Hills, for the appellants.—The correspondence and the evidence show that the scheme was originally one for a subway, and the convenience was only subsidiary. In making the convenience the defendants have exceeded their powers in two ways—(i.) by burrowing under the soil of the plaintiffs in a place where it was not necessary for the entrances, and (ii.) by making two entrances instead of one. The defendants are not justified under section 44 of the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891. The effect of so exceeding their powers is to make them trespassers, ab initio, however lawfully they may have entered on the work.

They cited Hickman v. Maisey, 48 W. R. 385, [1900] 1 Q. B. 752, 48 W. R. Dig. 68; The Mayor, &c., of Tunbridge Wells v. Baird, [1896] A. C. 434, 45 W. R. Dig. 92; Harrison v. Duke of Rutland, 41 W. R. 322, [1893] 1 Q. B. 142, 41 W. R. Dig. 86. [STIRLING, L.J., referred to Stockton and Darlington

Railway Co. v. Brown, 8 W. R. 708, (1860) 9 H. L. Cas. 246, 8 W. R. H. L. Dig. 6.] [COZENS-HARDY, L.J., referred to Dodd v. The Salisbury and Yeovil Railway Co., 1 Giff. 158, 7 W. R. Ch. Dig. 67.]

Hughes, K.C., and Dighton Pollock, for the respondents.—The learned judge was right. It was admitted at the trial that the conveniences were in a suitable place, and the case was decided on the footing of this being a convenience plus a subway: London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co. v. Truman, 34 W. R. 657, 11 App. Cas. 45, 34 W. R. Dig. 131. It is said by the appellants that, supposing the corporation have power to make a convenience, they are to be prevented from doing it because it might involve the making of something besides. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—You have no authority to make these long approaches. If you had, you might extend them even as far as Charing Cross.] The authority to make the convenience implies power to make a necessary approach. The sanitary authority must exercise its discretion bonâ fide and make entrances where they can be best used by the public. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—There is no necessary implication of a right to make a long subterranean approach. When you say "bonâ fide," do you mean that the corporation is acting bonâ fide, in accordance with the duty imposed on them by statute?] Yes. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Suppose the surveyor of the corporation told them that a certain situation would do as well as another for a subway to the convenience, would the corporation, acting on that advice, be acting bonâ fide in accordance with the duty imposed on them by statute?] If this were the best place, there could be no want of bona fides. The proper authority did select this spot, and there is no evidence to show that there was any other spot available. The entrance to the convenience is just as much at the discretion of the authority as the situation. It is not necessary to take the shortest way to get in, the power given to the local authority by the Act does not give that, the convenience of getting there must be considered. If they are making conveniences with certain entrances, and these entrances form a subway, that fact is quite immaterial. Here it is the duty of the local authority to make the most suitable access to these conveniences, and if the corporation think the entrance from the footway is more convenient than from the road, they have not only the right, but are under a duty. These are entrances for access. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The word "subway" is constantly used in respect of bridges.] Yes; they are simply entrances to these conveniences from the nearest possible spot: Wilkinson v. Hull, &c., Railway and Dock Co., 30 W. R. 617, 20 Ch. D. 323, 30 W. R. Dig. 53, 175; Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare Local Board, 37 W. R. 121, 40 Ch. D. 55, 37 W. R. Dig. 114. Here the words of the Act are similar. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—May I say shortly that the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway v. Truman really was an action brought to restrain the user of land for that purpose, but you did not acquire this land for a statutory purpose, and so that case is against you.] Only the local authority can decide what is the most convenient mode of access. As the corporation have power under section 44 to make conveniences, they must have approaches, and it is purely a question of the plan of construction.

Younger, K.C., in reply.

He cited Goodson v. Richardson, 22 W. R. 337, L. R. 9 Ch. 221, 22 W. R. Dig. 121.

[VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Battersea Vestry v. County of London and Brush Provincial Electric Lighting Co., [1899] 1 Ch. 474.]

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—So far as the objects of the vestry, who were the predecessors of the Corporation of the City of Westminster, and the objects of the corporation are concerned, I have a good deal of sympathy with them, and I cannot doubt myself but that they acted in good faith in this sense, that their desire was a desire to do that which might be best for the public. Of their good faith in that sense I have not the slightest doubt. Moreover, I think that they rather drifted into the position which they ultimately took up than took that position up delib-rately. Their first object was to make a provision for the comfort and convenience of strangers visiting this part of the metropolis. It is known that a great many persons of all nations, as well as the inhabitants of this country, go to see the Houses of Parliament and Westminster Abbey, and the desire at first was that some accommodation of this sort should be provided for those visitors; and it was desired to provide it somewhere near the Abbey or the Houses of Parliament. There was a difficulty about that. The vestry could not do it without obtaining certain consents which they could not get. Then the notion seems to have occurred to them that they might provide this accommodation at some point more to the north than the Houses of Parliament and Westminster Abbey, and that, inasmuch as a considerable number of carriage-ways converge in that direction, the visitors and others coming from Westminster Abbey or the Houses of Parliament might get there by a subway. Then it seems to have occurred to somebody that if they had a subway there it was just as well to have a system of subways. They found, when they came to deal with this matter, that there was great difficulty in arranging for it, and they then seem to have given up the notion of a convenience to be established in Victoria-street, or in that neighbourhood, or, as was at one time thought, at Great George-street, and it seems to have occurred to them that it would be a good place to have a convenience at the southern end of Parliament-street. Then it occurred to them that it would be a very good position to place that convenience, if they could place it, somewhere adjacent to a subway, and get some public authority—the First Commissioner of Works, and one other authority, I think, were asked about it—to make the subway for them. Then their notion was to make a convenience which should have its entrance from, and its exit to, this subway, which they hoped to persuade other people to make. I think one gets the plainest indication of this view in the minute of the 27th of July, 1898, which I find in the extracts from the minutes of the United Vestry of St. Margaret's and St. John's. It runs thus: "Parliament-street and Parliament-square subway and convenience.—The surveyor has submitted a plan showing a proposal for the formation of a subway to facilitate vehicular traffic and to provide a safe crossing for foot passengers under Parliament-street and Parliament-square in connection with the widening of the first-named thoroughfare, and embracing in the scheme a project for the construction of a large convenience." Then it goes on: "The committee recommend that the vestry give their approval in principle to the proposition, and that the scheme be submitted to the First Commissioner of Works for his consideration, with an intimation that the vestry would undertake the construction and maintenance of the convenience." That was on the 27th of July, 1898. On the 11th of January, 1899, there is a further minute: "In reference to the proposal for the construction of a convenience and subway at the south end of Parliament-street, and to the representations made in the matter to the First Commissioner of Works by direction of the vestry on the 27th of July last, it has now been reported by the surveyor that the department does not intend to take any steps to provide the suggested subways, and has expressed the opinion that the construction of the convenience should not be commenced until after the coming Session of Parliament." That, to my mind, shows very plainly how this matter was initiated—how at first the vestries had no notion of making the subway themselves, and no notion of doing anything more than availing themselves of the subway when it should come to be made, as a place into which the exit from which the conveniences should be made, and from which the entrance should be made. In this state of things which has come about, it seems to me quite clear that eventually the corporation determined that they would make the subway themselves, from which the entrance was to be to the convenience, and into which the exit was to be.

Now, for the moment, I will not say any more about the evidence which, to my mind, shows conclusively that that was the truth, but I will deal for a moment with what the powers of the authority were under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and in particular section 44. [His lordship read that section, and continued:] My view of that section is, first, that I do not think that subsection 2 really intends that there should be vested in the sanitary authority immediately so much of the subsoil as could possibly be used for the purposes mentioned, but I think that what that section seems to point to is, that if the sanitary authority in fact do use the subsoil for this purpose, then ipso facto the subsoil shall vest in the sanitary authority. I mention that because, if that is the right view, it seems to me to negative altogether the idea that the sanitary authority are to acquire the land and pay for it, or pay compensation for it, in any shape whatsoever. I do not think, if that is the right view, that it could be that the words, "may defray the expense . . . of any damage occasioned to any person by the erection or construction thereof," could possibly cover the money payment in respect of the vesting of the land taken in the sanitary authority. That is of some importance, although, in the view that I take of this case, it is not essential that I should determine the matter now. But I think it right to mention that this view which I have taken of the construction of this section might be of importance if one had to decide whether or not the sanitary authority were intended to be the judges of what land should be taken, and how much of it, because when the House of Lords had to deal with a similar question in Stockton and Darlington Railway Co. v. Brown, 8 W. R. 708, (1860) 9 H. L. Cas. 246, I find in the speech of Lord Cranworth these words: "Some general propositions admit of no doubt. In the first place, I think it clear that when the Legislature authorizes railway directors to take, for the purposes of their undertaking, any lands specially described in their Act, it constitutes them the sole judges as to whether they will or will not take those lands, provided only that they take them bonâ fide with the object of using them for the purposes authorized by the Legislature, and not for any sinister or collateral purpose. This is the construction to be put on all such legislative powers, whether the language of the Act is that the company may take so much of the lands as is necessary for the undertaking, or so much as is required or is expedient to be taken, or simply (as in this case) that the company may take lands for the purposes of the undertaking. In such cases the Legislature, having provided what it considers sufficient means for securing adequate compensation to the owners of the land, leaves it to those interested in the undertaking to say to what extent it will be useful to them to exercise their statutable powers." I am not quite sure myself—assuming it to be an essential part of Lord Cranworth's definition as to the occasions on which the company, or others, taking the land, have jurisdiction to decide to what extent they will take the land, that the land so taken shall be taken under the condition that there is secured to the landowner adequate compensation for the taking of the land—that this is a case in which one could say that that was true, because for reasons that I have already given I have great doubts whether the words in section 44 as to damage do secure adequate compensation to the landowner. But I do not propose to decide that question or enter into it, because in my judgment it is not necessary in this case to do so. I say that it is not necessary in this case to do so, because, in my judgment, in the present case, it is not true to say that the corporation have taken this land, which they have taken, with the object of using it for the purposes authorized by the Legislature. If the language of Lord Campbell, who delivered the first judgment, is looked at, as well as the judgment of Lord Cranworth, to which I have been referring, both of them affirm in the clearest possible manner that if a company or other authority purporting to acquire the land under the powers of the Act of Parliament is not acquiring it for the purposes mentioned, but is acquiring it for other and different purposes, then the duty of the court would be to restrain that authority. Lord Campbell's words are: "If it had been proved that the company was acting malâ fide, and trying under the powers of the Act of Parliament to get possession of lands of Brown, which were to be applied to other and different purposes, I think the court would have been justified in interfering by injunction," and Lord Cranworth says precisely the same thing.

Now I want to say one word about mala fides. Lord Campbell uses the words "malâ fide." Joyce, J., said that he could not find on the evidence here that the corporation or the vestry, or either of them, acted otherwise than bonâ fide. I think that when Lord Campbell says here "was acting malâ fide, and trying under the powers of the Act of Parliament to get possession of lands which were to be applied to other and different purposes" than those authorized by the Act of Parliament, he meant merely to explain there what would be mala fides. You are acting malâ fide if you are seeking to acquire and are acquiring lands for a purpose not authorized by the Act of Parliament. In such a case it is right to restrain persons who are misapplying the powers of an Act of Parliament. Now, as I have already said, my view is that the defendants here, and their predecessors did acquire these lands for purposes not justified by the Act. It really was hardly denied during the argument, that the defendants did construct this approach, as it has been called, of dimensions which were wider than would be required for the approach to a sanitary convenience, and which were suitable for a subway. It also really was hardly denied that in so doing they did it for the very purpose that this subway might be used as a thoroughfare. They have no parliamentary authority to acquire land for the purpose of making a subway, and, under those circumstances, it seems to me that they ought to be restrained. I have said that in argument it was hardly denied that the facts were such as I have stated. But really it could not be denied in the face of two such letters as the letters of the 20th of September, 1900, and the 4th of December, 1900. The letter of the 20th of September, 1900, written to the solicitor of the London and North-Western Railway Co., runs thus: "I am constructing on behalf of the Westminster Vestry, and in accordance with their directions, a subway from one side of Parliament-street opposite your offices to the western side which is approached by staircases on footpaths. Unfortunately this will necessitate the acquiring by lease or purchase a portion of your vault. I should therefore feel obliged if you would inform me what your company would require for assisting in giving a great convenience to the public at so dangerous a crossing and enclose a plan."

Now, as to that letter I wish to say that it seems to me couched in most accurate language, and exactly describes the true facts, and also recognizes the legal consequences following upon the adoption of the course indicated by the letter. Then we come to the letter of the 4th of December, 1900, which is again written to the solicitor of the London and North-Western Railway Co.: "Your letter of the 19th ultimo on the subject of the works in progress at the south end of Parliament-street was laid before the Works, Sewers, and Highways Committee of the City Council at their last meeting, when I was directed to explain that the intention is the construction of a subway to facilitate pedestrians crossing from one side to the other of a thoroughfare of great width, and very considerable traffic, an object with which the committee consider your company will be in the fullest accord. The formation of an entrance at the position in question is necessarily obligatory to give proper effect to the scheme. Admission to the conveniences which will be accessible from the subway could otherwise have been provided from the refuges above them. I may add for your information that the plan and project generally received the approval of Her Majesty's Office of Works."

Now, in the face of those letters it is not to be wondered at that there was considerable hesitation in arguing that the object and purpose which the Corporation of Westminster had in view here was not the construction of a subway. We find an argument about whether the Act of Parliament authorized or justified the taking of the subsoil for the purpose of making approaches to the sanitary convenience—I shall say one word about that in a moment—but let me assume to the full that the Act of Parliament does justify that. It only justifies such a course in a case where the making of the approach where it is made is really necessitated by the condition of access to and egress from the convenience. But how can it be said to be so here, when this very letter tells us that admission to the convenience which will be accessible from the subway could otherwise have been provided from the refuges above? It ceases, if that is so, to be true that these subways have in fact been constructed as approaches to the sanitary convenience. It is merely that these subways having been built by the Westminster Corporation, they supposed that it would be convenient that there should be placed sanitary conveniences, the access to and egress from should be in a subway which was being constructed by the corporation.

With regard to the approaches I agree with a great deal that counsel for the respondent said. I think that where you are to have underground conveniences you must have approaches other than mere access (entrance to) and egress (exit from) them, because in the nature of things you must have some stairs or some slope, which will occupy considerable lateral space, leading you to immediate proximity to the situation of the conveniences. Therefore I think that you must have an approach, and I think probably that if the corporation or other sanitary authority had really fixed upon a particular passage as affording a proper approach for the conveniences as such, it would not have been right for us to review their discretion in that respect. But no such question arises in the present case if you arrive at the conclusion that I have arrived at, in fact which I cannot put better than this, that the true position of affairs is accurately described in the letter of the 4th of December, 1900, which I have just read.

Under these circumstances, I think that this appeal ought to be allowed. I think that the remedy which should be given to the plaintiffs here should be wider than that which Joyce, J., gave. Now, what is the best way of giving this remedy? As I said before, one wishes, in giving this remedy, to give it in such a manner as shall be least detrimental to the public. There is the subway; there are the conveniences. Whether they are in a convenient position or not it is not for me to say—the sanitary authority will consider that. But I have no doubt that, apart from the conveniences, the subway at the present moment is a considerable convenience to pedestrians crossing that wide thoroughfare. Under these circumstances, although I think that we ought not to limit our injunction to what has been called the excess of 2ft. 9in., yet I want to give an opportunity for the defendants, the corporation, to do that which I am sure they would wish to do—that which is most for the benefit of the public, and at the same time consistent with the law as we lay it down. If we now say that this is a case in which it may be right ultimately to grant an injunction, we can yet give to the corporation an opportunity of making or undertaking to make alterations which will relieve us from the necessity of granting any injunction at all. If we hold our hand in that way and give to the corporation liberty to apply to us—of course the plaintiffs must have liberty to apply in case there is delay—it may be that the corporation will satisfy us that they have either made, or are immediately going to make, such alterations as will justify us in saying we shall not grant an injunction at all.

I think that is all I have to say at present, except that I take it for granted that the plaintiffs will, in a matter of this sort, facilitate the work which the corporation has to do, and will be prompt and ready to agree to any alterations which may reasonably and properly be suggested by the corporation.

STIRLING, L.J.—In this case the defendants, the Corporation of the City of Westminster, purporting to act under statutory powers conferred on them as the sanitary authority within the city of Westminster, have erected two subterranean constructions at the south end of Parliament-street, one being a public sanitary convenience and the other a subway. Both those erections stand in part on the subsoil of Parliament-street at a point where that subsoil is vested, or is admitted to be vested for the purpose of the present proceeding, in the plaintiffs, the London and North-Western Railway Co., who are the owners of a house in Parliament-street. The plaintiffs allege in this appeal that that subway has been erected without any statutory power for the purpose. In this appeal, whatever may have been the case at other times, the erection of the sanitary convenience is not complained of, but it is alleged, as I have already said, that the subway has been erected without any proper authority, and, at the bar, an injunction has been asked against the defendant corporation to restrain that corporation from maintaining or using the subway. That relief is sought on two grounds: First, on a ground which is thus stated by Lord Cranworth in Galloway v. The Mayor and Commonalty of London, L. R. 1 H. & I. App. 34, at p. 43, 14 W. R. H. L. Dig. 8: "It has become a well-settled head of equity that any company authorized by the Legislature to take compulsorily the land of another for a definite object will, if attempting to take it for any other object, be restrained by the injunction of the Court of Chancery from so doing." That is one ground. The other ground is, that the corporation, having erected this subway without any authority, are in the position of trespassers and continuing trespassers on the soil of the plaintiffs. And for that reason, in accordance with the decision of this court in Goodson v. Richardson, 22 W. R. 237, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 221, the plaintiffs are entitled to the injunction which is sought. If the fact be that the subway has been erected without any statutory authority, it seems to me that relief may properly be given on both these grounds, and that the main question in the action really is whether or not this subway has been so improperly erected. Now, as regards the statutory authority, the matter stands thus: However useful it may be that in such frequented streets subways for the use of passengers should be made, the Legislature has not yet thought fit to confer that power on any corporate body having authority within this city. It has conferred by section 44 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, a power on every sanitary authority within the area which is governed by the Act to provide and maintain, amongst other things, public sanitary conveniences in situations where they deem the same to be required, and has provided that for the purpose of such provision the subsoil of any road shall be vested in the sanitary authority. And it is under this section of the Act, and under this alone, that the defendants, the Corporation of Westminster, justify what they have done. The corporation allege that it is within their power, under the section, not merely to determine the situation where this sanitary convenience is to be placed, but also the proper and reasonable mode of providing for the entrance and exit of the persons who use it. And they contend that they are not limited to making these entrances and exits simply by lifts or by stairs, but that they may, if they see fit, make proper approaches to the conveniences from the pavement to the place where it is situate in the roadway. I will assume that the contention is well founded, and then the question simply reduces itself to this: Was this subway constructed as an approach to the convenience, or was it constructed with an object that it might be used by the public for passing from one side of Parliament-street to the other? Now, upon that I come to the conclusion on the evidence that the latter was the real object with which the subway was constructed. I do not desire to go through the evidence, much of which has already been referred to by my lord. But I will state very briefly some of the—to my mind—striking passages of the evidence. I refer first of all to the minutes of the predecessors of the defendants—namely, the United Vestries of the Parishes of St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster, under the dates of the 29th of July, 1898, and the 27th of June, 1900, and to the minutes of the defendant corporation under date the 6th of December, 1900. I also refer, as my lord has already referred, to the two letters of the 20th of September, 1900, and the 14th of December, 1900. In addition to that I should like to read two short passages from the evidence of the defendants' witnesses. [His lordship did so, and continued:] Therefore it seems to me from its size, and from the statement of the chairman of the committee, it has actually been constructed in such a way as to be far more than an approach, and that it is not merely a reasonable and proper approach to the convenience which has been lawfully erected. Under these circumstances, I think that the plaintiffs are entitled to the injunction which they asked. But at the same time, as it is possible that the subway may be so altered as to make it a reasonable and proper approach to the convenience, I think that it is reasonable that the corporation should have an opportunity of making such alteration if they see fit to avail themselves of leave for that purpose. Therefore I quite agree in the form of judgment which is proposed.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I am of same opinion, and I entirely agree with what has fallen from my lord, and Stirling, L.J., and I should not desire to add anything were it not for the fact that we are differing from the judgment of Joyce, J. Now, two things, I think, are quite clear here: first, that the corporation have no power at all to construct a subway, or at least, if they have power under some of their general Acts to incur the expense of constructing a subway, although no such statutory power has been called to our attention, they certainly have not any power to take the plaintiffs' land for the purpose of constructing a subway. I think it is equally clear that they have power under 44 section of the Act of 1891, to provide and maintain sanitary conveniences, and for the purpose of such provision to take and use that portion of the property of the plaintiffs which is under the road, exclusive of the footway. But those two propositions being quite clear, I think we must approach the consideration of this question having regard to the perfectly well established and extremely important jurisdiction which the Court of Chancery have exercised from the earliest days of railway legislation, and probably long before—the jurisdiction, I mean, to say, that public bodies authorized by Parliament to take certain land shall not be allowed to take that land except for the purpose authorized by Parliament. And if that doctrine is important in ordinary cases where compensation is provided for all land taken, it is specially obligatory on the court to have regard to it in a case where a public body is authorized to take another person's property without making any provision for his compensation.

In my view therefore, the question for our consideration is really this—with what purpose was this land of the plaintiffs taken? I think you cannot avoid considering that question first. The language of Lord Cranworth in Stockton and Darlington Railway Co. v. Brown was this: that although the railway company are the sole judges of what they require, and will take for their purposes, there is this proviso, "Provided only that they take them bonâ fide with the object of using them for the purposes authorized by the Legislature, and not for any sinister or collateral purpose."

Now, here I cannot bring myself to doubt what was the purpose for which this land was taken. My lord and Stirling, L.J., have both gone through the evidence, and it would be a waste of time for me to repeat it. I observe that Joyce, J., said, and this is no doubt the foundation of his judgment: "Their primary object was, in my opinion, the construction of the conveniences with requisite and proper means of approach thereto and exit therefrom." If I had come to that conclusion of fact, I think I should probably have agreed almost entirely with the judgment, but being unable to come to that conclusion of fact, having satisfied myself from the documentary evidence that the primary object was to construct a subway for facilitating the passage of passengers from one side of Parliament-street to the other, I come to the conclusion that the Westminster Corporation are now seeking to justify that which was a wrongful act, and saying that they might justify the taking not the whole, but a part of it, for a purpose authorized by section 44 of the Act of 1891. I do not think that they ought to be allowed to do that. I feel very strongly that in every case in which a public body entrusted with the duties of performing a public work say that they have, in the exercise of their discretion, fixed upon a particular place and a particular mode, the court ought to be extremely slow to interfere with their discretion. But when they have not really been acting under the authority of the Act, when they have been doing something outside the parliamentary power, and have been governed by considerations of a different kind, and for a different purpose, the question of discretion seems to me to have no bearing whatever on the case.

For these reasons I agree with what has been said, and think that the injunction ought to be granted, qualified as my lord has said. I observe that in the court below, the learned judge finding as he did that the plaintiffs had succeeded in part and failed in part, gave no costs, but the plaintiffs must have the costs in the court below as well as the costs of the appeal.

[Their lordships granted an injunction, ordering the defendants to pull down the whole of the staircase railings and other works placed upon the plaintiff's land, other than the conveniences, and such further portion of the construction as the court might upon application sanction as a proper approach to the conveniences; and the operation of the order was suspended with liberty to apply to the court. Their lordships also acceded to an application that the injunction should be suspended for two months, to enable the defendants to decide whether they would appeal to the House of Lords, and, if they should appeal, the injunction was to be suspended pending the appeal.]

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, C. de G. Andrewes.

Solicitors for the respondents, Allen & Son.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. }
Buckley, J. } April 23; May 7; June 4.

In re TAYLOR'S AGREEMENT TRUSTS. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Agreement for sale of letters patent by liquidator—No assignment—Dissolution of company— Bonâ vacantia*—Vesting order—Trustee Act,* 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 25, 35 (1) (ii.) (c), 36.

The liquidators of a limited company in process of winding up contracted to sell certain letters patent to a purchaser. The purchase-money was paid, but, by inadvertence, the company was dissolved before the letters patent were assigned. A petition was presented asking for an order under the Trustee Act, 1893, vesting the letters patent in the purchaser for all the estate of the company therein.

Held, that the legal estate in the letters patent having vested in the Crown, the court had no jurisdiction to make such an order.

In re General Accident Assurance Corporation (Limited), ante, p. 332, [1904] 1 Ch. 147, not followed.

Petition.

Prior to the 28th of August, 1903, the Niger Patent Elastic Enamel Co. was the registered proprietor of letters patent for an invention. On that day the company passed a resolution for voluntary winding up, and two persons were appointed to be liquidators.

On the 16th of September, 1903, the liquidators entered into an agreement with the petitioner to sell the letters patent to him.

On the 23rd of November, 1903, the meeting of the company required by section 142 of the Companies Act, 1862, was held, and all the requirements of that section were complied with.

The return mentioned in section 143 having been subsequently made to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, the company, on the 24th of February, 1904, was dissolved.

No assignment of the letters patent having been executed, the purchaser presented a petition under sections 35 and 36 of the Trustee Act, 1893, and under section 90 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, as amended by section 23 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888, for an order that the invention and letters patent might vest in the petitioner for all the estate of the company therein, and that the register of patents might be varied by substituting the name of the petitioner as the registered proprietor of the said patent for that of the company.

A. J. Walter, for the petitioner.—The company, having ceased to exist, is a trustee which "cannot be found," within the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 35. There is, accordingly, jurisdiction to make a vesting order, as was done by Farwell, J., in In re General Accident Assurance Corporation (Limited), ante, p. 332, [1904] 1 Ch. 147, where the facts were similar to those in the present case. It is possible that the legal estate may be in the Crown (In re Higginson & Dean, 47 W. R. 285, [1899] 1 Q. B. 325; Pryce Jones v. Williams, 50 W. R. 586, [1902] 2 Ch. 517), although in In re General Accident Assurance Corporation the petition was presented because the Crown was unable to admit that the legal estate was in it.

BUCKLEY, J., intimated that he was unable to follow In re General Accident Assurance Corporation (Limited), but allowed the petition to stand over to enable the Crown to be served.

This having been done,

May 7.—A. J. Walter, for the petitioner.—I must admit that the legal estate has vested in the Crown, and that a vesting order cannot be made against the Crown. The Comptroller of Patents has refused to enter the petitioner on the register in respect of these letters patent on the ground that he has not the legal estate. A new trustee might be appointed under section 28 of the Trustee Act, 1893, on the ground that no trustee exists.

R. J. Parker, for the Attorney-General.—While not admitting that under such circumstances the Crown is a trustee, in the present case it would be willing that a vesting order should be made. Under similar circumstances the comptroller has been advised to register the ownership of a trade-mark.

BUCKLEY, J.—In this case the liquidator of a limited company, which was being wound-up, agreed to sell a patent to the applicant, and the purchase-money was paid. The result was that the applicant obtained an equitable title to the patent, but by inadvertence no assignment was ever executed. After the necessary proceedings had taken place, the company was dissolved. In that state of facts a petition is presented to the court, asking, not for the appointment of a new trustee, but simply for a vesting order. The jurisdiction to make a vesting order arises under section 35 of the

(a.) Reported by H. L. ORMISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Trustee Act, and the words upon which reliance is placed in the present instance are those in sub-sections (1) (ii.) (c), that a trustee "cannot be found." The context in which these words occur is this: "Where a trustee . . . (a) is an infant, (b) is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or (c) cannot be found." To my mind, the words "cannot be found" in that context mean that the trustee is somewhere, but that you do not know where he is; that if you knew where to look, you would be able to find him. That is to say, he is an existing person but you do not know where he is. I regret very much that I find myself unable to concur in the decision on that point at which I understand Farwell, J., arrived in In re General Accident Assurance Corporation (Limited). He is there reported to have said that a case exactly similar to the present, fell "within the provisions of the section." Now, I agree with that statement if its meaning is that if the Legislature during the passage of the Trustee Act had thought of this case, no doubt they would have provided for it. But I do not agree with it if it means that the case is provided for by the Act of Parliament as it stands; it seems to me to be reasonably clear, reading the Act, that the case was not thought of at all, and is not provided for. The fact, therefore, that this limited company, which was a trustee, has disappeared altogether, does not, in my opinion, satisfy the words that it "cannot be found." Further, when the company was dissolved the legal estate in the patent unquestionably, I think, became vested in the Crown. In other words, it is not a fact that I cannot find the trustee. I know exactly where he is—that is, if I may speak of the Crown as a trustee. But there is this further difficulty, that, although the legal estate is so vested in the Crown that it would be a trustee if such a thing were possible, yet the Crown cannot be a trustee. The Crown is entitled to say that, although it does in general give effect to a trust, yet it is not bound by it, and in that sense is not a trustee.

Then it has occurred to me that it might be possible for me to give leave to amend the petition by asking for the appointment of a new trustee, and thereupon for me to make a vesting order. That turns on section 25 of the Act, which enables me to appoint a new trustee although there is no existing trustee. Now in a sense those words are satisfied—that is to say, the company which has disappeared is not existing, and the Crown, in whom the legal estate is vested, is not, in a strict legal sense, a trustee at all. The Crown is existing, but is not a trustee, so that I may say that in a sense there is no existing trustee. I do not say that that is the case, because, of course, the Crown might become a trustee if it was so minded. But supposing that condition to be satisfied—that there is no existing trustee—could I even then appoint another trustee and make a vesting order as against the Crown? It is plain that I could not, for the Crown is not bound by the Act. Then Mr. Parker suggests, in order to get over the difficulty, which everybody desires to do, if it be possible, that the Attorney-General might consent to my making a vesting order and waive the right of the Crown. But could I even then make a vesting order? It seems to me that I could not. Mr. Parker's concession could only be that the Crown, although not bound by the Act, would not raise the point. Does that give me jurisdiction? Certainly not. I cannot enlarge the Act of Parliament. My powers remain where they were. If the Crown were minded to deal with the matter by assignment or in some other way, well and good; but I cannot make a vesting order.

Then there is this further difficulty, which seems to me formidable. Inasmuch as the Crown cannot be a grantee from itself, when the legal estate became vested in the Crown, what became of the patent? That goes to the existence of the subject-matter upon which I am asked to make a vesting order.

On all these grounds it seems to me that it is impossible on this petition to assist the petitioner, although I should wish to do so if I could, unless this course be possible, and it is said that is possible. It is perfectly obvious what are the applicant's rights. He is entitled to a patent unless the Crown is going to set up some claim of merger on the principles which I have stated. If the Crown does not set up such a claim, it may be possible for the comptroller to exercise his jurisdiction over the register by entering the applicant's name as the proprietor of this patent. If the comptroller will do so, if any technical impediments in the way are removed, that will resolve the difficulty, but that is for the comptroller, and not for me. I will not, therefore, dismiss the petition now, although I confess I do not see my way to make any order on it, but will allow it to stand over to see if anything can be done to get over the difficulty.

June 4.—A. J. Walter, for the petitioner.—The Board of Trade has advised the comptroller to enter the name of the petitioner on the register as proprietor of the patent; I ask, therefore, that the petition be dismissed.

BUCKLEY, J., dismissed the petition.

Solicitors, A. M. Longhurst, for Mackay, Taylor, & Goffey, Liverpool; Solicitor to the Treasury.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. April 14, 16.

In re VENN.

LINDON v. INGRAM. (a.)

Will—Construction—Ambiguity—Codicil—Explanation by reference—Gift to a class—Common characteristic.

It is permissible to refer to a codicil to clear up an ambiguity in a will where the recital of the will in the codicil is not obviously erroneous.

Darley v. Martin, 13 C. B. 683, and Groves v. Raper, 5 W. R. 134, followed.

Originating summons by the trustees of the testatrix's will praying the determination of the question as to the persons entitled to the residuary estate after the death of the tenant for life.

By her will, dated the 18th of November, 1890, the testatrix, Sarah Venn, after providing for the payment of her debts and testamentary expenses and devising a certain pecuniary legacy, gave, devised, and bequeathed all the rest of her real and personal property to the trustees therein mentioned upon trust to sell and convert the same into money and pay the interest, dividends, and income thereof to the testatrix's niece, Emily Alice Ingram, for her life, and proceeded as follows: "And upon her decease I direct my said trustees to divide all my said trust estate equally between the brothers and sisters of the said Emily Alice Ingram living at her decease and Thomas William Gaze, Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze, and William Brand Parker in equal shares, and should either of them be dead leaving children such children are to take the share their deceased parent would have been entitled to if living."

On the 1st of June, 1893, the testatrix executed a codicil in the following terms: "Whereas in my will I have directed my residuary estate to be sold and the proceeds divided between the persons therein named, now I desire my great-niece, Louisa Emilie Ingram, to have a share in my residuary estate equally with the others named in the said will, and I bequeath her the same accordingly. In all other respects I confirm the said will."

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 7th of August, 1901, the testatrix died without having altered her will or codicil, which were duly proved on the 20th of September, 1901. There was no realty belonging to the testatrix.

On the 14th of May, 1902, the tenant for life, Emily Alice Ingram, died.

Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze died before the testatrix. Thomas William Gaze survived her, but died before the tenant for life. The tenant for life had living at her death one brother only and no sister. William Brand Parker survived her. Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze and Thomas William Gaze were half-brothers of the testatrix. William Brand Parker was not a relation.

The trustees took out an originating summons asking for the decision of the court as to the persons entitled to the residuary estate of the testatrix; whether the share of Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze devolved on the next-of-kin of the testatrix, or whether the estate were divisible between the other legatees named in the will and codicil, and whether the gift to Thomas William Gaze was contingent on his surviving the tenant for life.

W. J. Burt, for the trustees of the will and codicil.

J. G. Fawcus, for the surviving brother of the tenant for life.—One moiety of the estate is left to the brothers and sisters of the tenant for life, the remaining moiety is to be divided between persons named in the will and the testatrix's great-niece, Louisa Emilie Ingram, named in the codicil. If, however, it should be held that the whole estate is to be divided in equal shares, the estate of Thomas William Gaze is not entitled, for survival of the tenant for life is a condition of sharing as much in the case of the named legatees as in that of the brothers and sisters of the tenant for life.

R. M. Pattison, for the personal representative of Thomas William Gaze.—The estate is divisible equally among all who take, and not in moieties; the words used in the codicil make that clear. The condition as to surviving the tenant for life is confined to class—namely, brothers and sisters of the tenant for life.

G. S. Alexander, for William Brand Parker.—I support the contention that Thomas William Gaze's estate cannot share, as he did not survive the tenant for life. The bequest to Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze was given to him as one of a class, and therefore does not lapse, as a gift to a class—i.e., a number of persons indicated by a general description, and to a named individual equally is primâ facie a gift to a class: In re Moss, Kingsbury v. Walter, 47 W. R. 642 (Romer, L.J., p.644), [1899] 2 Ch. 314. The House of Lords, in that case, affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal (1901, A. C. 187), and though Lord Davey disapproved of this judgment of Romer, L.J., yet his disapproval can only be taken as a dictum, as that part of the case was not argued.

Fawcus replied.

JOYCE, J.—The question in this case is as to the mode in which the residuary estate of the testatrix is to be distributed among the persons named or referred to in her will and first codicil. [His lordship read the will and codicil, and continued:] Various difficulties have arisen. The first question is, whether the trust estate is to be divided in moieties, one moiety going to the surviving brothers and sisters of the tenant for life and the other moiety to the persons particularly named in the will, together with the great-niece named in the codicil; or whether it is divisible in equal shares between all those persons. Taking the will alone, I think the true construction thereof is that the division is not to be in moieties, but equally between all entitled. I admit, however, that on the will alone there is an ambiguity as to this, and that it is well arguable that the testatrix intended the division to be in moieties. If, however, I may refer to the first codicil to clear up the ambiguity, there is no doubt but that the estate is to be divided equally among all the beneficiaires. If there were an obviously erroneous recital of the will in the codicil that would not alter the construction of the will (see Skerratt v. Oakley, 7 T. R. 492, 4 R. R. 584); but if the recital in the codicil be not obviously erroneous, I have no doubt that I may refer to the codicil to clear up an ambiguity in the will. The principal authority for this is Darley v. Martin, 13 C. B. 683. There Jervis, C.J., in delivering the considered judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, says, at p. 690: "And, as to the effect of the codicil, it was argued that an erroneous reference in a codicil to the disposition of the will cannot constitute a new bequest in opposition to the will; and Skerratt v. Oakley was relied on. But it appears to us that the argument with respect to the effect of the codicil, when rightly considered, is not that the will is at all revoked or varied by the codicil; but, rather that, the will and codicil being all one testament, the language of the will may be interpreted by that of the codicil; and that, accordingly, the gift over in the will, in default of such issue, being capable of importing a bequest over on failure of issue living at the death, it ought to be inferred that the testator employed it in that sense, because in the codicil he refers to it as if it were a gift over in default of his daughter having no issue, which, as regards personalty, is tantamount to a gift on failure of issue living at her death. The argument, thus viewed, appears to us to be well founded." But the authorities do not rest there, for Kindersley, V.C., than whom a more careful or accurate judge never existed, did the same thing in Groves v. Raper, 5 W. R. 134. In that case there was an ambiguity in the words of the will, and the Vice-Chancellor, after expressing the inclination of his opinion as to the meaning of the will, said that the codicil, however, put the matter beyond all doubt. I think, therefore, that, following the considered judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in Darley v. Martin and this decision of Kindersley, V.C., I may have recourse to the codicil to clear up the ambiguity in the will; and I hold, therefore, that the testatrix's residuary estate is divisible in equal shares among all who take.

One of the persons particularly named, Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze, died after the testatrix, but in the lifetime of the tenant for life. It is contended that his representatives are not entitled to share, on the ground that on the true construction of the will the gift is contingent on his surviving the tenant for life. There is not a word in the will to that effect, though no doubt the testatrix uses the expression "would have been entitled to." This, however, is not enough for the purpose, especially as the supposed gift over would, in my opinion, apply equally in case of death in the lifetime of the testatrix. I therefore hold that Francis Thomas Brooker Gaze's representatives are entitled to a share. Then another point arises. Thomas William Gaze died in the lifetime of the testatrix, and I have to determine what becomes of his share. Does it lapse to the next-of-kin, or does it pass to the other legatees? Having carefully read and considered the judgment of the House of Lords in Kingsbury v. Walter, I am of opinion that the gift in question here cannot be construed as a class gift. The persons to take have no common quality or characteristic except that of being residuary legatees. I therefore hold that Thomas William Gaze's share has lapsed to the testatrix's next-of-kin.

Solicitors, Lewis & Sons; Mason & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Channell, JJ.) March 4.

TOUGH (Appellant) v. HOPKINS (Respondent). (a.)

Local government—Metropolis—Nuisance—Funnel of steam-tug sending forth black smoke—Chimney—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 5, sub-sections 4, 5; s. 24, sub-section (b).

The funnel of a steam-tug is a "chimney" within the meaning of the Public Health (London), Act, 1891, section 24 (b) of which provides that "any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance" is a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily under that Act.

Case stated by an alderman of the City of London sitting at the Mansion House.

An information was preferred by the respondent under section 24 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, for that on the 24th of August, 1903, between Customs House and Southwark Bridge on the north side of the River Thames, in the City of London, and within the Port of London, upon a certain vessel—to wit, the steamship Richmond, a nuisance existed—namely, a chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be nuisance, and that the appellant, being the owner of the vessel, had made default in complying with the requisitions of a notice dated the 25th of April, 1903, served upon him under section 24 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, requiring him to abate the nuisance and to execute such works and do such things as might be necessary for that purpose.

On the hearing of the information the following facts were proved or admitted by the appellant.

The appellant was the owner of a steam-tug known as The Richmond.

On the 25th of April, 1903, a notice was served upon him at the instance of the Port Sanitary Authority of the City of London requiring him within forty-eight hours from the service of the notice to abate a nuisance on the steam-tug arising from a chimney—to wit, the funnel of the boiler furnace on the tug (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance.

On the 24th of August, 1903, the steam-tug was towing six barges and was proceeding from below the Custom House to Southwark Bridge and beyond, within the jurisdiction of the Port Sanitary Authority, and while the steam-tug was proceeding between the Custom House and Southwark Bridge there was being sent forth from the funnel thereof dense black smoke for the space of five minutes in such quantity as to be a nuisance.

The steam-tug was then being navigated by a master engineer and crew employed by the appellant, who was not on board, and who had no personal knowledge of such emission of black smoke.

The steam-tug did not stop or lie up at any point of the said voyage.

The engines and boilers on board the steam-tug were of modern construction and of the best-known type of marine engines and boilers, and were constructed so as to consume, as far as possible, all the smoke caused therein, having regard to the funnel being a short one, and adapted for passing under bridges at high-water level by hinging backwards nearly to deck level.

The appellant had given strict instructions to his servants to prevent, as far as possible, the production of black smoke on the steam-tug, and good Welsh steam coal procured by the appellant was burnt on board, and the furnaces of the tug had been freshly stoked with such coal at about opposite the Custom House on the 24th of August, and from three to four minutes was not an unreasonable time to allow the fresh fuel to cease emitting black smoke on such a vessel.

The emission of smoke from the funnel of the tug could have been prevented by the fire being kept bright by frequent and careful stoking.

Upon the above facts it was contended by the appellant: That section 24 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, was inapplicable to a steam-tug such as The Richmond while plying to and fro on the River Thames, and that proceedings in respect of smoke from vessels plying on the River Thames can only be taken under the provisions of section 23 of that Act.

On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the funnel of the steam-tug was a "chimney" within the meaning of that expression in section 24 (b).

The alderman found as a fact that the funnel of the steam-tug was a chimney within the meaning of section 24, and that black smoke had been sent forth from it in such quantities as to be a nuisance at the place and time and on the day mentioned in the information. He also found as a fact that no works that could be ordered would cure the alleged nuisance, but that it was a question of stoking with proper fuel, and that if a bright fire were kept up by frequent and careful stoking the nuisance could be prevented.

He was of opinion that the information had been properly laid under section 24 (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and that the appellant was a person by whose default or sufferance the nuisance arose, and he convicted the appellant and made an order upon him prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance.

The questions for the opinion of the court were whether the alderman was right in law in convicting the appellant, and whether the prohibition order made upon him under the above circumstances was a good and valid order under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 5, sub-sections 4 and 5.

J. A. Hamilton, K.C. (Bigham with him), for the appellant.—The conviction was wrong. Section 24 does not apply to the funnel of a steam-tug; it refers only to chimneys in the ordinary sense. If the word "chimney" in section 24 (b) included the funnel of a steamship there would be no need for sub-section 3 of section 23, which specially deals with nuisances arising from smoke being emitted from the furnaces of steam vessels plying on the River Thames.

Danckwerts, K.C. (R. C. Glen with him), for the respondent.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I think the alderman's decision was right. I agree that the order of the

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Local Government Board of the 25th of March, 1892, has not increased the responsibility of persons who own tugs in respect of nuisances from tugs or ships. It merely provided that the port sanitary authority was to take such proceedings as could be taken under the Act in respect of "ships, vessels, boats, waters, or persons within their jurisdiction . . . ," and it includes section 24. The mere inclusion of section 24 in that order would not increase the responsibility if section 24 did not apply to the chimney or funnel of a steam-tug plying on the Thames. The point has admitted of argument, and there is some ground for thinking at the first glance that the reading of section 24 would indicate that it was intended to apply to chimneys on land in the ordinary sense of the word; but when we look at the object of the legislation and at certain expressions in section 24 itself, I think any such construction would be too narrow. It is, as far as this part of the section is concerned, essentially what may be called a black smoke section—that is to say, it is a section which provides that "Any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance" shall be a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily. Section 23, the previous section, has undoubtedly dealt specifically with the steam engines and furnaces used in the working of steam vessels which were being worked in the district where this tug was being worked. It provided in sub-section 3 that they "shall be constructed so as to consume or burn the smoke arising from such engine and furnace; and if any such steam engine or furnace is not so constructed, or being so constructed is wilfully or negligently used so that the smoke arising therefrom is not effectually consumed or burnt, the owner or master of such vessel shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds, and on a second conviction to a fine of ten pounds." Then sub-section 4 says: "Provided that in this section the words 'consume or burn the smoke' shall not be held in all cases to mean 'consume or burn all the smoke,' and the court hearing an information against a person may remit the fine if of opinion that such person has so constructed his furnace as to consume or burn, as far as possible, all the smoke arising from such furnace, and has carefully attended to the same, and consumed or burnt, as far as possible, the smoke arising from such furnace." Those two sub-sections show that there are special provisions with regard to the construction of furnaces and engines upon the steamers, and the non-negligent user of them, but it is to be observed that there is a corresponding provision with regard to furnaces upon land, because sub-section 1 of section 23 also provides that the furnaces employed in the working of engines by steam and a number of other furnaces, all on land "shall be constructed so as to consume or burn the smoke arising from such furnace," and then follows a corresponding provision with regard to non-negligent user. Therefore we have, in section 23, with regard to both furnaces on land and furnaces on ships, a provision as to the proper construction of engines and furnaces and their non-negligent user. Then we come to section 24, which is unquestionably a nuisance section. I think it is not without importance that it immediately follows section 23, and is under the same heading, "Smoke Consumption." If the words to which I am about to refer can fairly apply to a chimney on board a steamship there is no reason why the section should not apply. Section 24, sub-section 1, says: "Any fireplace or furnace which does not so far as practicable consume the smoke" shall be a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily. Then comes the important clause: "Any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance" shall be a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily. I think that that sub-section, quite apart from negligence, is meant to deal with the case which has not been covered by the previous sub-section, of a chimney other than that of a dwelling-house sending forth black smoke. We have had our attention directed to the other legislation of a similar character with regard to railway engines and with regard to traction engines, and there does not seem to be any black smoke nuisance section in any of them. Therefore one would rather assume that this legislation is something which may be said to be additional protection and to be superadded to the legislation with regard to construction, and unless the words "any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house)" are sufficiently strong to show that a steamship would not be included, I think both the purview of this section and the object of the legislation would point to black smoke being emitted from the chimney or funnel of a steamer within the port, as constituting an offence.

It is quite obvious there may be cases in which the black smoke would come from a chimney which would not ordinarily be called a funnel. I do not think that any argument can be based upon the fact that the word "chimney" is used, because the word "funnel" is a technical and almost secondary meaning for that kind of chimney. I cannot see any reason why emission of black smoke from steamers plying on the Thames should not be prevented as much as the emitting of black smoke from chimneys on land. I therefore come to the conclusion that section 23 does not contain the whole code with regard to nuisance arising from steamships or smoke coming from steamboats. The language of section 24 is not enough to enable us to hold that it does not include the chimney of a steamship. Therefore I think this conviction was right.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. To my mind the only point which is not wholly free from difficulty is the question as to whether the words in section 24, sub-section (b), "Any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance" include the funnel of a tug-boat or steamer. Usually, no doubt, "chimney" is a word applicable to that through which smoke passes from a fire of some sort in a building. It is not the term which is technically the proper term to describe those passages or funnels on a steamboat which convey the smoke from the furnace of the steamer to the upper air, but I see nothing to prevent the word "chimney" being here used in what one may call its natural sense—namely, that of being a passage by which smoke from a fire is carried upwards. Otherwise you would have no "black smoke section," as my lord has described it shortly, with regard to the description of thing which may send out smoke in quite as great a nuisance, as what may be more usually described by the word "chimney"—namely, the smoke passage from the roof of a building. There is no definition clause relating to the word "chimney" in this Act, as far as I know, and certainly one would have expected it to have been referred to if there was one. We have not heard that the word "chimney" is anywhere defined, and if it is not defined, it seems to me naturally enough intended to cover here that which it may cover in a popular, though not in a technical, sense.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree. I think the word "chimney" in this section is used simply as the thing from which smoke does issue into the outer air. It might quite well be that the funnels of steam vessels, or funnels of locomotive engines, or other movable smoke-producing apparatus might be so dealt with elsewhere in the Act as to lead one to come to the conclusion that they were not intended to be included in these general words in section 24 (b), but in fact the operation of section 24 is only to apply the particular summary procedure to certain cases of smoke nuisance.

The result seems to me that sections 23 and 24 are dealing, not with different subject-matters, but with different consequences of the same subject-matter, and there is no reason, therefore, because steam vessels are specifically dealt with under section 23, to say that they cannot come under section 24. I see no reason for cutting down what seems to me the primary meaning of the word "chimney" in section 24.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for appellant, John A. Roberts.

Solicitor for respondent, The City Solicitor.

K. B. Div. (Phillimore, J.) } Feb. 27; March 4.

BARRETT & SONS (LIMITED) v. DAVIES.
SAME v. WITHERS. (a.)

*Limitations, Statute of—Acknowledgment of debt—Conditional promise to pay—Implied promise to pay—*21 Jac. 1, c. 16—Lord Tenterden's Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14).

In an action by a creditor to recover money lent the debtor pleaded, in his defence, that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The debtor, however, before the expiration of six years after the debt was incurred wrote the following letter: "I am willing to sell the 5,230 shares that I hold . . . for the sum of £816 4*s.* 6*d., and in the event of my doing so I will with the money pay the ten-shilling call on* 629 of the above shares, amounting to £314 10*s., and the balance in settlement of my account with R. Barrett & Son (Limited),"* the creditor, "amounting at the 31*st of December last to* £501 14*s.* 6*d."*

Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take the case out of the statute, as the letter was a general acknowledgment of the debt with a conditional promise to pay, but without any distinct statement that except upon the performance of the condition the debtor would not or could not pay, and that therefore there was an implied promise to pay the debt.

These two actions were tried before Phillimore, J., without a jury, under order 14.

The claim in both cases was for money lent, and the defence was that both claims were barred by the Statute of Limitations.

The facts and arguments of counsel are sufficiently set out in the written judgment of the learned judge.

Compston, for the plaintiffs.

Lush, K.C. (W. S. Shaw with him), for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 4.—PHILLIMORE, J., read the following judgments: In the first action the plaintiff company sues for £557 15*s.* 3*d.*, money lent and interest; in the second action for £418 3*s.*, money lent and interest. In each case the defence is the Statute of Limitations. Taking the case against Davies first, the last loan was made by the plaintiff company on the 11th of February, 1897, and the writ was not issued until the 27th of January, 1904. The only acknowledgment on which reliance is placed to take the case out of the statute is a letter dated the 13th of March, 1901, which came into being in the following circumstances: Just before the 31st of December, 1900, an account was rendered by the plaintiff company to the defendant showing the total then due from him £501 14*s.* 6*d.*, of which £87 4*s.* 6*d.* was for interest. This account was accompanied by a letter written on the company's paper signed "C. A. Barrett, managing director," in which Mr. Barrett says that he encloses the company's account, and that if Mr. Davies could not arrange to pay the whole at the end of the year he must ask him at least to pay the interest. It is agreed that after this there was a meeting between Mr. Barrett and Mr. Davies which resulted in Mr. Davies writing the letter of the 13th of March, 1901. The letter was as follows: "Dear Sir,—I beg to confirm our conversation of yesterday—viz., that I am willing to sell the 5.230 shares that I hold in the Preston Davies Ball Bearings Co. (Limited) for the sum of £816 4*s.* 6*d.*, and in the event of my doing so I will with the money pay the 10*s.* call due on 629 of the above shares amounting to £314 10*s.*, and the balance in settlement of my account with R. Barrett & Son (Limited), amounting at the 31st of December last to £501 14*s.* 6*d.*—Yours faithfully, PRESTON DAVIES." It was suggested that this letter was not an acknowledgment made to the plaintiff company, and that it might arise out of some private transactions with Mr. Barrett. I do not think there is any force in this. Barrett was managing director; he had written on behalf of the company; the letter is addressed to him at the premises which happen to be the company's office, and I was told that the plaintiff company had an interest in the Preston Davies Ball Bearings Co. (Limited) which would connect them with the proposal to reconstruct this latter company and with the advantages to be gained by such reconstruction. The transaction fell through. There was no quotation for the Preston Davies Ball Bearings shares on the Stock Exchange. These are apparently all the facts.

It has been decided upon the construction of Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 14) that an acknowledgment of a debt is not enough; that there must be a promise to pay. I agree with what Bramwell, L.J., says in Meyerhoff v. Froehlich, 27 W. R. 258, 4 C. P. D., at p. 64, and I think it difficult to see why an acknowledgment in writing has not of itself been held sufficient compliance with the statute. But it has certainly been decided not to be of itself sufficient. The next steps are plain. From a general acknowledgment without more it is proper to infer a promise to pay: (see Gardner v. McMahon, 3 Q. B. 561; Mitchell's claim, 19 W. R. 1130, L. R. 6 Ch. 822; Skeet v. Lindsay, 25 W. R. 322, 2 Ex. D. 314. From an acknowledgment coupled with a promise to pay upon condition, and declaring inability or unwillingness to pay except upon this condition, no general promise can be inferred, and the acknowledgment does not operate unless the condition is satisfied: (see Tanner v. Smart, 6 B. & C. 603; Smith v. Thorne, 18 Q. B. 134; Mitchell's claim; Meyerhoff v. Froehlich, and many other cases. This, however, still leaves some of the ground uncovered. There are cases in which the reference to a particular source of payment has been held to point to that source as a primary one, but not as the only one; and, as the acknowledgment stands as a general promise to pay, with a suggestion only that the payment may be made out of a particular fund. Lastly, there may be a case where there is a general acknowledgment of the debt with a conditional promise to pay, but without any distinct statement that except upon the performance of the condition the debtor will not or cannot pay. That, I think, is this case; and I do not think that it is covered by authority. There are no doubt cases, such as In re Bethell, 35 W. R. 330, 34 Ch. D. 561, and Meyerhoff v. Froehlich, already referred to, where the statement that the debtor will not or cannot pay except upon condition is not put forward in precise words, and yet the acknowledgment has been held insufficient. But in these cases the whole tenor of the language was such as distinctly to negative any prospect of payment unless the condition was fulfilled. In the case before me I have a distinct acknowledgment of the debt coupled with a promise to pay it upon a particular condition happening and silence as to what is to occur if this condition does not happen. Arguments can be adduced on either side. For the debtor it will be said expressum facit cessare tacitum, where there is an express promise no other promise can be implied—or, to put it in another way, the express promise cannot be enlarged by implication. For the creditor it could be urged that, if an acknowledgment of a debt implies a promise to pay, there is no reason, in the absence of negative words, for cutting down that promise; that the further promise to pay upon the happening of a particular condition is at worst surplusage, and should in this case rather be treated as explanatory. It might be said that the object of the debtor when he wrote the letter of the 13th of March, 1901, was to secure himself from being pressed for payment during such reasonable time as he would require to realize the shares, and that in order to secure his practical immunity—I do not say his legal immunity—for that period he indicated that he would pay as soon as he realized, while by a separate admission he kept alive the debt, which was not at that time statute-barred. Upon the whole I think that the creditor is right, and that there must be judgment for the plaintiff company.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I must not forget to notice the further contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiff company that the letter of the 13th of March, 1901, gave a fresh cause of action upon an account stated, which would run for six years from that date. If this were so, every admission of debt with a conditional promise to pay would be an account stated and would take the case out of the statute; and this is certainly not so. The defendant was not intending to agree to an account; he was, I think, intending to acknowledge the debt, and therefore I have inferred a promise to pay; but the case for the plaintiff company is not made really stronger by substituting the words "account stated" for "acknowledgment."

In the action against Withers the plaintiff company has tried to strengthen the case by two letters written by the defendant on the 31st of December, 1900, and the 20th of December, 1902. I do not think that these letters add strength to the plaintiffs' case. Both are promises to pay when things get better, coupled with positive statements of inability to pay until things are better. Meyerhoff v. Froehlich shows that such letters do not keep the debt alive. The case, therefore, against Withers is no stronger than the case against Davies, but it is equally strong. I give judgment for the plaintiffs in both actions, with costs.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Edmonds & Co.

Solicitor for defendants, Alfred Withers.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

K. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) — June 6.

In re ROWE.

Ex parte WEST COAST GOLD FIELDS (LIMITED) (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Amendment—Omission to value security—Inadvertence—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule I., r. 10; Schedule II., rr. 13, 14.

A limited company presented a proof against a bankrupt's estate for calls on partly-paid shares, stating that the company held no security for their debt. After the proof had been admitted the company altered its articles of association so as to give itself a lien for calls upon fully-paid shares, a large number of which had been held by the bankrupt and were still held by his trustee. The company applied for leave to amend their proof by inserting such lien upon the fully-paid shares as security for the debt and valuing the same.

Held, that the company had not omitted to value their security through inadvertence and could not be allowed to amend their proof and rely on their security, which they must be deemed to have surrendered to the trustee.

Motion by the West Coast Gold Fields Co. (Limited), creditors, for leave to amend their proof by inserting and valuing certain securities therein, or to withdraw their proof and substitute a fresh proof.

A receiving order was made against Rowe early in January, 1903. At that date he possessed 3,588 fully-paid shares in the creditor company, and 1,800 shares shares upon which ten shillings only had been paid.

On the 26th of January, 1903, the company presented a proof claiming £90 for calls already made on the 1,800 shares, and £810 in respect of future calls, and stating that they held no security whatever for their debt. This proof was admitted to rank for dividend at £819, and the company had received a dividend upon it. Early in 1904 it was decided to wind up the company voluntarily, and it appeared that there would be a surplus of two shillings per share after the payment of all liabilities. Upon the 2nd of March the company passed a resolution altering the articles of association so as to give themselves a lien on fully-paid shares. On 31st of April the company passed a resolution for voluntary winding up. Subsequently the present notice of motion was served, asking for leave to amend the proof by inserting the 3,588 fully-paid shares held by the trustee, and claiming a lien upon them for the calls due upon the 1,800 partly-paid shares, or to withdraw the proof and substitute a fresh one.

Reed, K.C., and Tindale Davies, for the motion.—Unless the company be allowed to amend and rely upon their security the trustee will get about £350 in respect of the fully-paid shares while the company will only get a dividend of 3s. in the £1 on their admitted proof for £819, which will only amount to about £100. The company have power to alter their articles so as to extend their lien to fully-paid shares, and to give a retrospective effect to such alteration: Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa (Limited), 48 W. R. 452, [1900] 1 Ch. 656.

P. M. Francke (Muir Mackenzie with him), for the trustee.—There is no debt due to the company over which they can claim a lien. They proved in the bankruptcy, their proof was admitted, and their debt must be held to be satisfied: Stammers v. Elliott, 8 W. R. 489, 3 Ch. App. 195. [BIGHAM, J.—But have they not the right to amend their proof?] No.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

rule 10 of Schedule I. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a creditor who votes in respect of his whole debt is deemed to have surrendered his security unless the court is satisfied that the omission to value the security was due to inadvertence. Here it cannot be said that there was "inadvertence" within the definition in the cases on that rule: see In re Safety Explosives (Limited), ante, p. 470, [1904] 1 Ch. 226. [He was stopped by the court.]

Reed, K.C., replied.

BIGHAM, J.—I am not disposed to allow this amendment. At the time they presented their proof the company knew, or must be taken to have known, that there was the possibility of acquiring this security by the alteration of their articles by such a resolution as they subsequently passed; and if they had wished to claim that security, or value it, they ought to have mentioned it in their proof. It may be that they might have valued it inaccurately, but if they had done so, they could afterwards have applied for leave to amend their valuation. If they had passed their resolution first, and then made this proof and set up their security, probably in that case also they might have amended their valuation. I have come to the conclusion that they elected to omit all reference to this security in their proof, and by their own act they have since altered the position of matters. In my opinion it is not a case of inadvertence, and this application must be dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Solicitor for the applicant, R. F. Yeo.

Solicitors for the trustee, Morley & Shirreff.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 10.

SARAGOSSA AND MEDITERRANEAN RAILWAY v. COLLINGHAM AND OTHERS. (a.)

Practice—Compromise—Power to bind absent parties—Time-limit for absent parties to come in—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 9a.

In an action brought by certain bond-holders of a railway company against their trustees and the company claiming the enforcement of the trusts under which the moneys subscribed in respect of the bonds were held, the court in 1894 sanctioned a scheme for compromise under which all the bond-holders were to receive a certain sum in respect of each bond. The scheme was sanctioned by the Court of Appeal, and, under ord. 16, r. 9a, made binding on all the bond-holders of the company. A small minority of bond-holders failed to claim their rights within six years from the sanctioning of the compromise, and the railway company applied for an order limiting the time within which the outstanding bond-holders must accept the scheme or be excluded therefrom.

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make such an order.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (sub nom. Collingham v. Sloper, 49 W. R. 404, [1901] 1 Ch. 769) reversed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Rigby and Stirling, L.JJ., Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting).

The Court of Appeal had in 1894 sanctioned a scheme for the compromise of three actions by which a sum of money was appropriated for distribution among the bond-holders, and £2 10s. for each bond to be paid to the holders who should accept the scheme and come in. About 60,000 out of 61,000 bond-holders had come in under the scheme, and an application was made on behalf of the appellant company to fix a time within which those who had not accepted the scheme or could not be found should be excluded. The Court of Appeal refused to make the order.

The case is stated at some length in the court below.

Upjohn, K.C., and Martelli, for the appellants.

Butcher, K.C., and A. F. Peterson, for the respondents.

THE HOUSE gave informal judgment, but expressed their dissent from the views of the majority of the Court of Appeal, and directed that the case should stand over that an order might be drawn up.

On the 10th of March

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C., moved the following order: Order of the Court of Appeal discharged, and, in lieu thereof, cause remitted to the Chancery Division, with directions to order that, the railway company undertaking not to dispute the right of the holders of the outstanding bonds or obligations to a valid charge on the property of the railway, a period of six months' time be limited within which the holders of the first mortgage bonds or obligations issued by the said defendant company should come in under the provisions of the scheme sanctioned by the order of the Court of Appeal dated the 9th of August, 1894, and accept the sum of £2 10s per obligation under the provisions of that scheme, and that the holders of such bonds or obligations who do not come in under the provisions of the said scheme and accept the said sum of £2 10s. per obligation in pursuance thereof within the time so limited, be deemed to have elected not to take the benefit of the said scheme, but to rely on the charge on the railway property comprised in, or charged by, the said obligations, and the trust deed dated the 6th of October, 1887, for securing the same, and that such holders be excluded from the benefit of the said scheme, and the judgment dated the 27th of January, 1893, and the said order dated the 9th of August, 1894; and that the said order be advertised forthwith in such form and in such newspapers as the master may approve. The costs of the appellants and the respondents incurred in respect of the appeal to this House to be paid out of the fund in court standing to the credit of certain actions.

Solicitors, Francis & Johnson; Petch & Co.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) July 1

BATEMAN v. HUNT. (a.)

Mortgage—Assignment—Mortgage debt—Assignment by way of sub-mortgage—Notice of assignment given by executors of sub-mortgagee—Validity of notice—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6—Mortgage by client to solicitor—Receipt for sum exceeding actual advance—Right of assignee to rely on receipt—Constructive notice—Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 3, sub-section 1.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants, who were clients of H., a solicitor, executed a mortgage deed in favour of L., who was a clerk in the service of H., to secure £9,200, the receipt of which sum they thereby acknowledged. L. assigned the mortgage debt and security to H., and H. by way of sub-mortgage assigned the debt and security to E., who was also a client of his, to secure an advance of £6,000. Neither H. nor E. gave the defendants notice of either assignment. After the death of E. his executors gave notice in writing to the defendants of both the assignments, and brought an action on the covenant for repayment contained in the original mortgage.

Held, that the notice given by the plaintiffs to the defendants was good notice under section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873; and that, even if a less sum than £9,200 had actually been advanced to the defendants, the plaintiffs were entitled to rely on the statement by the defendants in the original mortgage that they had received that sum in full.

Bickerton v. Walker, 34 W. R. 141, 31 Ch. D. 151, followed.

Appeal from the judgment of Grantham, J., at the trial of an action without a jury.

The plaintiffs, as the legal personal representatives of Thomas Cannock Elliott, deceased, sued the defendants on a covenant for payment of £9,200 contained in a mortgage granted by the defendants to one Thomas Charles Line, which mortgage the plaintiffs alleged to have been duly transferred to their testator.

The plaintiffs made out their title by the following documents:

By an indenture dated the 1st of July, 1898, and made between the defend ants, thereinafter called the mortgagors, of the on e part, and Thomas Charles Line, described as of Chiswick, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, thereinafter called the mortgagee, of the other part, after reciting, amongst other things, that the mortgagee had agreed to lend to the mortgagors on joint account the sum of £9,200 upon having the repayment thereof, with interest, secured in manner thereinafter appearing, it was witnessed that, in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the sum of £9,200 then paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagors (the receipt whereof the mortgagors thereby acknowledged), the mortgagors jointly and severally covenanted with the mortgagee to pay to him in September then next the sum of £9,200, with interest thereon in the meantime at the rate of £4 10*s.* per cent. per annum from the date thereof; and the mortgagors thereby granted and assigned to the mortgagee certain property therein particularly described, subject to a power of redemption therein contained.

By an indenture dated the 1st of January, 1899, between Thomas Charles Line, described as of Chiswick, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, thereinafter called the transferor, of the one part, and Cartmell Harrison, described as of 67, Lincoln's-inn-fields, in the county of London, esquire, thereinafter called the transferee, of the other part, after reciting that the indenture was supplemental to the said indenture of the 1st of July, 1898, and that the principal sum of £9,200 was still owing to the transferor on the security of the said principal with current interest, and the transferee had agreed to pay to the transferor the sum of £9,200 upon having such transfer as thereinafter expressed of the said principal sum of £9,200 and the interest to grow due thereon and the securities for the same, it was witnessed that, in pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the sum of £9,200 paid to the transferor by the transferee (the receipt whereof the transferor thereby acknowledged), the transferor as mortgagee thereby assigned unto the transferee all that the principal sum of £9,200 then owing on the security of the principal indenture and the interest thenceforth to become due for the same and the full benefit of and the right to exercise and enforce all powers and securities for compelling payment of the said sum and interest, to have and receive the same unto the transferee absolutely; and transferor thereby granted and assigned to the transferee all the property granted by the principal indenture subject to the right of redemption subsisting therein under the principal indenture.

By an indenture dated the 4th of January, 1899, and made between Cartmell Harrison, of 67, Lincoln's-inn-fields, in the county of London, Esquire, thereinafter called the mortgagor, of the one part, and Thomas Cannock Elliott, thereinafter called the mortgagee, of the other part, after reciting that this indenture was supplemental to the following indentures:—viz., (a) the principal indenture dated the 1st of July, 1898, being a mortgage to secure the repayment of the principal sum of £9,200 and interest; and (b) an indenture dated the 1st of January, 1899, and made between the said Thomas Charles Line, of the one part, and the mortgagor of the other part, being a transfer of the said morgage debt and the securities for the same; and that the principal sum of £9,200 still remained owing to the mortgagor on the security of the principal indenture, and that the mortgagee had agreed to lend to the mortgagor the sum of £6,000 upon the security as hereinafter mentioned; it was witnessed that in consideration of the sum of £6,000 paid to the mortgagor by the mortgagee, the mortgagor as beneficial owner thereby assigned unto the mortgagee the said principal sum of £9,200 then due and owing to the mortgagor on the security of the principal indenture and all interest then due and thenceforth to become due for the same and the benefit of all securities for the same, together with full power to demand, sue for, recover, and receive, and give effectual receipts and discharges for the said principal sum and interest in the name of the mortgagor or otherwise, to hold the same under the mortgagee subject to the proviso for redemption thereinafter contained; and it was also witnessed that, for the consideration aforesaid, the mortgagor as beneficial owner thereby conveyed unto the mortgagee all the property granted by the principal indenture and then vested in the mortgagor subject to redemption and subject to such right or equity of redemption as the same were then subject to by virtue of the principal indenture, and also subject to the proviso for redemption thereinafter mentioned, being a proviso for redemption on payment by the mortgagor to the mortgagee of the sum of £6,000 with interest thereon in the meantime at the rate of £4 5*s.* per cent. on the 4th of November then next.

It appeared that by another indenture dated the 5th of June, 1899, and made between Cartmell Harrison, of the one part, and T. C. Elliott, of the other part, which contained no reference to the sub-mortgage of the 4th of January, 1899, Harrison purported to sub-mortgage the security of the 1st of July, 1898, to Elliott to secure £8,000, but it was admitted that the title of the plaintiffs under the sub-mortgage of the 4th of January, 1899, if valid, was sufficient to enable them to maintain the present action.

Harrison died in November, 1899, shortly after a receiving order in bankruptcy had been made against him.

T. C. Elliott died in 1901.

No notice of the deeds of the 1st of January, 1899, or the 4th of January, 1899, was given either by Harrison or by Elliott; but on the 3rd of June, 1902, the plaintiffs gave to the defendants notice in writing of both deeds.

The action was brought on the 16th of June, 1902.

At the trial Line was called as a witness for the plaintiffs, and gave evidence to the effect that he was an accountant, and had been for forty years in the employment of Messrs. Ingram, Harrison, & Ingram, solicitors, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, in which firm Cartmell Harrison was a partner; that he remembered Harrison taking a security in his name in 1898; that after July, 1898, he remembered Harrison coming into his room and wanting him to execute a transfer of the security to Elliott; but he objected to make the transfer because he might be liable; that he then looked into the accounts in the firm's ledger, and £6,000 appeared to have been advanced so far as he remembered; that he resented the transaction having the mortgage made in his name, and he executed the transfer back to Harrison in January, 1899, but that he had previously executed a declaration of trust and got it destroyed when he executed the transfer. He heard of the deed of July, 1898, within about a month of its execution. Both the defendants and Elliott were clients of Cartmell Harrison. The defendants borrowed money of him. Elliott placed money exceeding £9,200 in his hands for the purpose of being invested on mortgage.

The accounts kept by Harrison were put in evidence and were referred to by both parties; but it did not appear from them that the full sum of £9,200 had been advanced to the defendants on the 1st of July, 1898. A correspondence was referred to as containing an adm'ssion by the defendants that that sum had been advanced. One of the defendants, who presumably had knowledge on the subject, was not called, though present at the trial.

Grantham, J., held that the plaintiffs' case was made out, and he gave judgment for the full amount claimed.

The defendants appealed.

Levett, K.C., and J. A. Simon, for the defendants.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and Lewis Thomas, for the plaintiffs

Cur. adv. vult.

July 1.—STIRLING, L.J., delivered the judgment of the court. After setting out the facts as above, he continued: The defendants contended before us that the evidence did not warrant the conclusion arrived at in the court below as to the amount advanced by Harrison to the defendants; but, although that evidence is far from satisfactory, and the transaction remains in considerable obscurity, we are not prepared to differ from the learned judge. The plaintiffs, however, insisted that, even if a less sum than £9,200 was actually advanced, they were entitled to rely on the express statement contained in the deed of the 1st July, 1898, under the hands and seals of the defendants that that sum had been received by them, and it appears desirable to deal with this part of the case, which was very fully discussed before us.

It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue the defendants at law, and that their rights were equitable only. Now the action is brought under the provisions of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-section 6, which provides that "any absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor (not purporting to be by way of charge only) of any debt or other legal chose in action, of which express notice in writing shall have been given to the debtor . . . shall be and be deemed to have been effectual in law (subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority over the right of the assignee if this Act had not passed) to pass and transfer the legal right to such debt or chose in action from the date of such notice . . ." It was not disputed that the deed of the 4th of January, 1899, although only a sub-mortgage, constituted an absolute assignment within the meaning of the enactment (see Durham v. Robertson, [1898] 1 Q. B. 765, 46 W. R. Dig. 9; Hughes v. Pump House Hotel Co., 50 W. R. 660, [1902] 2 K. B. 190); but it was said that as Harrison and Elliott never gave any notice of the deeds of the 1st and 4th of January, 1899, to the defendants, neither of them ever acquired a legal title to the debt, and that the notice given by the plaintiffs before the bringing of this action, coming as it did after the death of Harrison, was not effectual to give them a legal title to sue. We are unable to assent to this argument. It is indeed true that neither Harrison nor Elliott ever acquired a legal right to sue the defendants. Still, each of the deeds of the 1st and 4th of January, 1899, is an "absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor" of the debt due to Line under the deed of the 1st of July, 1898, and under or by virtue of those deeds the plaintiffs, as the legal personal representatives of Elliott, have become and are entitled in equity to all the rights of Line under the deed of the 1st of July, 1898. In order that this title should become effectual at law as well as in equity all that the statute requires is that "express notice in writing" should be given to the debtor, and such notice was given by the plaintiffs before action brought. The statute prescribes no limit of time within which notice must be given, nor does it lay down that the notice must be given by any particular person: and we can see no good ground for holding that the notice given by the plaintiffs was ineffectual. Certainly no such limitations were found in the rules of the courts of equity on whose practice the statutory enactments were probably founded: see Lloyd v. Banks, 16 W. R. 988, L. R. 3 Ch. 488.

It was then said (and correctly) that the plaintiffs' right, even if legal, was by the express terms of the statute subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority if the Judicature Act had not passed. The equity claimed on behalf of the defendants was based on the rule laid down with respect to securities in Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Pri. 42, and applied to conveyances in Gresley v. Mousley, 3 De G. F. & J. 433; that a solicitor taking a security or conveyance from his own client cannot rely on any statement in the instrument as to the amount advanced or paid by him to the client, but must prove it by independent evidence. Line, it was said, was a mere trustee for Harrison, who could not be allowed to escape from the rule by taking the mortgage in the name of a trustee instead of to himself directly. To this it was answered that on the face of the deeds there was nothing to show that Line was a trustee for Harrison; that there was no evidence that Elliott knew that the full sum of £9,200 had not been advanced, and that, however the case might have stood as between Harrison and the defendants, the case of Bickerton v. Walker, 34 W. R. 141, 31 Ch. D. 151, was a binding authority in support of the proposition that the plaintiffs were entitled to rely on the express statement as to the receipt by the defendants of £9,200 contained in the deed of the 1st of July, 1898.

In Bickerton v. Walker a mortgage was executed as security for the repayment of £250. There was in the body of the deed an acknowledgment by the mortgagor of the receipt of that sum and a receipt signed by him for the amount was endorsed. The mortgage was shortly after its execution transferred to a transferee, who had no notice that the full sum of £250 had not been advanced. Afterwards the mortgagors brought an action alleging that they had received £91 only and claiming redemption on repayment with interest of what they had actually received. The Court of Appeal considered that the evidence was sufficient to entitle the mortgagors to judgment on that footing as against the original mortgagee, but held that as against the transferee who had no notice that the full amount had not been advanced, the account must be taken on the footing of its having been advanced. Fry, L.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, says: "We are of opinion that if an assignee is willing to take the risk of any payment having been made after the date of the mortgage, he is not guilty of carelessness or negligence if, in the absence of any circumstances to arouse suspicion, he relies on the solemn assurance under the hand and seal of the mortgagor as to the real bargain carried into effect by the mortgage deed, upon the possession of that deed by the mortgagee, and upon the receipt for the full amount of the mortgage money under the hand of the mortgagor." The mortgage in Bickerton v. Walker bore date in 1879, and the endorsed receipt was in conformity with the practice of conveyancers at the time. In the present case the deed of the 1st of July, 1898, has no receipt endorsed, but it is provided by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 55, that "a receipt for consideration money . . . in the body of a deed . . . shall, in favour of a subsequent purchaser not having notice that the money . . . thereby acknowledged to be received was not in fact paid . . . wholly or in part, be sufficient evidence of the payment . . . of the whole amount thereof." The absence, therefore, of an endorsed receipt does not prejudice the plaintiffs.

It was, however, contended that Elliott had, not actual, but constructive notice that the full amount had not been paid. This was sought to be made out as follows: It was said that when Harrison applied to Line to execute a transfer to Elliott he must be taken to have been acting as Elliott's solicitor, and that if an independent solicitor had been employed by Elliott and made the like application to Line, he would have discovered the whole truth; and consequently that Elliott was brought within the terms of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, s. 3, sub-section 1, which provides that "a purchaser shall not be prejudicially affected by notice of any instrument, fact, or thing, unless . . . (ii.) in the same transaction with respect to which a question of notice to the purchaser arises it . . . would have come to the knowledge of his solicitor or other agent as such, if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by the solicitor or other agent." Now the transaction in which Harrison was employed by Elliott was to find a security suitable for the investment of money placed by Elliott in Harrison's hands. Harrison was at the same time the owner of a security which he desired to make available for Elliott's purposes. An independent solicitor employed by Elliott would have dealt with Harrison, not with Line; and it seems improbable that he would ever have come in contact with Line, especially if it was the object of Harrison (as there is ground for supposing) to pass off the deed of the 1st of July, 1898, as a security on which the full amount of £9,200 had been advanced. His application to Line ought to be regarded as made, not on behalf of Elliott, but in his own right as equitable owner of the mortgage of the 1st of July, 1898. We are, therefore, unable to arrive at the conclusion that the true facts as to the amount advanced or the position of Line would have come to the knowledge of an independent solicitor employed by Elliott. On the whole we are of opinion that the principle laid down in Bickerton v. Walker applies to the present case, and that the plaintiffs have a better equity than the defendants. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Morgan, Upjohn, & Leech.

Solicitors for the defendants, Hunter & Haynes.

From K. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — April 21, 22.

JOHNSTON v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Practice—New trial—Railway accident—Damages—Application for a new trial—Excessive damage—Personal injuries—Loss of income—Misdirection of jury—Wrong measure adopted by jury.

If a jury in awarding damages to a plaintiff injured in a railway accident applied a wrong measure or took into consideration matters which they ought not to have taken into consideration in contravention of the direction of the judge, and the court can draw such an inference from the amount awarded and all the circumstances of the case, a new trial may be ordered, although the court is not in a position to say that the mere quantum of excess was so large that no reasonable jury could have arrived at such an amount. But if the jury in estimating the amount took into consideration the fact that the plaintiff would be debarred from following the profession for which he had fully qualified himself, and other relevant matters, then, although the amount awarded appears excessive, it is not for the court to traverse the verdict, and an application for a new trial on the ground of excessive damage will be refused.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, laid down in Praed v. Graham, 38 W. R. 103, 24 Q. B. D. 53, although it binds the court, does not prevent the court from looking at other decisions of the Court of Appeal—viz., Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 27 W. R. 797, 4 Q. B. D. 406, 28 W. R. 10, 5 Q. B. D. 78, as construing Praed v. Graham in the light of those decisions.

Decision in Rowley v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 21 W. R. 869, L. R. 8 Exch. 221, adopted.

This was an application by the defendants for judgment or new trial from a verdict and judgment of Grantham, J., and a special jury of Middlesex.

The facts were as follows: The action was brought to recover damages for personal injury caused to the plaintiff in a railway accident on the defendant company's railway.

The plaintiff, Mr. G. W. P. Johnston, was engaged in business as an engineer, and was travelling from Cardiff to Liverpool for the purpose of inspecting some property on the day in question. When he was only a few miles from his destination, the carriage in which he was, was derailed owing to the negligence of the company's servants, and dragged on its side for about 150 yards, and in consequence the plaintiff's left leg was seriously injured, and he was under medical treatment for several months.

The question of negligence was not disputed by the defendant company, and the only question in dispute was as to the amount of damage to which the plaintiff was entitled.

At the trial evidence was given by medical men that the plaintiff's leg would never probably be as good again as before the accident, but an operation, if successful, would certainly considerably benefit him, though even in that case he would have to be very careful as to how he used it.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff was connected with a firm well known in the engineering world, the partners in the Johnston Line, a well-known Liverpool firm, being his uncles, and he had gone through a very strict training for an engineer, had obtained a first-class certificate, and was well qualified, his intention being to obtain the post of superintending marine engineer, and as he had such good qualifications, had every prospect of obtaining the post. At the time of the accident he was living with his father, and was temporarily employed by him on some engineering business, at a salary of £3 per week. Evidence was given relating to the necessity of a superintendent marine engineer being obliged to be sound in wind and limb, as the work consisted to a great extent of going up and down ladders and into places difficult of access. Also that he was well qualified for the post, which were usually well paid, the salary varying from £750 to £1,000 a year, and sometimes £1,500 a year.

The plaintiff had applied for the post as engineer manager at a high salary, and which, but for his physical condition, he would have obtained.

At the time of the trial he was earning £2 10s. per week.

The defendants on their part showed that by certain evidence such would not be the case, and that he would still be able to attend to his profession.

The jury awarded the plaintiff £3,000 damages.

The defendant company appealed for misdirection by the judge in misstating and not explaining to the jury the medical evidence, and by omitting to tell them how they should assess the damage for loss of income, and that the damages were excessive.

Lawson Walton, K.C., and Park Goff, for the appellants.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and Chester Jones, for the respondent plaintiff, referred to Praed v. Graham, 38 W. R. 103, 24 Q. B. D. 53, 38 W. R. Dig. 109.

Lawson Walton, K.C., in reply, cited Rowley v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 21 W. R. 869, L. R. 8 Exch. 221, 21 W. R. Dig. 8. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 27 W. R. 797, 4 Q. B. D. 406, at p. 409, 27 W. R. Dig. 68, 28 W. R. 10, 5 Q. B. D. 78, 28 W. R. Dig. 73.]

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I have endeavoured to give this case every consideration. In these railway company cases it is impossible to ignore the fact that juries are prone, when damages are being sought in respect of injuries sustained in an accident, to give a larger amount than justice would permit. Undoubtedly £3,000 does seem somewhat large, and I do not hesitate to say that is a larger amount than I myself would have given. But it is plain upon the authorities that the fact that the verdict is for a larger sum than the court would itself have given is not a sufficient reason for granting a new trial. If the only matter that the court has brought before it is an overestimate of the damages, I take it that the rule laid down by Lord Esher, M.R., in Praed v. Graham, 38 W. R. 103, 24 Q. B. D. 53, if properly understood, plainly binds us. By that I mean that though this case, a decision of the Court of Appeal, binds the court in the present case, now it does not prevent us from looking at other decisions of the Court of Appeal and construing Praed v. Graham in the light of those other decisions. But I repeat that if it had been only an overestimate of the damages which could be urged against the verdict, then the rule laid down by Lord Esher, M.R., should govern our decision, and there is nothing, so far as I can see, in any of the other decisions of the Court of Appeal which at all impugns our decision. Now, the rule laid down by Lord Esher, M.R., in Praed v. Graham is thus expressed: "I think that the rule of conduct is as nearly as possible the same as where the court is asked to set aside a verdict on the ground that it is against the weight of evidence. If the court, having fully considered the whole of the circumstances of the case, came to this conclusion only—'We think that the damages are larger than we ourselves should have given, but not so large as that twelve sensible men could not reasonably have given them'—then they ought not to interfere with the verdict." If one looks merely at the alleged overestimate of the damages in this case before us, I am not prepared to say that the damages are so large as that twelve sensible men could not reasonably have given them. But in my judgment if one looks at the decision in Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 27 W. R. 797, 4 Q. B. D. 406, 28 W. R. 10, 5 Q. B. D. 78, either in the Queen's Bench in the judgment of Cockburn, L.C.J., or in the Court of Appeal in the judgment of James, L.J., it seems to me that it may be right to order a new trial, although one could not say that the damages are so large that twelve sensible men could not reasonably have given them—that is, in a case in which, although the court cannot come to the conclusion that the damages are perversely large, yet the amount enables the court to say that the jury must have disregarded a direction as to the measure of damages which they ought to have regarded. In Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co. the damages were impugned, not as being too large, but as being too small, and the suggestion apparently was that, the plaintiff having been so injured that he would be thereby debarred from continuing to earn his livelihood in his profession, the jury, instead of measuring his loss in relation to the amount of his earnings antecedently to the accident, chose to take into consideration the fact that he had a wealthy wife and was therefore not placed in circumstances which made it necessary for him to earn his own livelihood. That was an inference, then, drawn from the circumstances of the case, together with the amount of damages. And I take it the same principle applies if the damages, instead of being impugned as being too small, as in Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co., had been impugned as being too large, as in the present case. In either case I think it is equally true that if the court, from the circumstances of the case and the amount of the damages, can draw the inference that the jury must have applied a wrong measure of damage in contravention of the direction of the judge, the court may order a new trial, although it is not in a position to say that the mere quantum of excess is so large that no reasonable jury could have arrived at such an amount. I would refer to the following passage in the judgment of Cockburn, L.C.J. (4 Q. B. D., at p. 407). [His lordship read the passage, and continued:] So in the present case, if I could come to the conclusion that, looking at the figures, the jury must have taken into account some head, or some measure of damage not properly involved in the plaintiff's claim, I should say that we ought to order a new trial. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision of Cockburn, L.C.J., and James, L.J., said: "We agree that judges have no right to overrule the verdict of a jury as to the amount of damages merely because they take a different view, and I think that if they had been the jury they would have given more or they would have given less, still the verdicts of juries as to the amount of damages are subject, and must for the sake of justice be subject, to the supervision of a court of first instance, and, if necessary, of a court of appeal, in this way, that is to say, if in the judgment of the court the damages are unreasonably large or unreasonably small, then the court is bound to send the matter for reconsideration by a jury."

It seems to me that there is nothing in these words of James, L.J., inconsistent with Lord Esher's rule in Praed v. Graham. The Lord Justice continued: "The Queen's Bench Division came to the conclusion in this case that the amount of the damages was unreasonably small, and for the reasons which were given by the Lord Chief Justice, pointing out that certain topics which the jury could not have taken into consideration, I am of opinion, and I believe my colleagues are also of opinion, for the same reasons and upon the same grounds, that the damages are unreasonably small, to what extent of course we must not speculate, and have no business to say."

Now, in my opinion, the only way in which the figure of the damages and the circumstances of the present case could prove that the jury in measuring the damages took into consideration topics which they ought not to have taken into consideration, or applied a measure of damage which they ought not to have applied, would be, if we could draw the inference that the amount of the verdict proved that the jury had disregarded the fact to which their attention was called by Grantham, J., that the accidents of life and other elements ought to be taken into consideration so as to prevent a jury from giving a plaintiff such a sum as would be simply an investment, enabling him to do nothing to earn his livelihood. Now, one can only come to such a conclusion if it could properly be said that no jury, having regard to the evidence, could have put the difference between the prospective earnings of the plaintiff if he had been uninjured and those earnings after his injury at a higher figure than, say, £X a year, and then if you found that the amount of the verdict, after deducting all special damage, and all damages given for personal pain and suffering, was a sum which equalled or exceeded the sum which would purchase a life annuity for a person of the plaintiff's age equal to the difference to which I have referred. In such a case I think a new trial might be ordered without reference to any perversity of mind of the jury in regard to the quantum. In any case in which you are able to draw the inference that the jury either included a topic which ought not to have been included, or measured the damages by a measure which ought not to have been applied, I think there ought to be a new trial. But I am not prepared to say that that is so in the present case. It certainly is very difficult to estimate the damages in this case, but I think that if you take the evidence as a whole, it is not unreasonable to say that the jury were entitled to take into consideration as a material and substantial matter the possibility that this plaintiff would never be able to accept the position of a superintendent of marine engineering, as there is no doubt he was qualified for it; and at the time of the accident it was the intention of his life. He was just putting a finishing touch to his education, not in respect of the special matter of marine engineering, but in respect of the general knowledge which every engineer ought to have, and he was doing this because having regard to the interest of his family in shipping, it was reasonably certain that as soon as he was qualified he would obtain such a post; and that he was qualified and highly qualified there is no doubt.

What, then, ought we to do if there is evidence which would justify a jury in coming to a conclusion that it was extremely doubtful whether the plaintiff would ever be able to fill such a post? Apparently, from the evidence, the position of a superintending marine engineer is a well-paid position. Under these circumstances it is extremely difficult to form any positive opinion as to the amount of the difference in the plaintiff's prospective earnings—the difference between what he would have got if there had been no accident and what he would be able to get since the accident; and I do not see my way, by reason of the amount of the damages or of the evidence, to say that the jury have taken into consideration either topics or a measure of damages which they ought not to have taken into consideration. I cannot say they have disregarded the rule laid down in Rowley v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 21 W. R. 869, L. R. 8 Exch. 221, that the jury may not properly assess as damages a sum of money equal to the present price or value of an annuity equal to that income which would probably have been earned by the plaintiff but for the accident. This being so, I have now only to deal shortly with the suggested misdirection. [His lordship read the summing up, and came to the conclusion that the direction of the learned judge was accurate.] The learned judge further stated: "He is not fitted for that for which he has spent the greater part of his life in qualifying himself, and successfully qualifying himself." Having regard to the fact that the jury had the evidence of the experts before them, I do not think they could have misunderstood that last sentence. On the whole, therefore, my judgment is that the application for a new trial must be refused.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have really very little to add, but out of respect to the argument which has been addressed to us I wish to state very shortly the grounds on which I have arrived at my conclusion. The question is as to the amount of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled by reason of a railway accident. The plaintiff is a young man of twenty-eight, who has been trained for the position of a superintending marine engineer. He has trained himself for that, not merely because engineering is a profession to which he desires to apply himself, but because he had the prospect through his relatives of filling such a post. At the time of the accident he had not obtained that position. He was then only in the employment of his father's firm temporarily, at a salary of £3 per week, and living at home. Then occurred this accident, and after it he made an attempt to obtain employment in connection with some steamers abroad; his application was refused on the ground of his physical condition. The salary attached to that employment would have been £500 a year, rising annually. There is ample evidence that he was well qualified to fill that position. That is how matters stood at the time of the trial. But it was said that he might submit to an operation which, if successful, would greatly improve his condition, and he was willing to submit to it. Of course there is always a certain amount of risk attending any operation, but in the present state of surgical skill, as I read the evidence, the danger in this case would not be great. But what would be the position supposing that the operation was successful? The plaintiff's principal medical witness said that even if the operation were successful, it would be impossible for him to be as good as before the accident, and that he ought not to take any place necessitating him having to go up or down ladders.

Now, that being the general outline of the case, for I think there is no great difference in the medical opinions, the question is whether the jury have come to a conclusion which we can call in question by reason of their having given a verdict for £3,000. Of that sum about £450 is in respect of expenses and loss of income which at the date of the trial had been already incurred. There remains, therefore, a sum of £2,250, which is the compensation for the prospective loss to this young man in his profession. Looking at all the circumstances and weighing them, I am unable to come to the conclusion that the jury have either taken into consideration matters which they ought not to have taken into consideration, or that the sum is one which twelve sensible men could not reasonably have awarded. In these circumstances, although I do not think I should myself have come to the same conclusion as to the amount of damages, I do not see my way to interfere with the verdict and judgment.

COZENS HARDY, L.J.—I agree.

Application refused.

Solicitors, R. R. Nelson; Leslie Williams & Alder.

From K. B. Div.
(Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) March 11.

HARMAN v. AINSLIE. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Affirmative and negative covenants—Covenant not to assign or sublet without lessor's consent—Proviso for re-entry on breach of any covenant on the lessee's part to be performed.

A lease of a house contained covenants by the lessee to pay rates, taxes, and repairs and not to assign or underlet the premises without first obtaining the lessor's consent in writing, and it contained a proviso for re-entry that "if the lessee shall commit any breach of the covenants hereinbefore contained, and on his part to be performed, then the said lessor may re-enter upon the premises." The lessee underlet the premises without obtaining the lessor's consent.

Held, that the proviso for re-entry applied to breaches of negative as well as affirmative covenants, and that as there had been a breach of the covenant not to assign or underlet without the landlord's consent, a forfeiture had occurred, and the landlord was entitled to recover the possession of the house.

Decision of Wright, J. ([1903] 2 K. B. 241), reversed.

Appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of Wright, J., who tried the action without a jury.

The action was brought to recover possession of certain premises by the assignee of the reversion upon a lease of them against the assignee of the lease as upon a forfeiture.

The indenture of lease, which was dated the 8th of July, 1885, witnessed that in consideration of the rent and covenants thereinafter reserved and contained on the part of the lessee to be paid, observed, and performed, the lessor, Mrs. S. Popplesdorf, demised the house No. 76, High-street, Southend, to the lessee, one Alderman, for a term of twenty-one years at a rental of £60.

The lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to use the premises for any business except that of an outfitter without the licence in writing of the lessor. The lease also contained a proviso for re-entry in case the lessee should "make default in the performance of any of the covenants upon his part to be performed."

The original lessor gave the original lessee licence in writing on the 7th of February, 1887, to assign the lease to one Comber, and by the same document gave her consent "that hereafter any art, trade, or business may be carried on in the said premises except that of a photographer, hairdresser, or tobacconist." And by an indenture of even date Alderman, in pursuance of the said licence, assigned the lease to Comber. In July, 1897, the plaintiff Harman purchased the reversion from Mrs. Popplesdorf.

By an indenture dated the 2nd of October, 1899, Comber assigned the lease to the defendant Ainslie, who subsequently permitted part of the premises to be used as a baker and confectioner's shop.

The plaintiff claimed that this constituted a breach of the covenant in the lease of July, 1885, and brought this action to recover possession of the premises under the proviso for re-entry.

It was contended for the defendant that the licence given by the original lessor in February, 1887, to use the premises for trades other than that of an outfitter enured for the benefit of the defendant; and that there was consequently no breach of the covenant; and, further, that if there was a breach, the proviso did not authorize the plaintiff to re-enter for a breach of a negative covenant.

Wright, J., held that the proviso for re-entry applied only to breaches of positive and not of negative covenants. He intimated that the licence given in 1887 by Mrs. Popplesdorf to the then tenant to carry on any trade with certain specified exceptions was in his opinion sufficient licence to the defendant as the assignee of the lease, and therefore he was prepared to hold that there had been no breach of covenant, had it been necessary to decide that question. He therefore gave judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiff appealed.

Younger, K.C., and Samuel Green, for the plaintiff.—We rely upon the breach of covenant not to underlet the premises without the consent in writing of the lessor as sufficient to entitle the plaintiff here to judgment. The word "performed" in the proviso for re-entry is applicable to negative as well as positive covenants, and therefore Wright, J., ought not to have held that the proviso for re-entry must be understood as applying only to breaches of the affirmative covenants. Doe v. Marchelli, 1 B. & Ad. 715, 35 R. R. 420, is a decision on this point. In Croft v. Lumley, 6 W. R. 524, 6 H. L. C. 672, the words were "performed, observed, and kept," and therefore the question did not arise, but Martin, B. (at p. 719), expressed obiter a view in favour of the plaintiff's contention. In West v. Dobb, 18 W. R. 1167, L. R. 5 Q. B. 460, which is the next in order of date, Kelly, C.B., and Channell, B., seem to have thought that a clause of re-entry applied only to a positive covenant, but there again the opinion was only dicta, and seem to be contrary to all the other cases. In Hyde v. Warden, 25 W. R. 65, 3 Ex. D. 72, at p. 82, the judgment of Amphlett, L.J., which was read by Brett, L.J., there was a dictum in favour of the defendant; but in Barrow v. Isaacs, 39 W. R. 338, [1891] 1 Q. B. 417, there were dicta by Lord Esher, M.R. (at p. 419), and of Kay, L.J. (at p. 424), that "performance" was applicable to negative as well as affirmative covenants. Secondly, on the construction of the lease taken as a whole it would seem that the words "performed" and "observed" were used indefinitely and are used interchangeably with reference to affirmative and negative covenants. Thirdly, the substance and not the form of the covenant must be looked at, and so regarded, the covenant not to assign or underlet without the lessor's consent is not wholly negative. The covenant is in substance to get the consent in writing of the lessor. The affirmative element is the procuring the lessor's consent before assigning, and in that sense is capable of being performed, and that is really the element of substance; the negative element of that form may be disregarded: Duke of St. Albans v. Ellis, 16 East 352, 14 R. R. 361; Clegg v. Hands, 38 W. R. 433, 44 Ch. D. 503, at p. 522; Metropolitan Electric Supply Co. v. Ginder, 49 W. R. 508, [1901] 2 Ch. 799, at p. 806; Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. Manchester Racecourse Co., 49 W. R. 418, [1901] 2 Ch. 37; Sear v. House Property and Investment Society, 29 W. R. 192, 16 Ch. D. 387; Mason v. Corder, 7 Taunt. 9, 17 R. R. 427. The lessee having broken his obligation to retain possession until the consent in writing of the lessor to assign the premises was obtained, the proviso as to re-entry applied, and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Hume Williams, K.C., and R. J. W. Neville, for the defendant.—The authorities show that a forfeiture clause must be construed strictly, and upon the facts the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The weight of authority is all in the defendant's favour, for there is no case where there is a direct decision that the word "performed" in such a clause as the one that is now being considered has been held to apply to a negative convenant: Doe v. Marchetti, 1 B. & Ad. 715, 35 R. R. 420; Doe v. Godwin, 4 M. & S. 265, 16 R. R. 463; and Doe v. Stevens, 3 B. & Ad. 299, 37 R. R. 429. Besides these authorities there are dicta to the same effect in many cases, from Croft v. Lumley down to the decision in Barrow v. Isaacs. Fry, J., in Evans v. Davis, 27 W. R. 285, 10 Ch. 747, and Lopes, J., in Timms v. Baker, 49 L. T. 106, 31 W. R. Dig. 167, the word "perform" had an essentially active meaning, and was not held applicable to a negative covenant, for a negative cannot be performed. There is no substance in the plaintiff's contention that a covenant not to assign without the lessor's consent was essentially a positive covenant. The fact that there is a provision for the withdrawal of the prohibition cannot convert the obligation not to assign without consent, which is negative, into an affirmative obligation. Nor does the plaintiff's contention that the words "to be performed" mean to be "observed and performed" really carry the argument further in his favour, for both the words "observe" and "perform" occur at the beginning of the lease and in the covenant for quiet enjoyment. If the words "and on his part to be performed" are construed as merely equivalent to the "lessee's covenants," they fail to have any meaning, for the proviso would have same effect exactly if it had ended at the word "contained." The omission of the word "observed" in the proviso for re-entry was an intentional omission, and effect ought to be given to it on the established rule of construction.

Younger, K.C., replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—The question in this case is whether the plaintiff, who is the assignee of the reversion of certain leased premises, has the right to eject the defendant, who is the assignee of the lease, under a proviso contained in the lease for forfeiture and re-entry in certain events. The alleged grounds for forfeiture are a breach of a covenant not to carry on certain trades on the premises in question, and a breach of a covenant not to assign or underlet without the consent of the lessor. The case has been narrowed down to the question whether there has been a breach by the defendant not to underlet without consent. The main point decided by my brother Wright, J., at the trial was that the proviso for re-entry by its terms was inapplicable to a negative covenant, as the word "performed" pointed, in his opinion, only to positive covenants. It is therefore necessary to consider the exact wording of the lease. It was held by Wright, J., that the words of the proviso being "if the said lessee shall commit any breach of the covenants hereinbefore contained, and on his part to be performed then . . . the said lessor may re-enter upon the said premises," those words made it impossible to give effect to the proviso where the breach was a negative covenant, like that against assigning or underletting, because the word "performed" was inapplicable to such a covenant. The notion upon which the learned judge's ruling is founded goes very far back, the root of it being apparently a statement in Co. Litt. 303*b*, which is referred to in a note to Doe v. Marchetti, 1 B. & Ad. 715, 35 R. R. 420, and which is as follows: "A man is bound to perform all the covenants in an indenture; if all the covenants be in the affirmative, he may generally plead performance of all; but if any be in the negative, to so many he must plead specially; for a negative cannot be performed." That passage appears to be the basis of the supposed rule. The rule itself seems never to have been the subject of a direct decision, but only of dicta in various cases. The dictum of Lord Coke was expressly limited to pleading. He said that a man was bound to perform all his covenants, but if any of them were negative, he might plead to them specially. Now it is to be noticed that in this very sentence Lord Coke treats the performance of a covenant as equivalent to giving effect to the obligation imposed by the covenant. A man may very well perform a covenant by refraining from doing that which he has undertaken by the covenant that he would not do. The difficulty which has arisen seems to turn on a confusion between an obligation and the method of giving effect to the obligation—the difference between a bargain and doing the duty imposed by the bargain. A bargain like the obligation of a covenant may in certain cases be performed by not doing that which it had been bargained should not be done. The performance of a covenant may very well mean the giving effect to the obligation of the covenant, whether the covenant be positive or negative. The nearest approach to a decision on this oft cited dictum of Lord Coke is to be found in the case of Doe v. Marchetti. It was there held that a proviso in a lease, giving power of re-entry if the tenant should make default in performance of any of the clauses by the space of thirty days after notice did not apply to the breach of a covenant not to allow alterations in the premises or permit new buildings to be erected thereon without permission. That decision, however, in my opinion, is really not a decision on the question raised in the present appeal, and for the reason expressed in the passage I am about to read from the judgment of Lord Tenterden: "It cannot be supposed that the parties anticipated a thirty days' notice being given to raise the walls or vary from the original plan of the premises or not to suffer buildings to be erected or windows or openings to be made. It is quite different where the notice required is to do some such act as repairing or paying money; there a stipulation for notice is reasonably introduced and is evidently for the benefit of the lessee. Taking the whole clause of re-entry together, I think the introduction of these words 'by the space of thirty days next after notice' confines it to those covenants which are to be performed by the lessee and which not being performed he incurs a forfeiture." Since then there have been a number of other dicta on the point, but they do not when carefully looked at amount to a decision either way. Some no doubt support the appellant's view, but there are others that go to support with equal force that of the respondent. In Croft v. Lumley Martin, B., at p. 791 of the report in 6 H. L. C. 672, says: "I do not myself consider there is any inaccuracy in language in saying that a man has performed his covenant when he has not done that which he covenanted not to do; or that he made default in performing his covenant when he has done it. The abiding by a covenant is a performance of it; the non-abiding a non-performance." Bramwell, B., did not dissent from that view. At p. 705 of the same report he says: "I think that default of or in performance of all covenants to be performed, observed, and kept applies to covenants not to do something as well as to covenants to do something." Those were dicta in the appellant's favour. Now let us see those that are in favour of the respondent's view. The dicta in West v. Dobb expressed by Kelly, L.C.B., and Channell, B., in the Exchequer Chamber of the Court of Appeal in Hyde v. Warden, and others expressed by Fry, J., in Evans v. Davis and Lopes, J., in Timmis v. Baker, were to the same effect. But to my mind the really important authority on this question in modern times is to be found in Barrow v. Isaacs. There Lord Esher says: "It was argued by the defendant's counsel that the covenant was not to underlet without the landlord's consent was a negative, not an affirmative covenant, and that therefore the stipulation for re-entry for breach of covenant did not apply. But I think that that proposition is disposed of, because the word "observe" as well as "perform" has been put in the stipulation, though I doubt whether it was necessary to put that word in." Kay, L.J., expressed a similar opinion. He said: "Another point made was that the proviso for re-entry refers only to the breach of affirmative and not of negative covenants. This is founded on certain obiter dicta in Hyde v. Warden. Speaking for myself I should think that an extremely narrow construction of the word 'perform' only had been used. 'Perform' has not necessarily an active meaning. We say that a man performs his duty by not answering revilings, by being silent when he ought not to speak, and by many other abstentions from acting as well as by active proceedings."

Now, in this state of the authorities on the point, the opinion I have come to is that the court is still at liberty to decide the question according to their own view, and according to what seems to them to be common sense. Looked at in that view, that it is open to the court to follow its own opinion, I prefer the dicta of Martin, B., in Croft v. Lumley and of the Court of Appeal in the case last mentioned—Barrow v. Isaacs—to the contrary dicta relied upon by the respondent. In a proviso for re-entry for non-performance of covenants, it seems to me that the word "perform" is used as meaning the fulfilment of the obligation or duty undertaken, and not as referring to the thing to be done or left undone in pursuance of the covenant; and that a negative covenant may be said to be performed by a man's not doing the thing which he has promised not to do, as an affirmative covenant is by his doing what he has promised to do. Therefore in absolute strictness, if it is a question of going into the nicieties of language, I think the words of this proviso for re-entry are appropriate to the breach of a negative covenant. With reference to some of the earlier dicta on the subject, it may be observed that when the refined distinction upon which the defendant relies was first introduced, there was a natural inclination on the part of the courts to avoid holding that there was a forfeiture. The law with regard to relief against forfeitures was not developed as in more modern times. There is not, now that the Legislature has carefully considered and provided for the various cases in which they think relief ought to be given against forfeiture, the same reason as there once was for not construing provisoes for re-entry according to the fair grammatical meaning of the words used. It does not, I think, affect the consideration that, in the particular case of the breach of a covenant not to assign or sublet, the Legislature has not provided for giving relief to a lessee against forfeiture. It is none the less the case that the reasons which gave rise to the strict mode of construction applied to forfeiture clauses in general in former times no longer exist.

The result of the authorities is that we are left with the right to exercise our own judgment on the construction of the proviso for re-entry in this case, and that the last and most authoritative pronouncement of two judges of this court are in favour of the view contended for by the plaintiff. That being so, there is, to my mind, nothing in the terms of this lease to prevent us from giving to the word "performed" in the proviso for re-entry that meaning which primâ facie I should be disposed to give it. I rather gather that Wright, J., would have been disposed to take the same view of its meaning, but that he thought himself bound by the proponderating authorities to the contrary.

For these reasons the appeal on the important point of law that has been argued must be allowed with costs. On the subsidiary point, whether on the facts there had been a waiver of the breach of covenant, unless the parties agree to a settlement, there must be a new trial.

ROMER and MATHEW, L.JJ., gave judgment to the same effect.

Appeal allowed on the question of law; new trial ordered on the question of waiver.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Leslie, Antill, & Arnold.

Solicitor for the defendant, C. E. Soames.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } July 5, 6.

SHARPINGTON v. FULHAM GUARDIANS. (a.)

Public authority — Payment of debt — Public duty — Damages—Public Authorities Protection Act. 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61)—Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 46).

Where a contractor brought an action under a building contract against a public authority for payment for work done and damages after the expiration of the time limited by the above-mentioned Acts for the suing of a public authority in respect of acts done in the performance of a public duty,

Held, that the public authority was not entitled to the protection given by the said Acts, and that the plaintiff could recover.

Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, [1896] A. C. 477, 45 W. R. Dig. 111, followed.

Action.

This was an action by the plaintiff, a builder, against the defendants, on a building agreement, for damages in respect of injury to the plaintiff caused by defendants' negligence.

(a.) Reported by H. WOLCOTT WARNER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The material facts were shortly as follows:—

On the 18th of January, 1900, the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiff for converting an existing building into a home for destitute children. In entering into a contract for this purpose the defendants were acting under statutory authority.

The work was completed on the 3rd of May, 1901, and was measured up for purposes of payment in the month of September, 1901.

The plaintiff demanded extra payment in respect of work done which was not included in the contract and expense incurred owing to the defendants neglecting to give proper instructions as to the work to be executed.

On the 9th of April, 1902, the plaintiff demanded that the defendants should consent to arbitration, under the terms of the contract, in respect of the extra sums claimed by him as aforesaid.

This action was brought in the course of the arbitration in order to obtain the opinion of the court on two points of law.

The defendants admitted the facts for the purposes of this action, and relied on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (a), which enacts: "Where after the commencement of this Act any action, prosecution, or other proceeding is commenced in the United Kingdom against any person for any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty, or authority, the following provisions shall have effect: (a) The action, prosecution, or proceeding shall not lie or be instituted unless it is commenced within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of, or in the case of a continuance of injury or damage within six months next after the ceasing thereof."

The defendants further, and in the alternative, relied on the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, ss. 1 and 4, which are as follows:

Section 1.—"With respect to any debt, claim, or demand which may be lawfully incurred by or become due from the guardians of any union or parish, or the board of management of any school or asylum district, such debt, claim, or demand shall be paid within the half-year in which the same shall have been incurred or become due, or within three months after the expiration of such half-year, but not afterwards; the commencement of such half-year to be reckoned from the time when the last half-year's account shall, or ought to have been, closed, according to the order of the Poor Law Commissioners or Poor Law Board."

Section 4.—"If any person claiming any debt or demand shall have commenced, or shall hereafter commence, proceedings in any court of law or equity, or before any justice or other competent authority, within the time hereinbefore limited . . . and shall with due diligence prosecute such proceedings to judgment or other final settlement of the question, such judgment shall be satisfied by the guardians or managers against whom or whose officer the same may be brought, notwithstanding that such judgment may be recovered, or such final settlement arrived at, after the expiration of the period hereinbefore provided, and all proceedings taken, by mandamus or otherwise, for the enforcing of such judgment without delay shall be deemed to be within the operation of this section."

The question to be decided was whether, in view of the fact that the plaintiff had not instituted any proceedings against the defendants in respect of his claim within the periods limited by either of the above-mentioned Acts, the defendants were protected by the provisions of those Acts or either of them.

Upjohn, K.C., and Beddall, for the plaintiff.—This case does not come within section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; that section only applies to acts done in pursuance of a public duty. In this case the defendants entered into the contract in the performance of a public duty, but the carrying out of the terms of the contract is a private duty to the plaintiff. There is no authority on this section, but Midland Railway v. Local Board for the District of Withington, 11 Q. B. D. 788, 32 W. R. Dig. 122, was decided on an analogous section of the Public Health Act, 1875. [Davies v. Corporation of Swansea 8 Ex. Rep. 808, and Wallace v. Smith, 5 East 115, were also cited.] Sections 1 and 4 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, refer to debts which the guardians could and ought to have paid within the time limited. Here, until the conclusion of the arbitration, the debt cannot be paid, as it is unascertained: Midland Railway v. Edmonton Union, [1895] A. C. 485; Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, [1896] A. C. 477; and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway v. Doncaster Guardians, 45 W. R. 82, [1897] 1 Q. B. 117.

Butcher, K.C., and Hudson, for the defendants.—The acts done under the contract were done in the performance of a public duty. The language of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, is wide and must be construed strictly: The Fdun, [1899] P. 236, 47 W. R. Dig. 166; Jeremiah Ambler & Sons (Limited) v. Bradford Corporation, [1902] 2 Ch. 585, 51 W. R. Dig. 43; Attorney-General v. Proprietors of Margate Pier and Harbour, 48 W. R. 518, [1900] 1 Ch. 749; and Parker v. London County Council, 52 W. R. 476, 68 J. P. 239. As regards sections 1 and 4 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, an arbitrator is a competent authority within the meaning of that Act. The proceedings before him were commenced out of time, and the defendants are entitled to the protection given by the Act.

FARWELL, J., in giving judgment, said: This is an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for damages under a building contract. The duty to provide such a building as was contracted for was imposed on the defendants by statute; they were consequently enabled to enter into the contract with the plaintiff. The plaintiff has not been paid for additional work done. This is in effect a breach of contract and the matter is before an arbitrator.

This action is brought in order to raise two points of law. The first point is under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (a). [His lordship here read the section.] It is said that the breach of the contract on the part of the defendants is a neglect of a public duty within the section. Apparently no decision can be found on this point, but, in my opinion, this is an attempt to carry the intention of the Act too far. Public authorities now perform in many cases the functions of a private contractor, and in every case require authority for so doing in order that their action may not be ultrà vires; therefore in a sense their action may be said to be public. This is the first time that it has been attempted to apply the provisions of the Act to a contract of this nature. If I should decide in favour of the defendants, it would follow that any act done by a public authority in pursuance of a contract might be held to be done in performance of a public duty, it would be impossible to draw the line.

The cases cited by the defendants do not touch the question, they are cases of tort founded an negligence in the performance of a public duty, as in the case of The Ydun, [1899] P. 236, and in Jeremiah Ambler & Sons (Limited) v. Bradford Corporation, [1902] 2 Ch. 585. Romer, L.J., in the course of his judgment says: "This action is one which seems to me expressly to fall within the statute, for the sole cause of complaint of the plaintiffs as against the defendants is the erection by the defendants of the sluices and works in question, and the action is one against the defendants 'for' such an act as is specified by the statute."

Parker v. London County Council, 52 W. R. 476, 68 J. P. 239, can be explained in the same way. The present case is different. The public public duty here is to supply a receiving house, and a breach of that duty would cause injury to the public. In order to carry out that duty the defendants enter into the present contract; it is a breach of the latter that is complained of by the private contractor. The question of public duty only comes in because if there was no public duty the private contract would be ultrà vires. If this were not so, all contracts by public bodies would be within the Act. It must be either all or none, and for the reason I have given in my opinion it should be none.

As regards the second point raised, under the Poor Law (Payments of Debts) Act, 1859, ss. 1 and 4, I think the case is covered by the authorities. The case cited in the House of Lords (Guardians of West Ham v. The Churchwardens of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, [1896] A. C. 477) makes the way plain, and I must follow it. For time to run under the Act the public body must be able to pay and neglect to do so; in the present case the defendants cannot pay, as the sum to be paid is not yet ascertained. The result is that the plaintiff succeeds on both the points raised, and there must be judgment accordingly.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Booth & Smee.

Solicitor for the defendant, T. Blanco White.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } June 17, 18, 20.

PORTER v. MOORE.

Trustees—Liability—Mortgage by beneficiary—Inquiry as to prior charge—Trustees induced to sign incorrect statement by concealment of facts—Security deficient—Trustees not liable—Estoppel.

M., donee of a power, appointed £1,000 to her son C. and £1,400 to her son E. E. mortgaged this sum, and notice of the charge was given to the trustees, a fact which they entirely forgot. M., by her will, forgetting the appointment to E., appointed to her two sons and her daughter such further sums as, with C.'s £1,000, exhausted the fund. E. applied to X., one of the plaintiffs, for a loan on his interest under M.'s will, concealing the former appointment. X. required a memorandum from the trustees that they had no notice of a prior charge. He applied for this to P. & A., solicitors to the trust, who informed him they never advised trustees to give such assurance. They, however, authorized X. to call on Dr. M., one of the trustees, to obtain from him a declaration of C.'s identity. X. sent his clerk, who took advantage of the visit to induce Dr. M. to sign the memorandum as to notices. Dr. M. was unwilling to sign without legal advice, but gave way on being informed that P. & A. had been seen and their assent obtained. The sight of Dr. M.'s signature led the other trustee to sign. X. completed the mortgage without informing P. & A. of the signatures he had obtained. E.'s interest, after paying the prior charge, was not sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' mortgage, and they claimed the deficiency from the trustees to whom the receipt of notice of the prior charge had been brought home.

Held, that the circumstances under which the signatures to the memorandum had been obtained precluded the plaintiffs from praying it in aid to estop the trustees from setting up the prior charge as a defence, and that the trustees were therefore not liable.

This was the trial of an action to determine whether a trustee and the representatives of his deceased co-trustee were liable to make good to the plaintiffs, the mortgagees of a share in the trust fund, a deficiency in the security caused by a prior charge not disclosed.

Thomas Nield, who died in 1861, bequeathed £6,000 in trust for his daughter Mary Cordingly for life, with remainder to her three children as she should by deed or will appoint.

She appointed £1,000 to her son Charles by deed in 1882, and £1,400 to her son Edward by deed dated the 10th of July, 1890, and Edward mortgaged this latter sum to R. J. Whitla by deed dated the 23rd of August, 1890, to secure £600 with interest and costs.

Mary Cordingly appeared to have forgotten the appointment to Edward, for by her will, made in 1899, she appointed further sums of £1,000 to Charles and £2,000 to Edward and a sum of £2,000 to her daughter, adding words to the effect that these three sums, together with the £1,000 already appointed to Charles, would exhaust the £6,000.

She died in February, 1900, and Edward, who was in Canada, then returned to England for the purpose of obtaining payment of his share, but finding there would be delay he applied to X., a solicitor in Manchester, for a loan of £1,500 informing him of the appointment by his mother's will but not of the previous appointment or of the mortgage of 1890.

X. was inclined to lend the money, in conjunction with two other persons who were plaintiffs with him in the action, and he was put in communication with Messrs. Parker & Ayre, the solicitors to the trustees of Thomas Nield's will, from whom he obtained information regarding the trust property.

On a date which appeared to have been the 1st of May, 1900, X. had an interview with Mr. Platt, a clerk to Messrs. Parker & Ayre, and asked to be furnished with a memorandum from the trustees stating that they had received no notice of any prior charge on Edward Cordingly's interest. According to Platt's evidence he replied that the firm was not accustomed to advise trustees to sign such statements, but that if X. would state his wishes in writing they should be laid before Mr. Parker, who was away that day.

X.'s account, however, was that he told Platt he should not go on unless he got the memorandum, as he was not inclined to run any risk, and that Platt then made some observations which he took to mean that as this matter had been so long in the office it would be all right in this instance for the trustees to sign.

On the 4th of May, X. wrote a letter to Parker & Ayre enclosing two copies of a memorandum such as he desired to have, and also asking if there would be any objection to his calling on Dr. Moore, one of the trustees, for the purpose of obtaining a statutory declaration from him of Cordingly's identity—the latter stating that the doctor had known him from childhood, and had attended Mrs. Cordingly at his birth.

X. alleged that on the following day, which was

(a.) Reported by R. HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, he, having received no answer, called at Messrs. Parker & Ayre's office, found Mr. Parker and Mr. Platt both absent, and saw a clerk (who was not identified) from whom he obtained some informal authority to call on Dr. Moore on the following Monday. X.'s story was that he explained to the clerk that his object was to obtain a declaration of Cordingly's identity and also a memorandum from the doctor stating he had received no notice of a prior charge. On the Monday he sent Cordingly to the office asking for a reply to the letter of the 4th of May. Cordingly saw Mr. Parker, who gave evidence that, having then for the first time read the letter, he sent back a message that he would have nothing to do with advising the trustees to sign the memorandum. Cordingly called a second time with a message that X. would be glad of a reply in writing, without which he feared the doctor might decline to see him. Mr. Parker then sent round a letter stating there was no objection "to your attending on Dr. Moore to obtain from him the declaration of identity which you require."

X. then sent his managing clerk, accompanied by Cordingly and Mr. Macfie, a commissioner for oaths, to the house of Dr. Moore, who resided a few miles from Manchester, and from whom the clerk obtained not only the declaration of identity, but also, under circumstances which will be found stated in the judgment, his signature to the following document:

"We have not received notice, nor are we aware, that Edward Cordingly, a son of Mary Cordingly, has assigned, settled, charged, or otherwise incumbered the share and interest appointed to him of and in the sum of £6,000 to which the children of the said Mary Cordingly are entitled under the will of Thomas Nield, of &c., dated the 28th of August, 1861, of which will we are the present trustees."

This document, which was dated the 7th of May, was signed by Mr. Howe, the other trustee, on the 8th, on which date X. afterwards wrote to Parker & Ayre asking for a note of their charges, and adding, "Please also write me that you have not received notice of Edward Cordingly having assigned or dealt with his interest under this will." They replied on the same day, "We never give any such assurance as that asked from us by your letter just to hand, nor do we advise trustees to do so. This trust has existed for about forty years and in our hands for more than twenty, and it would involve a long search and perusal of correspondence before we could feel any confidence in making any such statement, but we have no hesitation in saying that we have no recollection of having received any notice of charge effected by Mr. Edward Cordingly."

Neither before nor after the receipt of this letter did X. inform the writers that he had obtained the memorandum from the trustees. The mortgage was completed on the same day.

Early in the year 1901, the trustees, in looking through the trust papers, found evidence that formal notice of the appointment of £1,400 to Edward Cordingly, and of the mortgage by him on the 23rd of August, 1890, had in fact been served on them some years before, though they had completely forgotten the circumstance. X. was communicated with and replied that he should hold the trustees responsible for any loss.

The trustees then presented a petition to the Palatine Court asking what was the true construction of Mary Cordingly's will, having regard to the two appointments to Edward Cordingly; and by an order of the 6th of August, 1901, it was declared that the appointment of £2,000 ought to be deemed as to £1,400, part thereof, to be in confirmation of and not in addition to the appointment of £1,400. The result was that of Edward Cordingly's share (certified by the registrar to be £2,091 3s. 5d.) there remained, after paying Whitla's mortgage with interest and costs, and the costs of the petition and of a further petition presented by the plaintiffs, only £636 10s. 3d. to meet the plaintiffs' charge, and this sum was ordered to be paid out to them. Cordingly was out of the jurisdiction, and was understood to be a person of no means.

The plaintiffs commenced this action on the 25th of June, 1903, and, Mr. Howe dying soon after, an order to carry on proceedings against his executors was obtained. The statement of claim asked (inter alia) for a declaration "that George Howe and the defendant Thomas Moore were trustees for the plaintiffs of the share of Edward Cordingly in the said sum of £6,000 free from incumbrances prior in date to the incumbrance of the plaintiffs; and that the said Howe and the defendant Moore were, and the defendants now are estopped as against the plaintiffs from alleging any prior incumbrance or setting up any prior incumbrance in discharge of themselves"; and a declaration "that the defendants are liable to make good to the plaintiffs all the said moneys lost to the plaintiffs by reason of their reliance on the said representations of the said George Howe and the defendant Thomas Moore."

Eve, K.C., and A. Grant, for the plaintiffs, cited Low v. Bouverie, 40 W. R. 50, [1891] 3 Ch. 82; Whitechurch v. Cavanagh, 50 W. R. 218, [1902] A. C. 117.

Macnaghton, K.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for defendant Moore, cited Burkinshaw v. Nicolls, 26 W. R. 819, 3 App. Cas. 1004, 1026 (per Lord Blackburn); Pickard v. Sears, 6 A. & E. 469, 474 (per Lord Denman); Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654, 663 (per Parke, B.); Low v. Bouverie, [1891] 3 Ch. 82, pp. 113, 114 (per Kay, L.J.); Whitechurch v. Cavanagh, [1902] A. C. 117, p. 145 (per Lord Brampton).

T. C. Eastwood and Arnold Herbert, for the executors of Mr. Howe.

Eve, K.C., replied.

SWINFEN EADY, J.—The plaintiffs are assignees by way of mortgage of the share appointed to Edward Cordingly under the will of Thomas Nield, and in form the action is against the surviving trustee and the representatives of the deceased trustee to obtain payment of the unpaid balance of that share. In fact, that balance has been paid away under an order of court to a prior mortgagee, but the plaintiff's case is that the defendants are estopped from setting up that prior charge by reason of a document signed by the trustees on the 7th of May, 1900. Then, if they are right in that, they say the defendants have no other defence, and they ask for judgment. That is the way the action is brought. The defendants deny the estoppel. They say, first, that the document is not sufficiently clear in itself, but apart from that they say that the circumstances under which it was obtained preclude the plaintiffs from using it as an estoppel. [His lordship stated the facts and reviewed the evidence down to the visit to Dr. Moore, and said he had come to the conclusion (1) that the only promise made to X. by Platt at their interview was that he would lay X.'s request before Mr. Parker; and (2) that the authority for the visit to Dr. Moore was obtained, not at X.'s alleged interview with some clerk on the 5th of May, but from Messrs Parker & Ayre's letter of the 7th, which, his lordship was satisfied, had been received before the party set out for the doctor's house. His lordship proceeded: The interview with Dr. Moore is important. Four persons were present, but I have only the evidence of two—the doctor on the one side and the clerk on the other—besides the probabilities; for Cordingly is not available as a witness, and Mr. Macfie attended only as a commissioner and took but little interest in the proceedings. According to the clerk's evidence he took with him the memorandum and the declaration; he told the doctor that the plaintiffs had agreed to lend £1,500, provided the trustees assured them that they were getting a first charge and that no notice of incumbrance had been received; he read over the declaration, to which the doctor objected as going too far, and it was altered to meet his wishes. "I then," he says, "put before him the memorandum, and he read it over, as I thought, carefully. I told him we required the trustees' assurance, because in these matters that was practically the only security that could be given. He said 'It is all right, Edward, you have had no money; it was your brother Charles,' and Cordingly assented. The doctor then put the date in and signed his name. I did not say anything to Dr. Moore to induce the belief that the document had been approved by the solicitors. I did not say anything about having called by arrangement with the solicitors." Then in the course of his evidence he said, "Dr. Moore said nothing whatever. He knew the importance of getting the document signed. I did not explain the difficulties he might get into if he signed the document. He said nothing about consulting his legal adviser. Not one word was said about his legal adviser during the whole interview. I swear it was never mentioned."

Now, it seems to me very singular that, the clerk's principal having been careful not to approach Dr. Moore, even in the matter of the declaration, without the consent of the legal advisers, the clerk should have said nothing about the letter from them giving that consent. It strikes me as so singular why all the trouble to obtain their permission should have been taken if nothing whatever was said about it, especially as Edward Cordingly had expressly said that without the letter the doctor would not see them; yet according to the clerk they went without the letter, and nothing whatever was said, and the solicitor's name was not mentioned from beginning to end.

Dr. Moore gives a different account. I do not think he can remember the order in which the conversation he speaks to took place—that is, the exact position with regard to signing the two documents. He says, after dealing with the declaration: "The clerk then produced another paper, a form, and wanted me to sign that. I looked at it. I could not thoroughly understand it. I said they had come down upon me very suddenly, and I did not care to sign it without first communicating with Parker & Ayre, the solicitors, as I had always been accustomed to do in signing all papers connected with the trust. The clerk then pleaded urgency, and seemed to suggest I was keeping the transaction back by not signing, and Cordingly wanted to get away to Canada, and the paper was of no importance. I was induced to sign by the pressure brought to bear, in which Cordingly joined. One or the other said it was a matter of great importance. They said they had seen Parker, the solicitor, and everything was perfectly right." Then further on he said: "All the business in the trust was done with Mr. Howe by appointment at Mr. Parker's office. When I signed the paper I relied on their statement that Parker said it was all right." Then in cross-examination he varies with regard to the order of the incidents. First he says the question and answer about their having seen Mr. Parker took place before he made the declaration; then he puts it after; and then he says: "I said I should like to see Parker after I signed the declaration and before I signed the memorandum."

I quite understand that at this distance of time Dr. Moore is not able to recollect the order of the conversation, but of one thing he is perfectly satisfied, and that is that he signed the memorandum on the faith of the statement that was made to him by the clerk that he had seen Parker and that everything was perfectly right.

Now the clerk, of course, knew of the application to Parker & Ayre by X. that they might approach Dr. Moore, and possibly, without fully appreciating what he was doing, and knowing that Parker & Ayre had been communicated with, he thought he was justified in saying that everything was all right. But Dr. Moore certainly took, and had ground for taking, what was said as meaning that what he was doing both as regards making the declaration and signing the memorandum was in fact being done with Parker's assent, and that they had first approached Parker and had come on to him with Parker's knowledge for the two purposes which they then were on. No explanation of the document at all was given to Dr. Moore, and in my view he certainly signed it in reliance upon the statement conveyed to him in that way that Parker considered it was all right. Then the party returned, and the memorandum and declaration were brought away.

What happened next was this. On the 8th Mr. Howe, the other trustee, signed. He signed after Dr. Moore and observing that Dr. Moore's signature was already there on the paper. X. said Mr. Howe was in a hurry to get away and he had some difficulty in inducing him to stop for a moment. X. said: "I told him Dr. Moore had already signed a similar memorandum. The difficulty was to explain the matter to Mr. Howe. He kept on saying 'Oh, it is all right.'"

Then on the same day, the 8th, X. sent a further letter to Parker & Ayre. [His lordship read the extract from the letter printed above.] The memorandum had been placed before Mr. Parker on the morning of the 7th. It was determined then and there that it was not to be signed by the trustees, and Mr. Platt thereupon put a note at the foot of each of them—for there were two—"We decline to advise the trustees to sign this." That was only elicited during the trial. It was not communicated to X., but the documents had not been returned.

Now it will be observed that in this letter of the 8th of May X. does not tell Messrs. Parker & Ayre that he had procured a statement signed by both Dr. Moore and Mr. Howe, but he writes again as if that had not been done. That is a singular letter to write. If he was relying on the memorandum signed by the two trustees, why write the question again to the solicitors? The solicitors would only receive notice as agents for the trustees, and if they had received notice the trustees would have received notice.

Then on the same day the answer comes back, and it is agreed that this letter was received before the completion of the mortgage. [His lordship read the reply of Messrs. Parker & Ayre.] Now it is extraordinary, in face of this notice by the lawyers that they would not themselves give or advise their clients to give any such memorandum, that X., having obtained the signature of the trustees without the knowledge of the solicitors, paid over the mortgage money and then the transaction was carried out.

It seems that all parties had forgotten the mortgage executed by Edward Cordingly, due and formal notice of which had been personally served on each trustee on the 13th of April, 1894; they had evidently confused him with his brother Charles. It only shows what care and caution are necessary where a trustee is asked to give such an assurance, and how imprudent it is in any case to do so without looking carefully through the various papers of a trust, which here had lasted for nearly forty years, to see whether there is not a notice of some charge or some settlement or some dealing that has passed away altogether from the mind, but yet of which there is a record among the papers.

Under these circumstances it is said both Howe and Moore are personally liable, and that the circumstances are such as to raise an estoppel. The document is clear and unambiguous in its terms, and no doubt was advisedly drawn by a lawyer in that form. [His lordship read the memorandum.] The question is whether the plaintiffs can rely upon it, having regard to the circumstances under which the signatures were obtained.

Now, in the recent case of Whitechurch v. Cavanagh, Lord Brampton, dealing with the question of estoppel, said this: "I would add that in my judgment no representations can be relied on as estoppels if they have been induced by the concealment of any material fact on the part of those who seek to use them as such; and if the person to whom they are made knows something which, if revealed, would have been calculated to influence the other to hesitate or seek for further information before speaking positively, and that something has been withheld, the representation ought not to be treated as an estoppel." And in Low v. Bouverie, Kay, L.J., said: "The essence of the plaintiff's case must be that he was misled by the statement. The court must be satisfied of this. If there was fraud, and the statement was intended to mislead, its ambiguity would not be a defence; but where no fraud is alleged, it is essential to show that the statement was of such a nature that it would have misled any reasonable man, and that the plaintiff was in fact misled by it."

In my opinion here if Dr. Moore had been told by X.'s clerk: "We have sent this form to the solicitors to obtain the signatures. We have seen their managing clerk, Platt" (whom, no doubt, the doctor knew) "and he has said that it is a form they never advise trustees to sign, but that he would put it before his principal," he would never have signed the document. He wanted to consult his solicitors and only signed because he thought he was doing so with their approval, and if he had been told the facts as they were, and as they were known to X. and his clerk, he would not have signed. Then can it be said that under these circumstances X. was justified in acting on such a document so obtained? There are not only the circumstances down to the date when the document was signed—the 7th of May—but the further fact that before it was acted on the letter of the 8th of May had been received from Messrs. Parker & Ayre, so that X. knew, at the time he was completing the mortgage and had before him this letter of Parker & Ayre, that they never gave such an assurance and would never advise their trustees to do it, and this had reference to the very statement to which he had obtained the signatures without their knowledge and behind their backs. The only request to Parker & Ayre was in connection with the declaration of identity, and no intimation of any sort or kind was given to them that he was about to obtain or had obtained their clients' signatures without their knowledge.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that a document so obtained cannot be set up as estoppel, that no reasonable person could have acted upon it knowing the circumstances as X. knew them, and that the circumstances attending the obtaining the document and down to the date when it was acted upon are such as to estop the plaintiffs from praying in aid any estoppel. The result is the action fails and will be dismissed with costs.

Perhaps I ought to say a word as regards Mr. Howe. He is not in the same position as Dr. Moore, because we have not his evidence; he has passed away. But having regard to the ordinary way in which the documents of the trust were signed and that they were signed at Parker & Ayre's office—the fact that Howe's signature was the second signature obtained, after Dr. Moore had already signed—the circumstances under which it was obtained, Mr. Howe being in a hurry—and to the complete absence of any statement to him with regard to the communications between X. and Messrs. Parker & Ayre, I am of opinion that the same result must follow in Mr. Howe's case as I have already said must follow in Dr. Moore's case.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors, Robert Scholes, Manchester; Grant, Bulcraig, & Co., for Parker & Ayre, Manchester; Rylance & Sons, Manchester.

K. B. Div. (Channell, J.) April 19.

THOMAS FIRTH & SONS (LIMITED) v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS. (a.)

*Inland Revenue—Stamp—*Ad valorem duty—Acknowledgment indorsed on instrument that all the debenture stock secured thereby had been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied—Whether such receipt was stampable as a discharge—Things which in themselves operate to end security—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 12, Schedule I., voce Mortgage, sub-head 5.

The following acknowledgment was indorsed on an instrument presented to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue on behalf of the appellants for their opinion as to the stamp duty (if any) with which the instrument was chargeable: "We, the within-named Edward Firth, John Bradley Firth, and Samuel Roberts do hereby acknowledge that all the debenture stock secured by the within-written indenture and all interest thereon has been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied." By Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, voce "Mortgage," sub-head 5, a reconveyance, release, discharge, or renunciation of any such security as aforesaid, or of the benefit thereof, or of the money thereby secured, is liable to ad valorem stamp duty. The commissioners held that the instrument was chargeable under the above schedule.

Held, allowing the appeal, that the word "discharge," as well as the other words, pointed to an instrument that put an end to a security, and did not include a receipt indorsed on a deed acknowledging that the capital sum and interest secured by the deed had been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied.

Case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue pursuant to section 13 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

On the 31st of July, 1903, an instrument was presented on behalf of Thomas Firth & Sons (Limited), a company registered under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880, to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under section 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891, for the opinion of the commissioners as to the stamp duty with which the instrument was chargeable.

The instrument was as follows: "Whereas the within-named Charles Firth died on the 1st of December, 1892, and the within-named Barnard

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Broomhead died on the 15th of December, 1893, and the within-named James Barber died on the 25th of December, 1902, we, the within-named Edward Firth, John Bradley Firth, and Samuel Roberts, do hereby acknowledge that all debenture stock secured by the within-written indenture, and all interest thereon, has been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied. As witness our hands this 30th day of June, 1903. (Signed) EDWARD FIRTH, JOHN BRADLEY FIRTH, and SAMUEL ROBERTS."

The instrument was indorsed on the indenture bearing date the 23rd of December, 1881, which in effect secured redeemable debenture stock amounting to £100,000. This debenture stock was redeemed and paid off in accordance with provisions in the deed and upon payment off the instrument referred to above was indorsed on it. The only then remaining trustees for the debenture stock holders were the three who signed the instrument.

The commissioners, being of opinion that the instrument was chargeable by reference to the head "Mortgage," sub-head 5, in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, as a discharge of a security by way of mortgage or of the benefit thereof or of the money thereby secured, assessed it as liable to the duty of £25—namely, 6d. per cent on £100,000, that being the total amount of the money at any time secured by the indenture, and the duty so assessed was duly paid. The appellants being dissatisfied, the commissioners stated this case, and the questions for the opinion of the court were (1) whether the instrument was liable to the duty of £25; (2) if not, to what duty (if any) it was liable.

Danckwerts, K.C., and John Dixon, for the appellants.—The instrument was a mere acknowledgment by the trustees that all the debenture stock secured by the deed of the 23rd of December, 1881, and all interest thereon had been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied. Such an acknowledgment was not a discharge within the meaning of that word in sub-head 5, Reconveyance, release, discharge, &c., under the head "Mortgage" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, therefore the instrument was not liable to any duty. An ad valorem duty of 6d. on every £100 of the total amount of the money at any time secured was chargeable "on any re-conveyance, release, discharge, surrender, re-surrender, warrant to vacate, or renunciation of any such security as aforesaid or of the benefit thereof or of the money thereby secured," but as there was no conveyance in the receipt under discussion, it was clear that the document was not a reconveyance, and it was equally clear that the document was not a "surrender, re-surrender, warrant to vacate, or renunciation," and therefore, if liable to duty at all, was liable as a "release" or "discharge." But the operative words in the acknowledgment were "redeemed, paid off, and satisfied." The commissioners held that the receipt was chargeable as a "discharge." There was no authority to support that view: see Munro v. Inland Revenue, W. N. 1896, p. 149; Davidson's Conveyancing (4th ed.), vol. 2, p. 277, and (9th ed.), p. 72; 47 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 445, 450. These passages point to the fact that it had become a common practice to evidence the discharge of formal mortgages of equity of redemption and equitable mortgages solely by endorsing attested receipts, assuming, as would seem to be the case, that such a receipt was not a "release" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1870. Mr. Davidson says, at p. 303, And it would seem to be clear that a simple receipt even on the discharge of an equitable mortgage was not liable to an ad valorem duty as a release of the mortgage, the money being merely expressed to be received in discharge of all principal moneys, interest, and costs remaining due on the security": see also Key & Elph. (7th ed.), p. 252. The Stamp Act being positivi juris, importing nothing of principle or reason, must be construed strictly (Morley v. Hall, 2 Dowl. 494; and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. G. Angus & Co., 37 W. R. 509, 23 Q. B. D. 579), which latter case decided that where the language left the question in doubt the subject was to be entitled to the benefit of the doubt. Pollock, C.B., in Gurr v. Scudds, 3 W. R. 457, 11 Ex, 190, expressed the view that such statutes should be construed in favour of the subject, "because a tax cannot be imposed without clear and express words for that purpose."

Bowes v. Foster, 6 W. R. 257, 2 H. & N. 779, at p. 788, and Attorney-General v. Carlton Bank, 47 W. R. 650, [1899] 2 Q. B. 158, were also referred to.

S. A. T. Rowlatt (Sir Edward Carson, S.G., with him), for the Crown.—The instrument here was a release and discharge of the security and the money thereby secured. The words "release" and "discharge" in the schedule were not technical terms, but included every document the tenor of which puts an end to the security or the right to receive the money secured thereby. The decision of the commissioners was therefore right and should be affirmed, as it came within the word "discharge" under "Mortgage," sub-head 5.

CHANNELL, J.—I think when this matter comes to be understood it is really very clear. These things which come under the various sub-sections beginning under "Mortgages" are all cases of operative instruments. You begin with mortgages, and these things which create either the security or the obligation, or whatever it is, are instruments creating it. Then you get to "Transfers" and things of that sort, all of which are operative instruments. Then comes sub-section 5, dealing with Reconveyance, release, discharge, surrender, re-surrender, warrant to vacate, or renunciation." We are saved discussing the last two, because we were told, and I have no doubt rightly, that they are Scotch terms. The other ones seem to me to be all—the only doubtful one is Discharge—really intended to describe instruments which have an operation as instruments in putting an end to something which is existing down to that time, created by the things which went before "of any such security as aforesaid, or of the benefit thereof or of the money thereby secured." They are things that put an end to the obligation created by the thing described under number 1.

This document is quite clearly, I think, not a document which has any force as an instrument putting an end either to any obligation or to any security or to anything else. It is evidence that the thing had gone, and the evidence that the thing had gone comes quite clearly under the heading "Receipt." I do not think that it follows that a thing might not be both a "receipt" and a "discharge," but what I do think is that these headings, sub-section 5 of the heading of "Mortgages, reconveyance, release, discharge, surrender, and re-surrender," all mean instruments which have some operation in putting an end to the obligation. The only possible doubtful one is "Discharge," and in reference to that I construe it in reference to the other documents with which it is found, and that means, not a document which is evidence of a previous discharge, but a document which does discharge the obligation. That being so, I think this does not come within it, and is only stampable as a receipt. In this case it does not want to be stamped as a receipt because it is endorsed on the document. The appeal will therefore be allowed with costs, and the money paid as duty restored.

Solicitors for the appellants, Johnson, Weatherall, & Sturt, for Broomhead, Wightman, & Moore, Sheffield.

Solicitor for the commissioners, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) March 1.

ALTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (Appellants) v. SPICER (Respondent). (a.)

Local Government—Rating—General district rate—Proportion of assessment—Rating Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54), ss. 3, 6—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211.

Where a right of sporting over land which is used as "arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands," is let apart from the land, the lessee of that right is not the "occupier" of such land within the meaning of section 211, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health Act, 1875, so as to entitle him to be assessed in respect of the same to the general district rate in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net annual value thereof; he is the occupier of a special hereditament—namely, the sporting right, and is liable, under section 6 of the Rating Act, 1874, to be assessed in respect thereof on the full rateable value of that hereditament.

Case stated by the justices for the petty sessional division of Alton, in the county of Southampton.

The appellants preferred a complaint against the respondent before the justices in respect of his non-payment of a general district rate made by them.

At the hearing of the complaint the following facts were proved or admitted:

The respondent had for some years rented the shooting over certain lands, being arable, meadow, or pasture ground and woodlands, within the parish of Alton.

On the 26th of March, 1903, the appellants made a general district rate, which was good on the face of it, at 1s. 11d. in the pound, and the respondent was assessed to the rate in respect of his sporting rights at £5 7s. 4d., being 1s. 11d. in the pound on a rateable value of £56.

On the rate being duly demanded the respondent refused to pay the sum of £5 7s. 4d., but made a legal tender of £1 6s. 10d., which was refused by the appellants' collector in accordance with instructions received by him.

The justices were of opinion that the respondent was only assessable in the proportion of one-fourth of the net annual value of the sporting rights, and as he had made a legal tender of such one-fourth, they refused to make any order on the complaint which had been taken out by the appellants to recover the full amount of the rate.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the justices had come to a right decision, and, if not, what should be done in the premises.

The Rating Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54), s. 6, provides:

"2. Where any right of sporting, when severed from the occupation of the land, is let, either the owner or the lessee thereof, according as the persons making the rate determine, may be rated as the occupier thereof.

"3. Subject to the foregoing provisions of this section the owner of any right of sporting, when severed from the occupation of the land, may be rated as the occupier thereof.

"4. For the purposes of this section, the person who, if the right of sporting . . . is let, is entitled to receive rent for the same, shall be deemed to be the owner of the right."

The Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211, provides as follows:

"With respect to the assessment and levying of general district rates under this Act the following provisions shall have effect:

"1. General district rates shall be made and levied on the occupier of all kinds of property for the time being by law assessable to any rate for the relief of the poor, and shall be assessed on the full net annual value of such property, ascertained by the valuation list for the time being in force . . . subject to the following exceptions, regulations, and conditions, namely:

"(b) . . . The occupier of any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands . . . shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof."

Foote, K.C. (S. H. Emanuel with him), for the appellants.—The justices came to a wrong decision. The tenant of a right of shooting severed from the occupation of the land is not "the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands," within the meaning of section 211, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health Act, 1875. Section 6 of the Rating Act, 1874, provides that, for rating purposes, the lessee of a sporting right, when severed from the occupation of the land, may be rated as the occupier thereof. He is rateable at the full net annual value of the land of which he is lessee, and does not come within the exception contained in section 211, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health Act, 1875.

He cited Eyton v. Overseers of Mold, 29 W. R. 122, 6 Q. B. D. 13.

M. M. Macnaghten, for the respondent.—The justices came to a right conclusion. The Legislature can never have intended that while the owner or tenant of land used as arable or pasture ground or as woodlands shall be assessed in respect of such land in the proportion of one-fourth only of the net annual value, the person who is the lessee of the shooting over such land shall be assessed in respect of the full value. The lessee of the shooting cannot, of course, exercise his shooting right without going on to the land, but that does not make him more than the occupier of land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands.

He referred to Holywell Union v. Halkyn Drainage Co., [1895] A. C. 117, 43 W. R. Dig. 131.

Foote, K.C., was not called upon to reply.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—Prior to the Rating Act, 1874, sporting rights were not rateable as separate hereditaments, but where they existed they were allowed to be taken into consideration as showing that the land over which they were exercised had an enhanced rateable value. Then by section 3 of that Act it was provided that the Poor Rate Acts should extend, inter alia, "to rights of fowling, of shooting, of taking or killing game or rabbits, and of fishing, when severed from the occupation of the land." There was thereby created a new rateable hereditament which, on the face of it, was independent of the ordinary occupation of the land. Then section 6 provides for two cases in which the right of sporting is severed from the occupation of the land. Firstly, sub-section 1 provides that where any right of sporting "is severed from the occupation of the land, and is not let, and the owner of such right receives rent for the land, the said right shall not be separately valued or rated, but the gross and rateable value of the land shall be estimated as if the said right were not severed; and in such case if the rateable value is increased by reason of its being so estimated, but not otherwise, the occupier of the land may (unless he has specifically contracted to pay such rate in the event of an increase) deduct from his rent such portion of any poor or other local rate as is paid by him in respect of such increase." Then, secondly, sub-section 2 provides that "where any right of sporting, when severed from the occupation of the land is let, either the owner or the lessee thereof, according as the persons making the rate determine, may be rated as the occupier thereof. Sub-section 3 then provides that "the owner of any right of sporting when severed from the occupation of the land, may be rated as the occupier thereof." It is therefore clear that a sporting right can be rated up to the full net annual value. But then we come to the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 211, sub-section 1 (b), of which provides that the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands, shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value. Now, counsel for the respondent could not contend that the owner of the sporting rights was not liable to be rated, but he did contend that the respondent was the occupier of land used as "arable, meadow, or pasture ground," because he had to go on to such land when exercising his sporting rights, and that he was therefore entitled to be rated in respect of his sporting right at only one-fourth of the net annual value. The answer to that contention is that the respondent is not the occupier of "arable, meadow, or pasture ground" within the meaning of the Act of 1875; he is the occupier of a special hereditament which has been made rateable by the Act of 1874—namely, the sporting right. I am, therefore, of opinion that the justices came to a wrong determination, and that the respondent is liable for the full amount of the rate.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This appeal must therefore be allowed.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. Where the sporting rights are severed from the occupation of the land, the lessee of the sporting rights is not the "occupier" of the land.

KENNEDY, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed and judgment for the appellants.

Solicitors for appellants, Church, Adams, & Prior, for C. & W. Trimmer, Alton.

Solicitors for respondent, Cunliffes & Davenport, for Bailey & White, Winchester.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). } May 2.

In re CATERHAM URBAN COUNCIL AND GODSTONE RURAL COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Severance of part of rural district into urban district—Adjustment of property and liabilities—Highway expenses—Loss of income—Local Government Acts, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 57, 62; and 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 54.

By an order of a county council, made under section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1888, part of a rural district was converted into an urban district, which was no longer liable for the maintenance of the highways in the rural district, but took over its own liabilities and property in its own separate area. The rural district council claimed an adjustment of the income, liabilities, and expenses, under section 62 of the Act, in respect of the maintenance of the highways, as the contributions formerly received from the urban district area exceeded the rates derived therefrom.

Held, that the loss of profit from the contributions formerly received by the rural district council from the area comprised in the new urban district was not a matter for adjustment, for the section does not give compensation for such loss, and loss of income under this section referred to present income and not to that to be derived from rates which may hereafter be imposed.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 353, [1903] 1 K. B. 554) reversed.

In re Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union, 47 W. R. 322, [1899] 1 Q. B. 540, and In re Buckinghamshire County Council and Hertfordshire County Council, [1899] 1 Q. B. 515, 47 W. R. Dig. 114, overruled.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Mathew, L.JJ.), affirming an order of Wright, J., upon an award of an arbitrator stated in the form of a special case, which is set out at length in the report of the case in the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 353).

By an order made under section 57 of the Local Government Acts, 1888 and 1894, it was ordered that the parish of Caterham should cease to form part of the rural district of Godstone, and should be converted into an urban district, and the property and liabilities of the rural district council, so far as regarded the area of the new urban district, became vested in the urban district council, including the liability to maintain the highways. The respondents made a claim upon the appellants alleging that their income, liabilities, and expenses in respect of the maintenance and repair of highways were affected by the order, and that they were entitled to have the claim adjusted by arbitration under the provisions of section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888.

The matter was referred to arbitration, and the respondents put forward a claim for the payment to them by the appellants of a sum of £36,000 or thereabouts, being the capitalized value at thirty years' purchase of an amount of £1,200 which was alleged to be the average yearly excess of contribution over expenditure which had been received by the respondents from the separated area before the separation.

Wright, J., held that the respondents were entitled to have their claim adjusted by arbitration under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888, upon the ground that he was bound by the decisions of In re Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union and In re

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Buckinghamshire County Council and Hertfordshire County Council.

Bray, K.C., and Montague Shearman, K.C., for the appellants.—Section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888, does not give compensation. Adjustment is not the same as compensation for a loss of ratepaying area against a newly-created Local Government area. The courts below followed the decisions in In re Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union, and in In re Buckinghamshire County Council and Hertfordshire County Council, which were wrongly decided.

C. A. Russell, K.C., and George Humphreys, for the respondents.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I am of opinion in this case that the judgment of the Court of Appeal and of Wright, J., should be reversed; but in truth, though the question arises in this case and the consequence must follow, it is really the decision in the case of In re Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union which is here under appeal. There seems to have been some misapprehension about that decision. Lord Russell of Killowen commences his judgment by saying that he agrees with the judgment of Channell, J., "substantially," and entirely in the principle involved in it, but upon the point now in debate the judgment of Channell, J., and Ridley, J., who entirely agreed with him, was the other way. The language of the section now under construction does not seem to me to be appropriate to the compensation of one district for being placed in a less advantageous financial position than before the alteration in its boundaries. This is language which the Legislature has used elsewhere when what is now contended for was contemplated by the Legislature, but I do not think that section 62 ever contemplated "adjustment" as being applicable to such a state of things as has been brought about by a diminution of rateable area. Where two areas are being divided, and each becomes responsible for its own administration, and where previously they possessed property, it is obvious enough that they must have some mode of adjusting the division of the property which each possessed prior to such separation—the buildings, for example, the workhouses for the administration of the poor law—and, to quote the language of the section, "property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses."

The only word within which the present claim can be embraced is the word "income." Now, it may be conceded that in a loose mode of speech the capacity for being rated for future liabilities might be so described, but it would not be accurate. And it is not with the word itself alone that one has to deal, but with the word associated, as it is here, with the words "property, debts, liabilities, and expenses." I cannot think that the Legislature intended so grave a departure from the general and very obvious meaning of the words that it has actually used. Where it did intend to allow compensation to be given—compensation, be it observed, not adjustment—it has shown that it can use appropriate and express words for the purpose, and the words "property and income from property" can well be satisfied by a division of property and income resulting from property, without importing the element of compensation for loss of income. Even if the word "income" itself were appropriately used, I think the word "adjustment," as distinguished from "compensation," means a division of existing assets, while "compensation" would quite rightly be interpreted to mean the loss of some right to obtain income by rating, or of some area which would furnish the right to get income. But it seems to me quite contrary to principle in the case of an alteration of boundaries applicable to a municipal body, which is to be for the future self-sufficing, to make the adjustment of its "property and income, debts and liabilities," a subject of compensating arrangements. Of course, if the Legislature has done it, it must be acquiesced in, but I entirely dissent from the idea of presuming that this has been done without express words. For these reasons it appears to me that the judgment appealed from ought to be reversed, and I so move your lordships.

Lord DAVEY.—The question to be determined in this appeal was thus stated by Vaughan Williams, L.J.: "It is said," he observes, "that by reason of the separation of the parish of Caterham from the Godstone Rural District, the council of that district will lose the profit which they formerly derived from the contributions of the parish of Caterham"; and the question, he added, was whether that apprehended loss was matter for adjustment pursuant to the provisions of section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888. Counsel for the respondents disclaimed stating the question in that way. But I think that the Lord Justice accurately described the claim which is put forward by the respondents. What they are seeking is not an adjustment in the ordinary sense of that word of common property or liabilities, or of any reciprocal liabilities of Caterham and Godstone towards each other, but compensation for a loss which they apprehend they will suffer by the severance of Caterham from the Godstone Rural District. I do not assume that the arbitrator, if he should be required to proceed with the matter, would award to the respondents the full amount of the extravagant claim put forward by them (the respondents), and I refer to that claim only as showing the true nature of their demand.

The first observation that occurs to me is that section 62 says nothing about compensation for apprehended loss of profit or injury. Your lordships are familiar with Acts of Parliament which give a right to such compensation, and one would have expected that, if that was the meaning of the Act, it would have been expressed in plain terms. Local authorities are by the section in question authorized to make agreements for the purpose of adjusting "any property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses." The primâ facie meaning of these words is to give powers or facilities for adjusting any matters which, by reason of the Act, or a scheme made under it, require adjustment. In the following words the expression is altered. The section goes on to say (reading it short) that any agreement authorized by the Act to be made "for the purpose of the adjustment of any property, debts, liabilities, or financial relations, may provide for the transfer or retention of any property, debts, or liabilities, or for the joint use of any property and for the transfer of any duties, and for payment by either party to the agreement in respect of property, debts, duties, and liabilities so transferred or retained, or of such joint user, or in respect of the salary, remuneration, or compensation payable to any officer or person."

I have troubled your lordships by reading the section at length, because the latter words in my opinion confirm the primâ facie meaning which I have attached to the earlier words. It must be admitted, I think, that the property, debts, or liabilities to be retained or transferred must mean existing property or debts, or a liability actually incurred, and the expression "financial relations" I think also refers to any reciprocal financial obligations which the undivided district and the severed portion may have already incurred towards each other. I construe the words "income" and "expenses" in the same manner. I think that "income" means income presently enjoyed, or to which there is a present title, and does not include income which may hereafter be derived from the making of rates. There may be income derived from property which is held on trust for the district, or some income—such, for example, as a rent-charge or other annual payment applicable under some financial detriment arising from Acts directed or authorized by the Legislature, and, in my opinion, there is nothing in the Act which creates such a right. I am therefore of opinion that the appeal should be allowed. It follows from what I have said that I think the cases of In re Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union, and In re Buckinghamshire County Council and Hertfordshire County Council were wrongly decided and should be overruled.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—In this case I agree with the opinions already expressed that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed; for I concur in the view that the loss of a portion of a ratepaying area does not support a claim for an adjustment of "property, income, debts, liabilities, or expenses" within the meaning of section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888. It seems to me that the separation of a portion of an area within which a rate has been levied cannot occasion a loss of "income" within the meaning of the section to the remaining portion of the area; nor can such change in the existence of the rateable area occasion any claim for adjustment under the word "liabilities."

Both of these words, "income" and "liabilities," must be read as referring to ascertained and existing income and liabilities, and cannot be held to include the mere liability to be rated if the order of division had not been made. It may be that the application of this view may in some cases confer on one portion of a divided area substantial advantage at the expense of another portion. But if such gain or loss would amount to injustice, it may be that the remedy is to be found by objecting to the order being made by the county council under section 57 of the Act, or to its confirmation by the Local Government Board.

Lord ROBERTSON.—I am very clearly of the same opinion. I do not think that the claim of the respondents comes within section 62; and when I say so I mean not merely that the word "adjust" and the other phrases used are not appropriate to cover it, but that the claim is in its nature and substance altogether heterogeneous to the things contemplated, and is outside the scheme of setting up new authorities as stated in the Act.

It must be remembered that when, under section 62, Caterham and Godstone proceed to "adjust" (whatever that means), they meet as separate and self-contained rating authorities, Caterham having been, by deliberate statutory proceedings, vested with the full and exclusive power of rating, for its own use, within the boundaries assigned to it, and Godstone, while retaining its old name, having a different and smaller jurisdiction compared to that which formerly existed. The direct and necessary result of setting up Caterham as an urban district is to establish not merely one but two new rating units—namely, Caterham and the lesser Godstone. The rating in each is necessarily on the new basis of the new area; and it would be merely an accident if the rates in the two areas were the same after as before the separation.

Now, the assumption, and what I must venture to call the fallacy, of the judgments under review is that the Legislature intended that the two new bodies should set about what Bruce, J., called "restoring the true balance"—that is to say, the former balance of rates. I see no warrant for any such assumption. On the contrary, I should suppose that in some cases at least one of the reasons why a new urban district is set up is because the rating is unfair, and would be made more equitable by dividing the rating area into two. The inhabitants of some proposed new district (I am not for the moment speaking of Caterham) may very well say that they, having grown into a self-contained community, are made to pay for things in which they have no interest, and because of their large valuation are paying more than the people who are interested in them. All these considerations and the like, pro and con, are for the county council and the Local Government Board.

But the Rochdale case and the Bucks case depend upon the view that in the matter of rates the status quo ante the order is to be treated as the standard of right after the order, and that any detriment on the one side and advantage on the other, caused by the independence of the new district, are to be redressed by adjustment. I see no trace of an intention thus to stereotype by compensation the results of a system of rating which, ex hypothesi, has ceased. Of course it is quite conceivable that the Legislature might have made it a condition of the setting up of a new rating body that it should purchase its independence, and might have taken the financial position in the year of independence as fixing the price. But this is an idea unexpressed in the statute, and remote from the simple one expressed in section 62, which primarily at least deals with extant things and extant liabilities, which, belonging to the undivided community, must perforce be divided now that the community is broken up and the partners are taking with them what belongs to them. And the difficulty of applying the words of section 62 to a claim of compensation becomes, as I think, an impossibility when the nature of the claim is clearly realized.

I have read with care all the judgments in the previous cases. In the Rochdale case and in the Bucks case the principle laid down is that which I have already referred to, that the "true balance," meaning thereby the existing balance of the date of separation, must be "restored." This is most clearly shown in Bruce, J.'s, judgment in the Bucks case, and in that of Smith, L.J., in the Rochdale case. It is significant that all subsequent judicial opinions have been based on the authority of these cases, and that in none has this principle been independently reasserted.

Order of Court of Appeal and order of Wright, J., reversed, with costs here and below.

Solicitors, F. B. Winter; Cooper, Turner, & Evans, for Evelyn A. Head, East Grinstead.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) — May 13.

YEOMAN (Suppliant) v. THE KING. (a.)

Ship—Charter-party—Demurrage—Cargo to be discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day—Fraction of a day.

Under a charter-party the cargo of 2,367 tons on board a ship was to be discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day, weather permitting; the time to commence in accordance with the custom of the port; Sundays and all holidays and time lost by any cause whatever beyond the control of the consignee of the cargo not to count as discharging time. It was also provided that demurrage was "to be paid at the rate of 4d. per net registered ton per day and pro rata employed beyond the time allowed for discharging." The time the cargo would take to discharge would be 11¼ days. The discharge took 12¾ days, and the charterers contended that as they had rightfully broken into the twelfth day they were entitled to treat the whole of that day as a lay day, and paid demurrage calculated on that basis.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that fractions of a day must be taken into account, and that the shipowners were entitled to be paid demurrage after 11¼ days.

Appeal by the Crown from a decision of Bigham, J., given in the Commercial Court on the hearing of a petition of right.

The suppliant was a shipowner of West Hartlepool, and he claimed demurrage in respect of the detention of a vessel, the steamship Haslingden, at Bermuda, to which port the ship had carried a cargo of 2,367 tons of patent fuel from Cardiff for the Admiralty. The question turned upon the construction of a code charter-party in general use in the service which so far as material provided by:

Clause 6.—That "the cargo shall be discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day, weather permitting; the time to commence in accordance with the custom of the port; Sundays and all holidays, and time lost through strikes or locks-out of workmen, accident, frosts, floods, rains, winds, rollers, or any cause whatsoever beyond the control of the consignees of the cargo not to count as discharging time."

Clause 7.—"Demurrage to be paid at the rate of 4d. per net registered ton per day and pro rata employed beyond the time allowed for discharging."

It was admitted that the customary working hours at the port of Bermuda were from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m., and that the cargo should have been discharged in 11¼ working days. The time having been exceeded, the question arose as to what time did demurrage begin to run. The suppliant contended it began immediately on the expiration of the 11¼ working days after the unloading began, which was at 6 a.m. on Monday, the 15th of July, 1901, and was not completed until 3 p.m. on Monday, the 29th of July. On the other hand, the Admiralty said that as they were entitled to part of the working day of Saturday (the 27th of July) in discharging, they were entitled to treat the whole of that day as a lay day, and that demurrage did not begin to run until the morning of the next following working day. They accordingly paid the shipowner demurrage calculated on that basis. The suppliant claimed a further sum for the demurrage from 9 a.m. on Saturday (the 27th of July), the hour at which it was admitted, for the purposes of the present case, that the 11¼ days expired, until 6 p.m. on that day.

Bigham, J., found in favour of the suppliant on the authority of an unreported decision of a Divisional Court in an unreported case of Hacquoil & Co. v. Tapson & Co.

The Crown appealed.

R. B. D. Acland, K.C. (Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., with him), relied on Commercial Steamship Co. v. Boulton, 23 W. R. 854, 10 L. R. Q. B. 346, where it was held that in the case of demurrage a fraction of a day counted as a day. In that case the delay arose in loading the vessels and the decision was against the charterers. But as no words appeared in the charter-party showing a contrary intention, on the reasoning of that case the charterers here were entitled to the whole of the day because they were admitted entitled to a part of it. That was also to be gathered from the expression "the cargo shall be discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day," which meant one day with another, and did not mean that during the different hours of any particular day it should be discharged at that average.

Scrutton, K.C., and Adair Roche, for the suppliant, were not heard.

COLLINS, M.R.—It seems to me clear that our decision in this case should be against the appellant. By the charter-party the cargo was to be discharged at the average rate specified per working day, weather permitting; the time to commence in accordance with the custom of the port; Sundays and holidays and time lost from any cause beyond the control of the consignee of the cargo not to count as discharging time. Here it is admitted that the lay days began at 6 a.m. on Monday, the 15th of July. That being the starting point, it is easy to calculate how many days were allowed for discharging the cargo, which at 210 tons per working day would work out at 11¼ days. In my opinion the charterers are entitled to such time for discharging as, according to the number of tons on board, works out at an average rate of discharge of 210 tons per day—that is, 11¼ days and no more. The charterers contended that because the time allowed for discharge broke into part of the Saturday they were entitled to the whole of that day. I see no reason, either in common sense or business, or on the construction of the charter-party, for allowing the charterers more time than that which, worked out is the way I have mentioned, ended at 9 a.m. on the Saturday. That is the whole point. The charterers have failed in their contention that, being entitled to take part of a day, the whole of that broken day counted in their favour, and therefore the appeal must be dismissed.

ROMER, and MATHEW, L.JJ., gave judgment to the same effect.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the suppliant, Botterell & Roche.

From K. B. D. (In Bkcy.).
(Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — April 29.

In re ROWE.
Ex parte DERENBURG & CO. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Withdrawal—Substitution of fresh proof—Voluntary payment by third party for loss incurred—Right of proof for the whole debt.

A creditor who has received a voluntary payment from a stranger in consideration of the fact that the creditor has sustained a loss by the acts of the bankrupt, even although such payment only represents a part of the debt due to the creditor, and the creditor gives the stranger credit for it in proving his debt, nevertheless is entitled to enter an amended proof, claiming the whole amount of the debt, as against the trustee in bankruptcy.

Decision of Buckley, J. (ante, p. 336, W. N. 1904, p. 64), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Buckley, J. (reported ante, p. 336, W. N. 1904, p. 64).

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts were shortly as follows: The case came before Buckley, J., on an appeal by creditors from the rejection of their proof by the trustees in bankruptcy.

The creditors, Messrs. Derenburg & Co., were a firm of stockbrokers, who had had large dealings with the bankrupt Rowe, and in January, 1903, a receiving order was made against him. At this date Rowe owed Derenburg & Co. a sum of about £20,368, on the security of certain share certificates, which were subsequently discovered to have been forged by him. Rowe had been a partner in the firm of Bewick & Moreing, and that firm, although in no way liable for his criminal act, sent Derenburg & Co. a cheque for £6,500 on the 3rd day of June, accompanied by a letter in the following terms: "Although you admit we are not liable, we have pleasure in sending you £6,500. This, we understand, will cover all the losses sustained, except those for which you hold an insurance policy." This was quite a voluntary payment on the part of Messrs. Bewick & Moreing, and Derenburg & Co. accepted it on this footing.

On the 3rd day of July Derenburg & Co. sent in a proof for £13,868 against Rowe's estate, giving credit for the £6,500 which they had received from Bewick & Moreing. Some correspondence with the trustee took place with reference to this proof, and it appeared that it was not formally admitted until the 1st of December. In the meantime, Derenburg & Co., having been advised that Bewick & Moreing would find a diffulty in proving for the £6,500, and that they themselves were entitled to prove for the whole amount of their debt, without giving credit for that sum, on the 6th of November sent in a fresh proof for £20,368, and asked that it should be substituted for the earlier proof for £13,868. On the 7th of November the trustee wrote refusing to consider this new proof, and later rejected it. On the 1st of January, 1904, the trustee filed the earlier proof, noting that he had admitted it in full upon the 1st of December, 1903. The later proof was rejected on two grounds—firstly, that the creditors were not entitled to withdraw the first proof, and substitute another without leave of the court, and, secondly, that they were bound to give credit for the £6,500. Derenburg & Co., having appealed, it was held by Buckley, J., that they were entitled to prove for the whole of the debt.

The trustee appealed.

Gore-Browne, K.C., Muir Mackenzie, and Francke, for the appellant trustee.—The second point before Buckley, J., was whether Derenburg & Co. were under an obligation to give credit for the £6,500 paid to them by the firm of which the bankrupt had been a member. Payment by a stranger satisfies the debt [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—You are not basing it on any principle of bankruptcy administration, but on general knowledge?] Yes. Where a creditor has in fact received payment from a stranger, until assented to by the debtor, he can sue debtor.

They cited Belshaw v. Bush, 11 C. B. 191, 17 Jur. 37; Jones v. Broadhurst, 9 C. B. 173; Walter v. James, 19 W. R. 472, L. R. 6 Exch. 124. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Leake on Contracts (4th ed.), and Cook v. Lister, 11 W. R. 369, 13 C. B. N. S. 543.]

H. Reed, K.C., and F. C. Willis, for the respondents.

They referred to Simpson v. Eggington, 10 Exch. Reps. 845, 4 W. R. C. L. Dig. 185. [Gore-Browne, K.C., mentioned Kemp v. Balls, 10 Exch. Reps. 607, 3 W. R. C. L. Dig. 146.]

Gore-Browne, K.C., replied.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In my opinion the judgment of Buckley, J., should be affirmed. He asks what are the facts of the case, and says, I think, quite justly, that if you take the facts of the case as they are presented here, the question before the court in the cases of Cook v. Lister, 11 W. R. 369, 13 C. B. N. S. 543, and Belshaw v. Bush, 11 C. B. 191, does not arise here at all. The learned judge said in the course of his judgment: "As to the second point, I do not think that this was the case of a stranger offering part of a debt; the payment in question was not tendered or accepted as part of the debt; it was made in consideration of the fact that the creditors had sustained loss by the acts of a person for whom Bewick & Moreing considered themselves to some extent morally responsible." I think that that conclusion of fact taken by Buckley, J., was perfectly correct, and therefore I do not think any question of law arises here at all, and as he points out, it was a payment with which the debtor had nothing to do. It was purely a voluntary gift made by Bewick & Moreing to mitigate for a loss for which they were not in any way liable. In my opinion the appeal fails.

STIRLING and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Morley, Shirreff, & Co.; C. E. Dunn.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. — June 21.

In re CLIFTON'S PATENT. (a.)

Patent—Revocation—Petition for revocation—Practice—Court or chambers—Consent.

An order for the revocation of letters patent for an invention cannot be obtained upon summons in chambers, even where the respondent consents to the revocation.

In this case a petition had been presented for the revocation of letters patent for improvements in circular saws, granted to H. C. Clifton, under section 26 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883.

In June, 1904, the petitioner took out a summons before the judge in chambers, asking for an order for revocation of the letters patent, to which the respondent was prepared to consent.

This course was adopted in reliance upon the observations of Joyce, J., in In re Scott's Patent, 20 Rep. Pat. Cas. 604.

His lordship, however, refused to hear the summons, and the petition came on in court.

J. W. Gordon, for both the petitioner and the respondent, asked for an order upon the petition by consent.

BUCKLEY, J.—A summons was issued in this case to obtain judgment for revocation in chambers without bringing the matter into court. That process was adopted in reliance upon something which Joyce, J., was supposed to have decided in In re Scott's Patent. I have taken the opportunity of mentioning the matter to Joyce, J., and he has informed me that he had no intention of deciding in that case that it was proper to obtain an order for revocation in chambers. Under these circumstances I feel myself free to do what in my judgment seems right. A petition presented under the statutory jurisdiction for the revocation of a patent is, I think, a matter which ought to be dealt with in court. I do not forget the fact that in other matters having nothing to do with letters patent orders have to be obtained upon petition and not in chambers where the amount involved exceeds a specified sum. Primâ facie a petition is a matter to be adjudicated upon in court; and where the relief sought is the revocation of a patent, I think it is expedient that relief should be given in open court, and not in chambers. For this reason I refused to make the order for revocation on summons, and this petition is now brought on to be dealt with in court. I now pronounce judgment for revocation by consent.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Baker, Baker, & Co.; Wilson, Bristows, & Carpmael.

Chan. Div.
Warrington, J. } May 4, 5.

BOWDEN'S PATENTS SYNDICATE (LIMITED) v. HERBERT SMITH & CO. (a.)

Patent—Assignment of application for—Assignee's right of action—Practice—Parties—Leave to amend.

The assignee of the application for a patent is only an equitable assignee of the patent. He cannot sue for infringement of the patent unless he joins the legal owner either as plaintiff or defendant.

Leave to amend by adding the legal owner granted.

On the 14th of June, 1897, E. M. Bowden applied for letters patent in respect of a certain invention. By a deed dated the 17th of December, 1897, he assigned to the plaintiffs, E. M. Bowden's Patents Syndicate (Limited), "all that the said invention and also all that and those the said letters patent and other protection" relating thereto, "and the sole and exclusive benefit thereof and of all extensions and improvements thereof, and also all rights, powers, emoluments, and advantages whatsoever under or in respect of the said letters patent."

On the 28th of July, 1898, the patent was issued to E. M. Bowden, and dated the 14th of June, 1897.

On the 2nd of July, 1903, the plaintiffs commenced this action against the defendants for infringement of the patent of which E. M. Bowden alone at that date was the registered owner.

By a deed dated the 13th of October, 1903, E. M. Bowden as beneficial owner thereby assigned absolutely to the plaintiffs all the thereinbefore recited inventions and the letters patent in respect thereof, and the full benefit thereof, and all rights, powers, privileges, and emoluments connected therewith.

Upon the hearing of the action the question arose whether the plaintiffs could maintain the action without joining E. M. Bowden (who had died since the 13th of October, 1903) as plaintiff or defendant.

Moulton, K.C., T. Terrell, K.C., and E. F. Lever, for the plaintiffs.—The deed of the 17th of December, 1897, is an assignment of the application. It passes all the interest of E. M. Bowden at that time and to an assignment of the provisional protection. The assignee got a legal title. He had an assignment of whatever E. M. Bowden had, and afterwards got a grant from the Crown to Bowden and his assignees dated from the date of the application. [WARRINGTON, J., referred to Chollet v. Hoffman, 5 W. R. 573, 26 L. J. Q. B. 249; and Frost's Patent Law (2nd ed.), p. 365.]

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A. J. Walter and F. C. Sinclair, for the defendants.—The deed of the 17th of December, 1897, is not an assignment, but an agreement to assign. An equitable assignee has no right to sue in his own name.

Other cases referred to were Actien Gesellschaft fur Cartonnagen Industrie v. Temler, 16 R. P. C. 447; Renard v. Levinstein, 13 W. R. 229, 382, 2 H. & M. 628; and Heap v. Hartley, 38 W. R. 136, 42 Ch. D. 461.

WARRINGTON, J.—The plaintiffs in their statement of claim allege that they are the registered assignees—I call particular attention to that—of these letters patent. In the first place, were the plaintiffs at the date of the issue of the writ legal assignees of this patent or not? If they were, then the question, which, judging from a passage in Mr. Frost's book, is undecided, would arise—namely, whether they are entitled to sue before registration? If they were not the legal assignees, the question does not arise.

The first question I have to decide, therefore, is, were the plaintiffs at the date of the writ legal assignees of the patent? Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the assignment was an assignment of the rights granted or acquired by the application for the patent; that amongst those rights was a right to have the patent when granted dated back to a date anterior to the assignment, and that, when granted, the patent itself passed by the assignment of the protection. In my opinion that is not the true view of this deed. Although the words of the assignment are "an assignment of the protection," whatever that may mean, the deed is really an assignment of such beneficial rights as the fact of the protection, when perfected by the granting of the letters patent, may confer on the person who has made the application. I thing it was really in law nothing more than a grant of a right to have that patent assigned to the assignee. I cannot satisfy myself that this amounts to an assignment of the patent, and that it would have been competent for the assignee to have it entered on the register as such an assignment. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs at the date of the commencement of the action were the equitable assignees of the patent.

Are they entitled to protection without joining the person who is registered owner of the patent? No authority directly in point has been cited to me on either side. One case has been referred to in which the plaintiffs were equitable assignees—Actien Gesellschaft für Cartonnagen Industrie v. Levenstein. But it was an application for an interlocutory injunction; and I can quite understand that, in such a case, even if it had been necessary ultimately to amend the writ, it may have been that an application for an interlocutory injunction would have been entertained, because it very often happens that it is necessary to make an order at once, possibly without waiting for amendment. But, treating that case cited as an authority, it is enough for me to say that there is no authority at all upon this point, because the point does not seem to have been raised or discussed. The decision was on a different point altogether.

Now, what is the general rule of the court with regard to an action brought by an equitable owner of property? The common case with which we are most familiar is an action relating to some debt in respect of which the provisions of the Judicature Acts, which allow an assignee to bring an action in his own name without joining the assignor, have not been complied with. In that case, the well-accepted practice of this court is that the legal owner of the property in question must be a party to the action, either plaintiff or defendant. He is the proper person to bring the action. If he does not do so, the course which the plaintiff adopts is that of proving that fact and making him a defendant. Applying that to the present case, I come to the conclusion that it is necessary, in order to maintain this action to have the legal owner before the court.

Now E. M. Bowden is dead, and I understand at present his will has not been proved. The present legal owners are the assignees under that deed of October, 1903; but the legal owners at the date of the issue of the writ would be either E. M. Bowden, if he were alive, or his executors. Therefore, it is obvious that the matter must stand over to add the executors as plaintiffs in the action.

I have been asked to allow the amendment, and I propose to do so. I shall allow the plaintiffs to amend their writ and statement of claim by adding the executors as plaintiffs, by making the necessary allegations in the statement of claim on the terms of allowing the defendants to amend their defence. The costs thrown away by reason of the necessity of making the amendment ought to be defendants in any event.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Alfred Withers.

Solicitors for the defendants, Phillips & Boyle.

K. B. Div. (Walton, J.) May 31.

CHESHIRE v. BAILEY. (a.)

Master and servant—Contract to supply carriage and driver to commercial traveller—Goods left in carriage—Obligation to take care of carriage during temporary absence of traveller—Larceny by coachman—Liability of jobmaster for loss.

The plaintiff, a wholesale jeweller, entered into a contract with the defendant, a jobmaster, for the hire of a brougham and driver for the use of the plaintiff's traveller, and the brougham was fitted up for the purpose of such use. The traveller left the brougham in the street for the purpose of getting his lunch, and while he was away the contents of the carriage were stolen, with the connivance of the coachman.

Held, that the defendant was liable, because there was an obligation on him, by virtue of the contract, to provide a careful and trustworthy driver who would safeguard the contents of the brougham during intervals when the traveller would be necessarily absent, and that the defendant was not the less liable because the breach of contract was occasioned by a criminal act on the part of the defendant's servant.

Abrahams v. Bullock, 50 W. R. 626, followed.

Action tried before Walton, J., sitting without a jury.

The plaintiff was a wholesale jeweller and silversmith carrying on business at Birmingham and the defendant was a London jobmaster. The action was brought to recover damages for the loss of goods owing to the negligence of the defendant or his servant. The defendant denied liability.

The plaintiff's case was that in October, 1902, his London traveller, Mr. Gray, hired from the defendant a commercial brougham, horse, and coachman, for use in his business, at the rate of £3 5s. a week of five days, Monday and Friday inclusive. At the interview when this agreement was entered into Mr. Gray in his evidence stated that he had told the defendant the use to which the brougham was to be put, and explained to the defendant the necessity of supplying a trustworthy driver. From October, 1902, until August, 1903, Mr. Gray continued to use the brougham, and during that time several different coachmen were supplied by the defendant. Ultimately, in May, 1903, a coachman named Brown was sent, and on the 23rd of August following he came to take out Mr. Gray. The brougham on that day carried samples to the value of about £1,000. The traveller visited certain customers, and at mid-day went to lunch, leaving the carriage, as usual, in the coachman's care. When he came back from lunch he found both the brougham and the man had disappeared. Eventually Brown confessed to having been a party, with two other men, to stealing the brougham and its contents, and upon his trial he pleaded "Guilty" and was convicted on the 19th of October, 1903. A portion of the goods, amounting in value to about £300, was subsequently recovered, and this action was then brought claiming the balance.

Evidence having been given by Mr. Gray,

Sims Williams (with him C. A. Russell, K.C.), on behalf of the plaintiff, argued that the defendant, knowing the purpose for which the brougham was to be used, was liable, as under the contract there was an implied undertaking on his part to supply a trustworthy driver; and Abrahams v. Bullock, 50 W. R. 626, was relied on.

English Harrison, K.C., and C. Thorn Drury, for the defendant.—The defendant can only be held liable if negligence is proved against his servant in the course of executing those duties which the defendant undertook by supplying a driver should be performed by the man he supplied. The commission of a felony is not an act of negligence, and consequently there was no breach of contract by the defendant. The evidence is to the effect that Brown had always borne a good character until the time he was convicted.

Sims Williams, in reply, cited Ellis v. Turner, 8 T. R. 531; Hamlyn v. Houston & Co., 51 W. R. 99; and Robinson v. Dunmore, 2 Bos. & P. 416. There being here an express contract by the defendant to supply a careful and trustworthy driver, the case was one of contract and not tort. The defendant's duty was to safeguard the plaintiff's goods against all comers and he could not escape by saying that his servant's duties being those of a coachman merely, the man having turned out to be thief he was not liable for his acts. The defendant was liable for breach of contract.

WALTON, J.—In effect, the cause of action relied on here is that there was a breach of a contract under which the defendant agreed that the driver should use reasonable and ordinary care in safeguarding the goods carried by the plaintiff's traveller on his rounds in the brougham supplied him for that purpose by the defendant. Therefore the first question I am called upon to decide is the nature of the contract. There was some controversy on this point, but on the whole the terms of the contract are not in doubt. At any rate the defendant was to supply a brougham in which the plaintiff's traveller was to go his rounds. It is not very clear whether the defendant ever knew before the goods were stolen that the samples to be carried about in the brougham were articles of considerable value. As a finding of fact I have come to the conclusion that the defendant was not told at the time of hiring that the traveller was in the service of a silversmith, but that he knew that samples were to be carried in the brougham, as it was to be fitted up with shelves and a lock and key, as is usual in a case of a carriage used for this purpose. The defendant might have inquired into the nature of the goods to be carried, and might have insisted on limiting his liability or on charging a special price for the hire, but he did not do so. Therefore I think the samples such as were carried might fairly be taken to have been within the contemplation of the parties. On that assumption the decision in Abrahams v. Bullock directly applies to the present case, and therefore the contract, as was said in that case by Collins, M.R., "involved an obligation upon the defendant that the driver he supplied should use ordinary care not merely in driving, but in looking after the carriage when the traveller was away." It is clear from other passages in that judgment that that obligation embraced the obligation of taking reasonable care to safeguard the goods in the brougham. On that authority I am bound to hold on the facts in the present case that there was a contract by the defendant that the coachman Brown should use ordinary and reasonable care to safeguard the goods in the brougham, in the intervals of driving when the traveller was not in the brougham himself, but was engaged in calling upon customers or in other business, or when he was taking his lunch in the middle of the day. That being the contract, did the coachman use reasonable care? It is plain that he did not. On the contrary, he wilfully allowed the goods to be stolen, while he himself, with the hope of avoiding detection, said he went off to get a drink. There having thus been a failure on his part to use reasonable care, the defendant, whose servant he was, is liable for the consequent loss that the plaintiff suffered. Totally different questions arise in cases where the question is that of a master's liability to a stranger for something done by the servant. In such cases no doubt the fact that the act of the servant was a criminal act might have an important bearing upon the question whether the servant was acting within the scope of his authority. Here there was an affirmative contract by the defendant that his servant should do certain things, and that he should use reasonable care. It cannot be said that his failure rendered the master less liable because the wrongful act of the servant amounted to a criminal act. I hold, therefore, that the defendant is liable, and I give judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of the damages, to be ascertained.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, G. F. H. Matthews & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, H. C. Turner & Co.

K. B. Div. (Walton, J.) March 3; April 18.

TIVOLI, MANCHESTER (LIMITED) v. COLLEY AND OTHERS. (a.)

Restraint of trade—Music-hall artist—Covenant not to sing at any town within twenty miles of Manchester—Restraint to continue for six months after close of engagement—Reasonable restraint.

By an agreement in writing the defendant agreed to appear at the plaintiffs' theatre at Manchester at a salary of £60 per week. The agreement contained the following clause: "Prior to the commencement of this engagement and during its continuance, or within six months afterwards, no artist shall perform at any place of entertainment within twenty miles of Manchester . . . without the written consent of the director . . ." The defendant having been billed to appear at a theatre at Salford, in violation of this agreement and after leave to appear there had been refused her, the plaintiffs brought this action, claiming an injunction.

Held, on the evidence, that the restraint was reasonable, and therefore that the injunction claimed should be granted.

Nordenfelt v. Maxim-Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A. C. 535, followed.

The question raised by this action was whether a clause in an agreement entered into on the 22nd of April, 1903, between the plaintiffs and Mme. Colley, by which the latter undertook to appear at the plaintiffs' theatre at a salary of £60 per week, and not to appear at any other place of entertainment within twenty miles of Manchester during the continuance of the engagement or for six months afterwards without the written consent of the director of the Tivoli, Manchester (Limited), was capable of being enforced.

The evidence given at the trial was substantially that the date on which Mme. Colley was under the agreement to appear at the Tivoli was the 30th of May, 1904. In spite of having been refused leave to appear at the Regent-street Theatre, Salford, which was within the limit, Mme. Colley was advertised to appear there within six months after the 30th of May last, and the action was thereupon commenced.

For the plaintiffs evidence was given that the restriction was a very valuable one to Manchester managers, as their audiences came from such towns as Bolton, Salford, and Oldham.

McCall, K.C., and Morton Smith, for the plaintiffs, relied on Haynes v. Doman, [1899] 2 Ch. 13, 47 W. R. Dig. 174; Underwood v. Barker, 47 W. R. 347, [1899] 1 Ch. 300; and Mills v. Dunham, 39 W. R. 289, [1891] 1 Ch. 576.

Robert Wallace, K.C., and R. W. Turner, for the defendants.

The facts and argument sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

WALTON, J.—The plaintiff company is the owner of a music-hall at Manchester. The defendant Mme. Colley is a professional singer, and the defendant Thomas Barrasford is the manager or director of the Regent-street Theatre and Assembly Rooms at Salford, which belong to the defendants the Royal Theatre and Assembly Rooms (Limited). In this action, which was commenced on the 13th of February, 1904, the plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant Mme. Colley from performing at the Regent-street Theatre, Salford, or at any place of entertainment within twenty miles of Manchester, other than the Tivoli Music Hall, Manchester, before the 30th of November, 1904, and to restrain the other defendants from advertising that Mme. Colley would appear at the Regent-street Theatre before that date. In the alternative damages are claimed against Mme. Colley. The defendants who joined in their defence, raised one point only at the trial—namely, that the contracts with Mme. Colley upon which the plaintiffs relied were in restraint of trade and against public policy and therefore void. On the 21st and 22nd of April, 1903, the defendant Mme. Colley accepted a series of engagements to appear at the Tivoli Music Hall. There were six contracts, one dated the 21st of April and the other five dated the 22nd of April, 1903. Each contract was for one week's engagement, during which Mme. Colley was to appear every night and at one matinee, and was to receive a salary of £60 for each week's performances. The engagement was for six separate weeks, commencing respectively on the 22nd of June, 1903, the 28th of December, 1903, the 30th of May, 1904, the 2nd of January, 1905, the 26th of June, 1905, and the 15th of December, 1905. The clauses and conditions of the various contracts were identical and included in a stipulation in the following terms: "Prior to the commencement of the engagement and during its continuance or within six months afterwards no artist shall perform at any other place of entertainment within twenty miles of Manchester, neither shall any artist during the engagement perform at any occasional concert, tour, club, institute, or any place of amusement within that area, without the written consent of the director of the Tivoli, Manchester (Limited). It was proved before me and is indeed a matter of common knowledge that the district within twenty miles round Manchester is very populous, is ready and conveniently accessible to Manchester and contains many smaller towns of which Manchester is the head and centre. The public entertainments of Manchester are frequented by considerable numbers of people residing in these towns and in this district. There was evidence before me which I accept that Mme. Colley's performance at the Tivoli would be much more successful and much more valuable to the plaintiffs if during and for a reasonable time before and after the period of her engagement she did not appear at any other place of entertainment within the Manchester district, which may be fairly described as the district within twenty miles round that city. Upon these facts I have to decide whether the restraint imposed upon Mme. Colley by her contract is enforceable or is against public policy and void. In determining this question I propose to apply the test or rule laid down by Lord Macnaghten in Nordenfelt v. Maxim-Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A. C., at p. 565, where he says: "The true view at the present time I think is this: the public have an interest in every person carrying on his trade freely; so has the individual. All interference with individual liberty of action in trading, all restraint of trade of themselves if there is nothing more are contrary to public policy and therefore void. That is the general rule. But there are exceptions. Restraints of trade and interference with individual liberty of action may be justified by the special circumstances of a particular case. It is a sufficient justification and indeed it is the only justification, if the restriction is reasonable—reasonable that is in reference to the interest of the parties concerned and reasonable in reference to the interest of the public, so framed and so guarded as to afford adequate protection to the party in whose favour it is imposed. While at the same time it is in no way injurious to the public." The same rule is applied by the Court of Common Pleas in Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735, where Tindal C.J., at p. 743 said: "We do not see how a better test can be applied to the question whether reasonable or not than by considering whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interest of the party in favour of whom it is given and not so large as to interfere with the interest of the public. Whatever restraint is larger than the protection of the party can be of no benefit to either, it can only be oppressive, and if oppressive it is in the eye of the law unreasonable." There are, therefore, two questions to consider—first, whether the restraint was reasonable in reference to the interests of the parties concerned; and secondly, even though reasonable in their interest, whether it was injurious to the public. If the restraint was not reasonable in the interest, or as it is sometimes expressed, for the protection of the interests of the parties concerned, it is against public policy and void. And there may, as I understand the law, be cases in which even though the restraint is not unreasonable in the interest of the parties concerned, it may of itself be of such a character as to be injurious to the public, and in such cases, again, the restraint is void. I do not think it is necessary in the present case to say more upon the second of these questions than that, if the restraint was not unreasonable in the interest of the parties, I am satisfied that there was nothing in the particular circumstances of this case to make it injurious to the public. The only question, therefore, is whether the restraint was, in the language of Lord Macnaghten, reasonable in reference to the interest of the parties concerned. These interests appear to me perfectly plain. It was in the interest of the plaintiffs that they should get value for the price which they were paying; that the performance of Mme. Colley at the Tivoli should not be cheapened and depreciated by her appearance elsewhere within the Manchester district during and for some reasonable time before and after her engagements and the Tivoli. On the other hand, it was in the interest of Mme. Colley that she should secure this engagement at the Tivoli extending over the period in question at the salary of £60 a week. Whether having regard to the restraint the salary was adequate or not I am not called upon to decide. It was a matter of bargain between the parties and between parties who were quite competent to look after their own interest. But I am satisfied the restraint was an element in the bargain present to the minds of both contracting parties, and I think that Mme. Colley would not have secured her engagement if she had not consented to the restraint. In my judgment restraint did not exceed what the plaintiffs might reasonably require for the protection of their interests under the contract.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

For these reasons I think the plaintiffs are entitled to the injunction which they claim, and I therefore enter judgment for them accordingly with costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, G. B. Wyatt Digby.

Solicitors for the defendants, Amery Parkes & Powell.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

K. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) — June 6.

In re GREAVES.

Ex parte THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Practice—Partnership—Consolidation of proceedings in bankruptcy with administration of the estate of a deceased debtor in bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 106, 112, 125.

The court has power to consolidate proceedings in the bankruptcy of one partner with the administration of the estate of a deceased partner under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Ex parte application on behalf of the official receiver for the consolidation of the proceedings under the bankruptcy of C. Greaves with the proceedings under the administration in bankruptcy of the estate of his deceased partner W. Greaves.

C. Greaves and W. Greaves traded in partnership as stock brokers. W. Greaves died early in 1904 and his mother took out letters of administration of his estate. C. Greaves shortly afterwards became bankrupt, and after his bankruptcy a creditor of W. Greaves obtained an order for the administration of the deceased's estate in bankruptcy under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. As most of the creditors were creditors of the firm in respect of business transactions it was desired to consolidate the proceedings under one trustee.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Muir Mackenzie, for the application.—By section 106, where two or more bankruptcy petitions are presented against joint debtors, the court may consolidate the proceedings, and by section 112 it is enacted that where two parties were made bankrupt on separate petitions the same trustee shall be appointed for both, and that was held to apply even to parties who had dissolved partnership prior to the presentation of the petitions: In re Abbott, Ex parte The Official Receiver, [1894] 1 Q. B. 442. There is no precedent for the consolidation of proceedings in an ordinary bankruptcy with the administration of a deceased debtor's estate under section 125, but sub-section 1 of that section does specify that the order thereunder shall be "for the administration of the estate of the deceased debtor according to the law of bankruptcy."

BIGHAM, J.—I think that the official receiver is entitled to the order asked for. Sub-section 5 of section 125 enacts that: "Upon an order being made for the administration of a deceased debtor's estate, the property of the debtor shall vest in the official receiver of the court, and he shall forthwith proceed to realise and distribute the same in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

If that be read in conjunction with section 106, which gives power to consolidate proceedings, and section 112, which directs that the estates of bankrupt partners shall be administered by the same trustee, then it seems to me to appear that the court has power to make this order.

Solicitor for the official receiver, G. Tilling.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Feb. 2, 9.
Admiralty. }

"THE NORMANDY." (a.)

Ship — Collision — Damage to pier — County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts, 1868 and 1869—Prohibition.

The Court held that damage done by a ship to a pier is not "damage by collision" within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 3, of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and that, therefore, a county court had no admiralty jurisdiction in respect of such damage.

This was a motion in which the owners of the steamship Normandy claimed a writ of prohibition against the county court judge of Barnstable to restrain certain proceedings brought before him by the owner of a pier at Ilfracombe in respect of which pier damage to the extent of £200 was claimed against the owners of the steamship Normandy. The facts sufficiently appear from the judgment delivered by the court.

Dawson Miller, for the owners of The Normandy.

Chitty and Stuart Moore, for the respondents.

GORELL BARNES, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: In this case a motion was made for a writ of prohibition to the judge of the county court of Barnstable, to restrain proceedings in a suit by the plaintiff, Mr. Reginald Joseph Weld, of Lulworth Castle, Dorset, who, being a person of unsound mind, is suing by his committee. The defendants are the owners of the steamship Normandy, of Liverpool. The circumstances which have given rise to the motion are stated in the affidavit of Mr. Wm. Jones, who says that the summons in the above-mentioned action is a summons in rem, and by it the plaintiff claims against the said steamship Normandy £200 in respect of the damage alleged to have been caused by the said steamship Normandy to the plaintiff's pier at Ilfracombe, in the county of Devon. He also says that no part of the pier is afloat. The suit was brought under sub-section 3 of section 3 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, which provides that any county court having Admiralty jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction to try and determine causes "as to any claim or damage to cargo, or damage by collision," in cases in which the amount claimed does not exceed £300. The motion was ably argued before us on Tuesday, the 2nd inst., when it was contended by counsel for the applicants that the damage was not caused by collision within the meaning of the sub-section, and the authorities were quoted. On the other hand, counsel for the respondents contended that the sub-section included claims such as that made by the respondents, and that the authorities cited by counsel for the applicants were distinguishable from the case of The Zota. The simple question is whether the words "damage by collision" in the sub-section include damage done to a pier by a ship striking against it. The principal cases relied on by the defendants, the applicants, were Everard v. Kendall, 18 W. R. 892, 5 C. P. 428, and Robson v. Owners of The Kate, 36 W. R. 910, 21 Q. B. D. 13. In the former case it was "held on motion for writ of prohibition to the judge of the county court, that the Admiralty jurisdiction of the county court in the cases of collision was not more extensive than that of the High Court of Admiralty, and as the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction over such a collision, that the county court had no such Admiralty jurisdiction." The head-note shows that the action was for damage for collision between two barges propelled by oars only. In the course of his judgment, Montague Smith, J., said: "What is the meaning of 'damage by collision'? We have nothing to guide us as to what damage by collision is within the Act, except the general scope and object of the Act. In common understanding, and as understood in the Court of Admiralty, damage by collision is damage sustained by a ship from another ship coming in contact with it." Then he goes on: "What, then, is the meaning of ship?" and proceeds to discuss that question. The late master of the Rolls, then Brett, J., said: "That drives us back to the Act of 1868, which gives the county court power to try in a particular way questions of salvage, claims for towage, necessaries supplied to ships, and wages, and claims for damage to cargo or damage by collision. Damage by what collisions? Looking at sections 7 and 22 of the Act of 1868, it seems to me that it means a collision between two vessels—such vessels as were formerly dealt with by the Admiralty Court." These dicta are favourable to the defendants' contention in this case, but the case is not conclusive in their favour, because the basis of the decision appears to have been that it was not the intention of the Legislature to give Admiralty jurisdiction over Admiralty cases other than those over which the Admiralty Court had jurisdiction, and that the Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction over such collisions. It did not decide that the county courts had, within their limits, jurisdiction in all cases in which the Admiralty Court had jurisdiction. In Robson v. Owners of The Kate it was held that "damage occasioned to an object on the bank of a river by contact with a sailing gear of a vessel afloat in the river is not 'damage by collision' within section 3, sub-section 3, of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and a county court has not Admiralty jurisdiction in respect of such damage." Wills, J., in the course of his judgment, said: "It is not necessary to define the word 'collision.' The words 'damage by collision' used in an Act the object of which is to confer an 'Admiralty' jurisdiction, cannot be construed as including damage which has taken place on land, outside the ebb and flow of the tide, and which would certainly not have fallen within the original jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty in respect to collision. The statute does not, as it appears to me, either in terms or by inference, extend the jurisdiction of the county court to the damage of which the applicant complains. Grantham, J., said: "In Everard v. Kendall, which was a proceeding by way of prohibition under this Act, Montague Smith, J., is reported to have said"—then he uses the passage I have read from the judgment of Montague Smith, J., and proceeds—"I think the preceding words, 'damage to cargo,' which obviously refer to damage to cargo while on board a ship, tend to show that the intention of the Legislature was to confine the newly-conferred jurisdiction to cases of collision between ships." The reason given by the latter judge for his decision is applicable to the present case. The case mainly relied upon by the plaintiffs was The Zeta, [1893] A. C. 468. The head-note to that case is as follows: "The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, s. 4, provides that the jurisdiction given by section 3 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, to county courts having Admiralty jurisdiction shall extend to all claims not exceeding £300 for damage to ships, whether by collision or otherwise. Held, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal ([1892] P. 285), and restoring the decision of Sir Charles Butt ([1891] P. 215), that this jurisdiction includes a claim for damage to a ship by collision with an object which is not a ship, e.g., a pierhead. Semble, that when those Acts were passed the Admiralty Court had jurisdiction over such a claim." That case turned upon section 4 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act Amendment Act, 1869, which clearly gave the county courts Admiralty jurisdiction in cases of damage to ships, whether by collision or otherwise. Reference has been made by counsel for the respondents to cases in which the word collision was used otherwise than with respect to collision between ships. But it seems to me that the true meaning of the word collision is not mere striking against, but striking together. Reference has also been made to sections 418 and 419 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and if the question had been free from authority I would still, having regard to the object of the Act of 1868, and the general scope and ordinarily understood meaning of the words "damage by collision" in the Admiralty Court, come to the conclusion that the word "collision" referred only to collision between ships. I am of opinion, therefore, that the writ of prohibition must go, and that the applicants must have the costs of this motion against the respondents.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors for plaintiffs (respondents), Ffinch & Thanter, Barnstable.

Solicitors for defendants, Botterell & Roche, for John R. Richards, Swansea.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) } Jan. 26, 27, 28, 29; March 15.

CROSFIELD & SONS (LIMITED) AND OTHERS v. MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO. (a.)

Arbitration—Canal company—Corporation and traders—As co-plaintiffs and in individual capacity—Agreement—Breach—Waiver—Jurisdiction—Practice—Ouster of jurisdiction of court—Private Act—Scheduled agreement—Manchester Ship Canal Acts, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxxxviii.), s. 88, sub-sections 14 and 22; s. 202; and 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxii.), s. 43.

If a private Act of Parliament contains a special arbitration clause referring all disputes to arbitration, or if such an arbitration clause is embodied in an agreement, which agreement is scheduled to and confirmed by such a private Act, then it may absolutely oust the jurisdiction of the court, not only where express language is used, constituting, e.g., an engineer the proper tribunal for the determination of such disputes, but also where it is shown by necessary implication that arbitration should be resorted to, provided that in both cases it is for the good of the public as a whole, and not for the benefit of private individuals only.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.—No deficiency in pleading and no waiver by litigants could in such cases give the court jurisdiction.

By a private Act of Parliament, the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxxxviii.), after enacting by section 88 that it was "for the protection of the Corporation of W., and of traders, manufacturers, and others carrying on business at or near W.," and that "the following provisions, unless otherwise or between the corporation and the company," should have effect, further contained numerous sub-sections conferring obligations on the canal company to dredge and keep dredged the bed and banks of the River M. between certain limits. By sub-section 22 it was provided that if any difference shall arise "between the company and the corporation" as to the true meaning or anything to be done under the section, an arbitrator shall determine it, and also by section 202, if any question should arise "between the company and any person." Later another Act was passed, the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxii.), to which an agreement, dated the 9th of April, 1896, and made between the traders and manufacturers of W., the Corporation of W. and the canal company, was scheduled, and the Act substantially confirmed it. The agreement was come to on account of various disputes that had arisen owing to the canal company having failed to fulfil their obligations as to dredging the River M. Up to the date of this agreement the traders of W. had used the canal free of tolls, as provided by the provisions of a previous agreement. The obligation on the canal company as to dredging was slightly modified by this agreement, but by clause 10 in it it was enacted that if any difference should arise as to its meaning such difference was to be determined by an engineer to be appointed (unless otherwise agreed on) on the application of the company or the corporation by a person therein named, whose decision was to be final. The defendants, as the plaintiffs alleged, failed to fulfil their obligations, either under this agreement or under the Act of 1885, and the traders claimed free navigation, and paid tolls for the use of the canal under protest. An action was ultimately brought against the canal company, the plaintiffs suing both as co-plaintiffs and in an indi- vidual capacity. At the trial a preliminary objection was taken by the defendants that the jurisdiction of the court was ousted by reason of sub-section 22 of section 88, and clause 10 of the agreement of the 9th of April, 1896, having provided that such disputes should be referred to arbitration, as therein mentioned. The plaintiffs suing as traders in their individual capacity claimed a return of the tolls, as they alleged, wrongfully demanded.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held (reversing Byrne, J., on the preliminary point), that, with respect to the corporation, the jurisdiction of the court was absolutely ousted, either by sub-section 22 of section 88 of the Act of 1885, or clause 10 of the agreement of 1896.

Held, further (by Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ., Cozens-Hardy, L.J., dissenting), that, as regards the action brought by the traders, the jurisdiction of the court was also ousted until the arbitrator should have given his decision.

Per Stirling, L.J. (dissentiente Vaughan Williams, L.J.).—Section 202 of the Act of 1885 applied.

Per Cozens-Hardy, L.J.—Neither of the two arbitration clauses affected the traders. It seemed wrong to postpone the adjudication upon the claims of the traders until after an award in a reference to which they would not be parties. The traders could properly sue.

It is the modern practice to plead ouster of jurisdiction (per Vaughan Williams, L.J., referring to Mayor of Folkestone v. Ladd, [1893] 3 Ch. 22).

Caledonian Railway Co. v. Greenock and Wemyss Bay Railway Co., L. R. 2 Sc. and Div. Apps. Cas. 347, 22 W. R. Dig. 13, discussed and followed.

The observations in London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 37 W. R. 65, 40 Ch. D. 100, of Cotton and Bowen, L.JJ., dissented from.

Decision of Byrne, J., reversed.

This was an appeal by the defendant company from a decision of Byrne, J., dated the 7th of April, 1903.

The plaintiffs were Joseph Crosfield & Sons (Limited), James Fairclough & Sons (Limited), and Monks, Hall, & Co. (Limited), traders and manufacturers in or near Warrington, and the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of the borough of Warrington.

The defendants were the Manchester Ship Canal Co., and the object of the action was to compel the defendants to carry out their obligations concerning the dredging of the River Mersey where it flowed through the borough of Warrington. The plaintiff traders sued for themselves and all the other traders and manufacturers of Warrington, but later in their individual capacity.

By the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxxxviii.), the defendant company were incorporated for the purpose of constructing a canal between Manchester and Liverpool. The canal constructed by the defendant company under the statute occupies the bed of the River Irwell from Manchester to its junction with the Mersey, and thence occupies the bed of the River Mersey to a place called Rixton, from which the canal runs roughly parallel with the river past Warrington. On the canal there were several locks, at Eastham, Latchford, within the boundary of the borough of Warrington, and above that the Irlam locks.

Prior to the opening of the canal, the traders of Warrington depended very largely upon the Mersey for the carriage by water of their goods. The defendant company were also authorized by their statute to do away with and absorb into the ship canal the whole of the old Runcorn Latchford Canal. Section 88 of the company's special Act of 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxxxviii.) runs, "For the protection of the corporation of Warrington (in this section referred to as 'the corporation') and of traders, manufacturers, and others carrying on business at or near Warrington, the following provisions unless otherwise agreed on between the corporation and the company shall have effect, that is to say—(by sub-section 14)—The company shall before the canal be opened for traffic at their own cost dredge the bed and banks of the River Mersey, and for ever after maintain the same dredged so that at all times there shall be a depth of eight feet of water at low water of spring tides between the western boundary of the works of Monks, Hall, & Co. at or near Bank Quay and the eastern boundary of the borough of Warrington near the commencement of the Latchford Canal."

By sub-section 2, the traders of Warrington would have the right to use the ship canal from Warrington downwards at certain specified rates of toll. In the year 1893 the dredging of the reach of the river was begun, and as it appeared that such dredging could not be completed before the day fixed for the opening of the canal for traffic in accordance with sub-section 14, negotiations were entered into between the corporation of Warrington and the canal company with a view to permitting the opening of the canal in the beginning of 1894, and before the company had complied with their obligations under the above-mentioned sub-section. These negotiations resulted in an agreement of the 12th of December, 1893, when it was agreed that the defendants should be at liberty to open the canal for traffic on the 1st of January, 1894, and that they were to complete the dredging on or before the 1st of July, 1894, and in default were to pay the corporation £50 per day for liquidated damages. Further, that between the 1st of December, 1893, and the completion of the dredging the traders specified in the schedule—i.e., those carrying on business in or near Warrington, should have the right to navigation by certain specified vessels on the ship canal from Warrington down to Runcorn, or in certain cases down as far as Eastham, free of tolls.

The defendant company, however, failed to carry out their obligations with respect to this dredging, and did not dredge the river to a proper depth by the 1st of July, 1894; frequent complaints were made, and the liquidated damages reached a very large amount.

Negotiations of one sort and another went on during the year 1895 which ultimately resulted in another agreement of the 9th of April, 1896, and this agreement formed the basis of the action.

Up to the date of this agreement the traders and manufacturers had been using the canal free of tolls within the limits referred to as provided by section 4 of the agreement of the 12th of December, 1893.

The agreement of the 9th of April, 1896, was substantially scheduled and confirmed by the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxii.), hereinafter referred to. By clause 1 of this last mentioned agreement it was agreed that sub-section 14 of section 88 of the Act of 1885 should, for the purposes of the agreement, be read and have the effect as if the same were in the words following, that is to say, (a) "That the company shall forthwith at their own cost dredge the bed and banks of the River Mersey (. . .) and for ever after maintain the same dredged so that at all times there shall be a depth of eight feet of water at low water of spring tides in the said channel between the western boundary of the works of Monks, Hall, & Co. (Limited), at or near Bank Quay, and Howley Lock." (b) "The company shall not be bound to dredge the bed or banks of the River Mersey defined as aforesaid or to maintain the depth of eight feet of water in the said channel between Howley Lock and the eastern boundary of the borough of Warrington, near the commencement of the Latchford Canal, unless and until the locks at Howley and Twenty-steps Bridge respectively or either of them (. . .) are at any time hereafter enlarged by the company or with their consent from their present dimensions respectively so as to enable vessels of increased size to get to Howley, in which event the company shall in like manner be bound at their own cost to dredge the bed and banks of the River Mersey defined as aforesaid and to maintain the depth of eight feet of water in the said channel for the entire distance between the said western boundary of the works of Monks, Hall, & Co. (Limited) and the eastern boundary of the borough of Warrington."

The provisions as to tolls contained in sub-section 2 of section 88 of the Act of 1885 were modified. By sub-section (e) of clause 2 it was also provided that the rights and privileges given to the traders and manufacturers of Warrington as to free passage under section 4 of the agreement of the 12th of December, 1893, were forthwith to cease. Clause 4 was to the effect that the company bound themselves effectually to execute and complete at their own cost the several dredging and other works prescribed by this agreement. The penalties or liquidated damages payable to the corporation were waived and released. Clause 6 was as follows: "If and whenever the company shall fail to maintain the channel referred to . . . and navigation is thereby obstructed, then and in each such case the traders and manufacturers carrying on business at Warrington shall have the right of navigation in respect of vessels passing through the Walton Lock of the portion of the Manchester Ship Canal extending from Eastham to Walton Lock, of the Walton Lock, and of the portion of the River Mersey within the limits described in clause 1 (a) of this agreement, free of all tolls and dues, until the aforesaid channel shall have been made and completed to the reasonable satisfaction of the surveyor for the time being of the corporation. Provided always that no such trader or manufacturer as aforesaid shall be entitled to the right of navigation referred to in this clause if the company immediately on the receipt of a written notice from the surveyor for the time being of the corporation, certifying the fact of such obstruction and its position and extent, commence to dredge and continue to dredge the aforesaid channel to the reasonable satisfaction of the surveyor for the time being of the corporation."

By section 7 it was provided that, notwithstanding anything thereinbefore contained, if the company failed within six months after written notice from the corporation to fulfil the provisions of the agreement, then in such case the rights and privileges of the corporation and the traders and manufacturers under the Act of 1885 (except sub-section 6 of section 88) should forthwith revive, notwithstanding this agreement, or that of the 12th of December, 1893.

By section 8 the corporation were given an option themselves to carry out the dredging if the company failed to do so within six months after receiving written notice from the corporation, and the corporation could charge the costs so incurred to the company.

Section 9 was as follows: "Save as hereinbefore expressly mentioned nothing in this agreement contained shall affect, lessen, or take away any rights, powers, and privileges enjoyed by and conferred upon the corporation and the manufacturers and traders of Warrington under or by virtue of any Act relating to the company or otherwise, and save as aforesaid such rights, powers, and privileges are hereby reserved accordingly."

Further powers were given to the defendant company by the Manchester Ship Canal Act of 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxii.), and the agreement of the 9th of April, 1896, was scheduled to the said Act, section 43 of which runs as follows: "The terms of agreement set forth in the schedule to this Act are hereby confirmed and made binding upon the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Warrington and the company, as if the same were contained in an agreement duly entered into by those parties, and confirmed by Act of Parliament, and the agreement dated the 9th of April, 1896, and made between the same parties is hereby declared to be null and void so far only as the same differs from the terms of the agreement hereby confirmed."

The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant company had never made or maintained the channel of the River Mersey between the points referred to in clause 1 of the agreement of the 9th of April, 1896, for the minimum width and depth therein provided. In the early part of the year 1887 the defendant company claimed payment of dues from the traders and manufacturers of Warrington, alleging that from the date of the said agreement of 1896 the traders were not entitled to free navigation, against which the traders protested. Notices from time to time were sent to the defendants calling attention to the fact that they had failed to make and maintain the channel as provided by the agreements and statutes hereinbefore referred to, or to take the proper and necessary steps for making and maintaining the same, and that the dredgers used were totally inadequate for the purpose. The plaintiffs contended that, notwithstanding the notices and complaints, the defendant company had never made or maintained at any time the channel in the River Mersey as provided by the statutes and agreements, and that they had, however, insisted on payment from the traders and manufacturers of Warrington using the canal, of dues and tolls, notwithstanding the fact that they had failed to comply with their obligations, and that by reason of the acts and defaults of the defendant company the traders of Warrington had suffered considerable loss and damage. The defendant company denied not having at their own cost executed and completed the dredging and other works prescribed by the agreements, and asserted that it was not the fact that from the date of the agreement of 1896 there had never been a channel of the width and depth therein provided, or that the navigation had been obstructed, and they further stated that the dredging of the channel had been made much more difficult by reason of the plaintiffs improperly and unlawfully discharging lime and other manufacturers' refuse into the river, and thus seriously impeding the defendants in the discharge of their duty. Further, that they had duly complied with all the notices which the plaintiffs were entitled to give. The hearing of the case in the court below occupied nineteen days.

Byrne, J., held that the plaintiffs in their representative capacity were entitled to the relief they claimed in respect of the company having failed in their duty to dredge the river to a sufficient depth as provided by sub-section 14 of section 88 of the Act of 1885, that since 1896 the defendants had never commenced or continued to dredge the river to the reasonable satisfaction of the corporation's surveyor, and that the plaintiffs as individuals were entitled to recover back the tolls wrongfully demanded and paid under protest, and he directed an inquiry as to the same and as to damages. A preliminary objection was raised before his lordship by the defendants that by sub-section 22 of section 88 of the Act of 1885, and by clause 10 of the agreement scheduled to the Act of 1896, the matter should have been referred to arbitration by an engineer as therein mentioned, and that these provisions for arbitration forming part of a statutory enactment ousted the jurisdiction of the court, and whatever the court might do was a nullity. The learned judge overruled this objection, holding that it was one which could be waived, and that it was too late to raise the objection for the first time at the trial, and it must be considered to be waived.

The defendant company appealed.

On the appeal this preliminary objection as to the ouster of the jurisdiction of the court, by reason of sub-section 22 of section 88 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, and the agreement scheduled to the Act of 1896, having provided that such disputes should be referred to arbitration, was taken by counsel for the appellant company.

Sub-section 22 of section 88 of the Act of 1885 is as follows: "If any difference shall arise between the company and the corporation as to the true intent and meaning of this section, or as to anything to be done or not to be done thereunder, such difference shall be determined by an engineer to be appointed (unless otherwise agreed on) on the application of the company or corporation by the Board of Trade, whose decision shall be final and binding on both parties, and the costs of the reference shall be borne as he shall direct."

J. F. Moulton, K.C., C. A. Cripps, K.C., W. Pickford, K.C., O. Leigh-Clare, and A. T. Lawrence, for the appellants on preliminary objection as to jurisdiction.—In dredging canal, the obligation of the defendants has to be determined in reference to what is called a "datum line." The question under sub-section 14 of section 88 is whether this datum line is to be a fixed datum line, or a datum line which varies from time to time. The channel cannot be dredged without a fixed datum line. Sub-section 22 of section 88 is a statutory substitution of an engineer for the purpose of arbitration instead of the court. It was said the whole question depended on the clause "unless otherwise agreed on between the corporation and the company." It is inconceivable how this was arrived at. The learned judge said that the defendants had waived their rights, but the question of jurisdiction cannot be waived. [They referred to section 202 of the Act of 1885, which runs: "If any question arise between the company and any person touching anything to be done or not to be done, or any money to be paid under the provisions of this Act, then, unless by this Act expressly provided, such question shall be determined by arbitration in manner provided by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20).] Then paragraph 10 of the agreement scheduled to the Act of 1896 is as follows: "If any difference shall arise between the company and the corporation as to the true intent and meaning of this agreement, or as to anything to be done or not to be done thereunder, such difference shall be determined by an engineer to be appointed (unless otherwise agreed on) on the application of the company or the corporation by the president for the time being of the Institution of Civil Engineers, whose decision shall be final and binding on both parties, and the cost of the reference shall be borne as he shall direct." This is a very wide arbitration clause. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In this particular case, the agreement being embodied in the statute, is a statutory condition precedent.—Yes. And therefore you must properly say that it goes to jurisdiction.] On the point of jurisdiction, the learned judge was under a misapprehension. A question of pleading of this kind has nothing to do with "otherwise agreeing" by the parties. The defendants rely on the whole of section 88, and that includes the arbitration clause. There is no "unless otherwise agreed" in section 43 of the Act of 1896. The learned judge was wrong in addicting an amendment that the traders could sue in their individual capacity, because if this were a mere statutory enactment, which the parties could waive inter partes, the traders have no right to sue whatever. They have only a right to sue because it is under a public enactment. If there is any difference, it can only be determined by arbitration. It is a case of plea to the jurisdiction.

They referred to Mayor, &c., of London v. Cox and Others, 16 W. R. 44, 2 Eng. & Ir. App. 239; Davis v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 42 W. R. 215, 44 W. R. 172. [1895] A. C. 542; Duke of Bedford v. St. Paul, Covent Garden, 30 W. R. 411; the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxxxviii.), s. 88, sub-sections 14 and 22, and s. 202.

W. R. Bousfield, K.C., T. R. Hughes, K.C., and F. Thompson, for the respondents.—No suggestion whatever came from the defendant company, that this was a matter which ought to be referred to arbitration. There are two classes of cases where the court has power to stay. The first is where the court has possibly no jurisdiction at all. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—If the court has power to stay, that necessarily presupposes the jurisdiction.] Quite so; there is also a second class of cases, e.g., where the court has a discretion to exercise under, first, the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), and next, the Arbitration Act of 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), and also the case where the parties have themselves agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. In this latter case the party has no right whatever to go to the tribunal; the court has a discretion, and will consider the matter if he comes sub modo at the proper time in the proper way, and then may refer at its discretion the matter to an arbitrator. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The jurisdiction of the court is also excluded if the parties agree that the consideration shall be something to be determined by A. B.; until he had done so the action could not be brought.] Perhaps that might very well be; there was also the case in old times, where the court, if its jurisdiction was not excluded, would nevertheless give effect to it where the parties had agreed to refer the matter to arbitration, coupled with a covenant not to sue. The words in section 88, "If any difference shall arise as to the true intent and meaning of this section . . . such difference shall be determined by an engineer to be appointed," does not mean that there is any ouster of the jurisdiction of the court, but the court has the right to use its discretion. The defendants say this is not an agreement, it is an enactment, and the parties cannot waive. There is no authority for such a proposition. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Do you suggest that we should treat this agreement as for all purposes a private agreement inter partes?] Not for all purposes: Caledonion Railway Co. v. Greenock and Wemyss Bay Railway Co., L. R. 2 Sc. and Div. App. Cas. 347, 22 W. R. Dig. 13; London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 37 W. R. 65, 40 Ch. D. 100, 37 W. R. Dig. 95. The parties ought not to come to the court, and then, having got the judgment of the court, say that that evidence ought not to have been entertained. No distinction is drawn here between the parties and an agreement which is scheduled to an Act of Parliament and confirmed by an Act of Parliament. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—If that is part of your contention, I do not think it will succeed. If you go that length, I think the authorities are against you.] For many purposes, it is so: Manchester Ship Canal v. Manchester Racecourse Co., [1900] 2 Ch. D. 352, 46

W. R. Dig. 49, 49 W. R. 418, [1901] 2 Ch. D. 37, 49 W. R. Dig. 40. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to London and North-Western and Great Western Joint Railway Co. v. Billington (Limited), [1899] A. C. 79, 47 W. R. Dig. 173.] [COZENS-HARDY, L.J., mentioned Midland Railway Co. v. Loseby & Carnley, 47 W. R. 656, [1899] A. C. 133, 47 W. R. Dig. 172 The word "shall" in "this shall go to arbitration" does not mean that the jurisdiction of the court is excluded; all the cases show that there must be something more than the mere common form words in order to get at that conclusion, nor do these words in an Act of Parliament at all effect the same purpose: Countess of Rothes v. The Kirkcaldy and Dysart Waterworks Commissioners, 7 App. Cas. 694. The appellants say that if any question arises, not upon the original section, but upon the agreement, it shall be referred to the president for the time being of the Institution of Civil Engineers, but this arbitration clause 10 is not in substitution for sub-section 22 of the original Act, because sub-section 22 deals with any difference arising under the section, and clause 10 only deals with the agreement. Each of the sections on which the appellants rely is only intended to deal with a very small and definite matter, and is not intended to exclude the jurisdiction of any other tribunal. Sub-section 22 of section 88 is for the benefit of the parties to point out the best tribunal to deal with the majority of the matters arising under the section, and does not exclude the jurisdiction of the court. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—You say it is incredible that the Legislature should have intended to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts in relation to the matters which you have been detailing.] No; the intention of the Legislature does not exclude, it is the provision of one tribunal and not the exclusion of the other. The appellants further contend that the traders are excluded under section 202, but the purport of it is to deal with the period of construction, it is not intended to deal with the permanent right of the parties afterwards arising. Although the appellants have not really argued under section 202, yet that section has nothing whatever to do with the right of a trader to bring an action for damages for breach of the main obligations in the Act, or bringing an action on behalf of their class to have the Act construed. Section 88 is expressed to be for the protection of the Corporation of Warrington, and of the traders, manufacturers, and others carrying on business at or near Warrington, therefore they have a direct right to enforce the provisions of the section: Heron v. The Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners, 27 L. R. Ir. 179, 39 W. R. Dig. 233, [1892] A. C. 498, 41 W. R. Dig. 246. [STIRLING, L.J.—Ellis and Others v. Duke of Bedford, 47 W. R. 385, [1899] 1 Ch. 494.] As regards a representative action, this case is clearly in our favour.

They also cited the following cases: Watford and Rickmansworth Railway Co. v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 17 W. R. 814. L. R. 8 Eq. 231, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 1, 141, 142; Ford's Hotel Co v. Bartlett, 44 W. R. 241, [1896] A. C. 1. 44 W. R. Dig. 10; and London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Donellan & Billington, [1898] 2 Q. B. 7, 46 W. R. Dig. 147.

Cripps, K.C., in reply.—The respondents have cited a great many cases. Section 88 of the Act of 1885 is a statutory enactment, and the question in the Caledonian case does not arise at all in regard to this section, and Byrne, J., rightly said it does not arise here. [He cited Atkinson v. The Newcastle and Gateshead Waterworks Co., 25 W. R. 794, L. R. 2 Exch. D. 441, at p. 448; 25 W. R. Dig. 287, and Johnstone and Toronto Type Foundry Co. v. Consumers Gas Co. of Toronto, [1898] App. Cas. 447; 46 W. R. Dig. 21.] These cases show that the respondents put the legal rights of the corporation or traders, much too high. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Groves v. Lord Wimborne, 47 W. R. 87, [1898] 2 Q. B. 402, 47 W. R. Dig. 61.] The only statutory duty under section 88 which the respondents say we have not carried out is that we have not dredged the canal, and by sub-section 22 it is absolutely in terms made obligatory that the matter shall be determined by arbitration. [STIRLING, L.J.—What sort of arbitrator do you say this is to go to?] The arbitrator named in the special provision. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Would you mind telling me, have the decisions under the Friendly Societies Acts and the Building Societies Acts any bearing on this?] My recollection is that where the arbitration is constituted in the form of a legislative enactment that is so. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., mentioned Crisp v. Bunbury, 8 Bing. 394.] It is a question of statutory enactment. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am afraid we must take time to dispose of this matter.]

Cur. adv. vult.

March 15.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read his judgment as follows: This is an appeal by the defendants, the Manchester Ship Canal Co., in an action brought against them in which the plaintiffs are the Corporation of Warrington and certain traders of Warrington as representing the traders of Warrington generally, and also in their individual capacity. The object of the action is to enforce rights which they claim respectively to have against the ship canal company under a clause of an Act of Parliament, or under that clause as modified by an agreement affirmed by a subsequent Act of Parliament, or under that agreement. The trader plaintiffs, in their individual capacities, although they include a claim for damages for the breach by the ship canal company of dredging obligations cast on them by the statute or by the agreement, in substance claim the return of tolls which were paid by the traders on the demand of the ship canal company for the user of the canal, which user was necessitated by failure of the canal company to perform duties alleged by the plaintiffs to have been cast on the canal company in respect of maintaining the channel of the River Mersey at a certain depth. The failure by the canal company to perform these duties would entitle the traders under the sixth section of the agreement scheduled to the Act of 1896 to navigate a portion of the canal, free of all tolls and dues, during such time as the said channel should be obstructed. The plaintiffs generally ask for declarations of rights. When the case came on for hearing, the defendant company took a preliminary objection, which was this: that, having regard to the arbitration provisions contained as well in the original Act of Parliament as in the agreement affirmed by the subsequent Act, the jurisdiction of the court is absolutely ousted, in the sense that the court could not, even with the assent of all parties, entertain the action or dispose of a particular matter in difference essential to the maintenance of the action. I will observe here that the action really embodies three actions, and that it may be that the ousting of the jurisdiction may be effective as to one or more of the claims, although not effective as to all three actions or all the claims. This, however, would seem an unfortunate result, for it is obvious that it is desirable that all these cases relating to the same obligations of the canal company should be disposed of by the same tribunal. The preliminary objection so far as it is based on the original Act of the Manchester Ship Canal—the Act of 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxxxviii.), depend primarily on section 88 of that Act. The section begins with these words: "For the protection of the Corporation of Warrington and of traders, manufacturers, and others carrying on business at or near Warrington, the following provisions, unless otherwise, agreed on between the corporation and the company, shall have effect." Then follow numerous provisions, the fourteenth of which deals with the obligations of the canal company in respect of the dredging of the channel of the River Mersey and the maintenance of the dredging, so that at all times there should be a depth of eight feet of water at low water of spring tides between a certain point, and the eastern boundary of the borough of Warrington, the object of this provision being, of course, the maintenance of the channel of the Mersey which might be affected by the construction of the canal, and its maintenance in such a condition that the channel of the Mersey might continue a navigable way convenient to the borough of Warrington and its traders. Then section 22 says: [His lordship read the section referred to above.] The words "unless otherwise agreed on," in that section, refer, I assume, simply to the appointment of the arbitrator, who may be an agreed arbitrator or one appointed by the Board of Trade. Thus far I have only dealt with the statute of 1885, but subsequently, in 1896, the company and the corporation in the exercise of the power conferred by the words in the preface of section 88, "Unless otherwise agreed on between the corporation and the company," agreed to modify the provisions of section 88. I should here observe that in my opinion the power of agreement thus given in the prefatory clause of section 88 is only a power to alter the provisions in that section, and has no bearing whatever on the power of the corporation or the company to waive the provision contained in sub-section 22. Now the agreement thus made in 1896 between the corporation and the company, slightly modified, is confirmed by section 43 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxii.), which runs thus: [His lordship read the section set out above.] The agreement in the schedule recites the prefatory words in section 88 of the Act of 1885, and sub-section 14 of that section, and then recites an agreement of 1893 between the corporation and the company, whereby in consideration of the corporation not opposing the opening of the canal, although incomplete, the company agrees, subject to penalties, to complete at their own cost on or before the 1st of July, 1894, the dredging authorized by section 88, sub-section 14, of the Act of 1885, reserving all powers, rights, and privileges of the corporation and the manufacturers and traders of Warrington under the Acts relating to the company or otherwise. The recital of this agreement of 1893 is followed by a recital that by the same agreement the company agreed that during the time fixed for completion by that agreement the corporation, traders, and manufacturers at Warrington should have the right to carry, by means of their barges, goods from the Mersey to the Mersey along the Manchester Ship Canal free of rates or tolls. Then follows a recital of disputes and differences having arisen between the company and the corporation, and that the company and the corporation for the purpose of settling those disputes have agreed to execute these presents. This recital of the agreement between the corporation and the company is followed by a rather remarkable recital relating to the traders. It runs thus: "And whereas the traders, manufacturers, and all other persons now or hereafter carrying on business at or near Warrington are entitled to use portions of the canal and River Mersey and the locks and works at Walton, on the terms and conditions defined in sub-section 2 of section 88, and the corporation and the company have agreed to alter those terms and conditions as hereinafter mentioned." It will be observed that although it is rights of the traders and others carrying on business which are affected, it is the corporation and company who make the agreement, and this may be very important when one comes to consider whether, upon a breach of this agreement confirmed by statute affecting the rights of the traders and others, an action based on the breach may be brought by the injured person, as is the case when an individual is injured by the breach of a statute passed for his benefit, provided such a remedy comes within the purview of the Legislature in the particular statute which it is especially likely to do in a case in which the Act is not an Act of public and general policy, but is rather in the nature of a private legislative bargain between certain persons likely to be affected by the work authorized by a special Act, and a body of undertakers as to the manner in which they will keep up certain public works. The scheduled agreement by clause 1 provides that "Sub-section 14 of section 88 shall, for the purpose of this agreement"—I am not sure what these last words mean, but I think practically nothing—"be read and have effect as if the same were in the words following." Then follow some give-and-take clauses as to the dredging, and the two clause (d) and (e) which deal with wharves and the rights and liabilities of the company and the wharf-owners respectively in relation thereto. These clauses are remarkable because they embody a bargain with considerations to and from the company and the wharf-owners. [His lordship read the various clauses of the agreement which are set out above.] In clause 6 it will be observed that it is the surveyor of the corporation who has to give this notice. Clause 7 is unimportant, as no such notice was ever given. [His lordship referred to clauses 8 and 9, which are also set out above, and clause 10, which is set out in the argument of counsel for the appellants.] It will be observed that in clause 10 this clause differs very little from sub-section 22 of section 88, except that the engineer arbitrator is to be named by a different authority. Clause 12 says: "The corporation shall have all rights and privileges under and shall be deemed to be traders within the meaning of this agreement."

I think I have now called attention to all the material parts of the statutory agreement. It will be observed that the right to recover the tolls can only arise under the statutory agreement, although other damages could be recovered by traders and manufacturers for breaches of the provisions of section 88 affecting them if, indeed, traders individually have a right of action within the purview of the Act of 1885.

The right of the traders collectively to a declaration of rights, whether under the Act of 1885 or under the statutory agreement of 1896, I will consider presently. I think that the only matter which I have to call attention to before considering the preliminary point, based on an alleged ouster of jurisdiction of the court, is section 202 of the Act of 1885, which runs thus: [His lordship read the section set out above.] I may as well at once dismiss the consideration of section 202. In my judgment it is quite unnecessary to resort to the arbitration clause contained in the section, even in the case of general damages or return of tolls claimed by the traders individually, for whether such claims are based on the Act of 1885 or on the scheduled agreement, the claimants cannot succeed unless the company are in default, and the company cannot be proved to be in default unless and until their liability or obligation has been fixed, and if that liability or obligation can only be fixed by arbitration, the claim for damages or return of money paid for tolls must fail until the obligation or liability has been so fixed, and the same proposition is true of an action for declaration of obligation or liability. I will now proceed to deal with the question where the effect of sub-section 22 of section 88 is to oust the jurisdiction of the court in the fullest sense of the word—that is to say, in the sense that jurisdiction cannot be given to the court to determine a question, the determination of which has to be relegated by Act of Parliament, even by the consent of the parties to the litigation in court. That a statute may thus bar a plaintiff from maintaining an action in a court of law and compel him to pursue the course laid down by the statute, cannot be doubted: see Crisp v. Bunbury, 8 Bing. 394; and also the provisions in the Building Acts. In that case it is to be observed that although there was a trial at nisi prius, and a verdict for the plaintiff, the objection to the tribunal was allowed to prevail without any plea to the jurisdiction on a mere objection taken at nisi prius and reserved to be disposed of by the court in banc. The same case shows that it is not necessary that the jurisdiction of the court should be barred by express words; it is sufficient if the jurisdiction is barred by necessary implication. A great deal of argument was addressed to us as to when and under what circumstances a statutory arbitration clause will in the full sense of the word oust the jurisdiction of the courts. Byrne, J., on the authority of Caledonian Railway Co. v. Greenock and Wemyss Bay Railway Co., L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. App. 347, 22 W. R. Dig. 13, and the judgments of A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ., in the London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Donellan, [1898] 2 Q. B. 7, 46 W. R. Dig. 147, which were approved by the House of Lords in the Midland Railway Co. v. Loseby & Carnley, 47 W. R. 656, [1899] A. C. 133, held that in the present case, if the matter had stood on the original Act independently of the words "unless otherwise agreed on," the jurisdiction of the courts would have been ousted by an arbitration enactment raising a statutory duty which could not be waived. Thus far I agree with Byrne, J., but the learned judge went on to hold the words in the prefatory clause of section 88, "unless otherwise agreed on," rendered it competent, in case an action was brought, for one of the parties by his conduct to agree to waive the right to insist on arbitration. I cannot agree. I think, as I have already stated, that these words only refer to a modification of the provisions of section 88. As to the ouster of jurisdiction, it was argued by the counsel for the respondents that Byrne, J., had misunderstood the decision of the House of Lords in the Caledonian Railway case, and that the opinion of A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ., in the London and North-Western case had not been affirmed by the House of Lords on the appeal in the London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Billington or the Midland Railway Co. v. Loseby & Carnley. I cannot agree. The suggestion that the judgment of Lord Cairns in the Caledonian case had been misunderstood was largely based on observations by Cotton and Bowen, L.JJ., in the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 37 W. R. 65, 40 Ch. D. 100, by which those Lords Justices expressed doubts whether Lord Cairns meant to decide, or meant to indicate his own opinion to the effect that the jurisdiction of the courts was ousted. With deference to those Lords Justices, I think that careful examination of the Caledonian case, as reported in L. R. 2 Sc. and Div. Apps. 347, in connection with the facts and pleadings as stated in the Court of Session decisions (10 Ct. Sess. Cas., 3rd ser., 892), shows that Lord Cairns did mean to decide and indicate that the jurisdiction of the court was ousted in respect of the particular matter in question. The matter stands thus: the plaintiffs brought their action claiming payment under certain clauses, 8, 9, and 14, of an agreement between the two companies—of one-fourth part of the balance of certain gross receipts after making certain deductions. The defendants pleaded to the whole action article 18 of the agreement, whereby it was provided that "All differences which may arise between the parties hereto respecting the true meaning or effect of this agreement or the mode of carrying the same into operation shall from time to time so often as any such questions or differences shall arise be referred to arbitration in terms of the Railway Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and the provision with regard to the settlement of disputes by arbitration in such Act shall be held to be incorporated with this agreement," and pleaded that the action was excluded by the said article 18. The Lord Ordinary sustained the plea in law and dismissed the action. [His lordship discussed this case, and the arguments in it in the House of Lords.] The case of the London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Billington only decided that the jurisdiction was not ousted, because there had been no difference existing between the parties before action, which is certainly not the fact in the present case. Assuming, then, as in my opinion you must, that the jurisdiction of the court may be ousted by statutory provisions which have no express words to that effect, let us see what are the modes by which jurisdiction may be ousted. Sometimes the statute constitutes arbitration the only tribunal in which disputes between certain parties can be determined, and thus ousts the jurisdiction. Sometimes the jurisdiction is ousted because the statute has plainly said that some matter essential to be proved in a particular action should only be determined by arbitration. The Caledonian Railway case seems to me to be an instance. In either case, if the arbitration provision thus enacted is for the public good, and not for the benefit of individuals, no deficiency in pleading and no waiver by litigants can give the court jurisdiction. In my judgment the intention of the Legislature as expressed in sub-section 22 is that, in regard to anything to be done or not to be done under section 88, the engineer to be appointed by the Board of Trade is intended to be the only tribunal for the determination of what is the true intent and meaning of the section, just as under sub-section 21 the same engineer is to have sole and exclusive jurisdiction to determine details as to sub-sections 13, 15, and 16, so under sub-section 22, that arbitrator has sole and exclusive jurisdiction to determine the obligations of the company under section 14. Section 88, in spite of its preface, cannot be regarded as merely embodying an agreement come to by the promoters of the Bill and the Corporation of Warrington in the course of the promotion. It provides for the protection of those who were parties to no agreement—traders, &c., because the Legislature thought it right that this section of the public should be so protected, and I cannot see that the fact that the preface authorizes the corporation and the company to agree on other provisions, alters the character of the section. It is still a section passed in the public interest and not merely the embodiment of private agreement. The Corporation of Warrington are obviously deemed to be sufficient guardians of public interests to entrust them with such modification of the provisions as receives the approval of the corporation and the company. I will now pass to the scheduled agreement. The agreement is, by section 43 of the Act of 1896, confirmed and made binding on the corporation and the company. The corporation and the company are the only parties to it, and it seems to me to follow that it is impossible for the traders to sue upon the agreement qua agreement, and the rights of the traders seem to me to fall exactly within the words of Lord Watson in Davis v. The Taff Vale Railway Co., 44 W. R. 172, [1895] A. C. 542, where, after pointing out that in cases where the provisions of a local and personal Act directly impose mutual obligations upon persons or companies, such provisions may be fairly considered as having this analogy to contract, and they must as between those parties be construed in precisely the same way as if they had been matter not of enactment, but of private agreement. [His lordship quoted the words of Lord Watson on p. 552 and 553 in that case.] It seems to me, therefore that in this case here, if we are to regard the scheduled contract as a mere contract between the parties to it, the traders cannot sue upon such a contract, and if, on the other hand, we are to regard the Act of 1896, or the Act of 1885, as operating as a direct enactment of the Legislature in favour of the traders, neither the traders nor the company can get rid of such a direct enactment by waiver or otherwise, unless upon a true construction of the Act the enactments appear to have been passed merely for the benefit of such persons and not in the interests of the public.

The outcome of these considerations is that, in my opinion, the preliminary objection ought to be allowed in respect of the whole action.

First, as to the statute, and the effect of sub-section 22 of section 88. It seems to me that alike in respect to the claims of the corporation and the traders collectively and individually the action is based on default by the canal company in the performance of their obligation after dredging the bed and banks of the River Mersey "for ever after to maintain the same dredged, so that, &c.," or if one treats sub-section 14 of section 88, as modified by clause 1 of the scheduled agreement, then for ever to maintain the channel dredged in accordance with the provisions of sub-section 14 as modified by that agreement, and it matters not whether one takes the arbitration clause in sub-section 22 of section 88, or takes the arbitration clause in sub-section 22 as modified by clause 10 of the scheduled agreement—in neither case can it be proved that there is a default in maintenance if the parties differ as to the true intent and meaning of the words of the statute as in force with relation to the obligation to maintain, until that difference has been settled in the manner provided by the statute. Now, that there had been for a long time before the date of this action a difference between the corporation and the canal company as to the true meaning and intent of the provisions regulating the obligation to maintain I cannot doubt, and it follows that the determination of this difference must go to arbitration before any action based on the statutes can be brought. Then as to an action by the corporation based on the agreement, as an agreement, in my opinion, confirmed agreement, having regard to its frame, and in particular to its modification under the statutory powers given by section 88, and to the sub-sections to that section, cannot be relied upon by the corporation as a mere agreement containing provisions which can be waived by the consent of the parties. I think, therefore, that no action can be brought by the corporation based on the agreement qua agreement. The action of the traders collectively claiming declaration of right fails for the same reasons which I have given in regard to the action of the corporation making similar claims. The claim of the individual traders for return of tolls paid fails because it is essential to the maintenance of this claim that default by the canal company should be proved, but this cannot be done until the standard of duty has been determined by the statutory arbitrator, which has not yet been done. I think that the arbitration clause in section 88 of the Act of 1885, and clause 10 of the agreement, prevents the traders in their individual capacity proving any default in fact by the canal company, but even if this were not so I should be inclined to hold that, as regards individual traders, jurisdiction is ousted by reason of section 202 of the Act of 1885. If, however, their action fails, merely because something essential to their cause of action fails to be decided by arbitration, I think the action might be staved and not dismissed.

With regard to the pleading, I agree with the contention that although according to the old rules of pleading it was not necessary to plead the jurisdiction, modern practice has been so to plead ouster of jurisdiction: see Mayor of Folkestone v. Ladd, [1893] 3 Ch. 22. But assuming the pleading of the defendant company is faulty in this respect, I am clearly of opinion that the pleading ought to be treated as amended. No one was placed in any difficulty by the omission to plead, and the case, in my opinion, bears no analogy to those cases in which there is a refusal to stay after a step has been taken by the defendant in actions brought in contravention of an arbitration clause contained in a voluntary agreement. In my judgment this appeal ought to be allowed.

STIRLING, L.J., read his judgment as follows: [His lordship stated the facts and referred to the Act of 1885 and the scheduled agreement of the 9th of April, 1896.] The first question to be considered is whether the traders and others carrying on business at or near Warrington are entitled to enforce such of the provisions of section 88 of the Act of 1885 as are intended for their benefit. Those provisions are found in the form of legislative enactment, and do not arise merely out of a contract which has received statutory confirmation; and they are expressed to be for the protection of such traders and others. I think the decision in Davis v. Taff Vale Railway Co. applies, and that the traders are entitled to enforce the provisions of the section. Next, can they enforce the similar provisions of the agreement confirmed by section 43 of the Act of 1896? These provisions do not take the form of legislative enactment, yet seeing that by the terms of section 88 of the Act of 1896 they are an authorized substitute for legislative enactment, it seems to me that the same right of enforcing them must exist. If, however, I rightly understand the way in which the plaintiffs in the present action shape their case, it may not be absolutely necessary to decide this point, for they base their claim on the provisions of section 88 of the Act of 1885, but do not desire to enforce them to an extent beyond those contained in the agreement of 1896, which are less favourable to them.

I now come to the main question to be decided on the present occasion—namely, whether the corporation and traders or either of them can enforce their claims by action, it being contended on behalf of the defendants that the provisions as to arbitration found in the Act of 1885 are such as to oust the jurisdiction of the courts. In support of this contention reliance is first and principally placed on section 88, sub-section 22, of the Act of 1885. It is not really disputed that this enactment does impose on the company and the corporation an obligation to refer to arbitration any difference arising between them "as to the true intent and meaning of section 88," or as to anything to be done or not to be done thereunder; but there is a question as to nature of the obligation—namely, whether it is such as, in the language of Lord Cairns in the Caledonian Railway case on p. 350, to force the parties to have their disputes settled, not by the ordinary tribunals of the country, but by a reference to arbitration; or whether it is only such as to render it the duty of the court to enforce when either party insists on a reference to arbitration: see the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway v. The South-Eastern Railway Co. This is important, for if the latter be the correct view, then it may be that as a fact Bryne, J., has held the defendants were too late in claiming a reference, whereas if the former be that which is the true meaning, the objection is in fact that the court has no jurisdiction to entertain the action, and it may be properly raised at any time. Now the corporation does not claim damages. The questions between it and the defendant company are (i.) What is the true intent and meaning of sub-section 14 of section 88 of the Act of 1885 as varied by the agreement and statute of 1896? (ii.) Whether the company has or has not duly dredged and maintained the bed and banks of the River Mersey? In my judgment both these are questions which fall to be decided by arbitration in accordance with sub-section 22. This being so, and the obligation as to arbitration being imperative, and imposed by statute, it seems to me that the case falls within the terms used by Lord Cairns in advising the House of Lords in the Caledonian Railway case; and it is to be observed of Lord Chelmsford, Lord Hatherley, and Lord Selborne, that they expressed their unqualified concurrence with Lord Cairns. It is true that in the case just mentioned the circumstances were such that the same conclusion might have been arrived at, even if the true nature of the obligation imposed on the parties to that litigation had been such as was held by the Court of Appeal to exist in the subsequent case of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. It is also true that in that case Cotton and Bowen, L.JJ., expressed doubts as to whether Lord Cairns really meant to decide or express an opinion that the jurisdiction of the courts was ousted; and those doubts have caused me very great difficulty. But the decision in the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway case (by which, of course, I am bound) is not precisely in point, and on the whole it seems to me that the better course is that this court should follow the language of Lord Cairns, assented to by the other noble lords, and that any mistake as to its meaning (if such there be) should be set right by a higher tribunal.

I agree with Vaughan Williams, L.J., in thinking that the obligation to refer is not altered by the words "unless otherwise agreed on" at the beginning of section 88, and I will add nothing on that point.

Assuming, then, that the jurisdiction of the court is ousted in the case of difference as between the corporation and the company, within section 88, sub-section 22, of the Act of 1885, I have to inquire whether this is also true as to the difference between the traders and the corporation. Now it is obvious that sub-section 22 does not in terms extend to such differences, nor can I see that it makes the settlement of differences between the corporation and the company a condition precedent to the bringing of an action by the trader against the company. Many of the provisions of section 88 (e.g., those in sub-section 2) are of the highest importance to traders, but might affect the interests of the corporation very slightly. In the case of differences arising between a trader and the company as to these provisions, the corporation might reasonably be desirous to avoid controversy, and the Act, so far as I can see, provides no means by which the corporation could be compelled to embark on what might prove to be an expensive contest before an arbitrator. Even where the corporation has an interest in the matter in dispute the trader might be differently affected, and serious injustice might be done if he were to be held bound by arbitration proceedings between the corporation and the company to which he could not be directly a party.

It is lastly contended that this case falls within section 202 of the Act of 1885. [His lordship read the section.] The reference is to the provisions in sections 126 to 137 of the Act. [His lordship criticized several other sections of the Act bearing on arbitration.] Section 202 appears to be a section of wide operation, applicable to all matters falling within its terms for which no specific provision has been made elsewhere. It is a positive legislative enactment that all questions arising between the company and any person "touching anything to be done or not to be done" under the provisions of the Act shall be determined by arbitration in the way pointed out. That seems to me to extend to anything to be done or not to be done under section 88.

Now, the main question at issue between the company and the traders is, whether the company have or have not duly dredged and maintained the bed and banks of the River Mersey; and that is a question as to a thing to be done, or not to be done, under section 88. If the question is as between the company and the corporation (as I think) to be settled by arbitration under section 88, sub-section 22, then it seems to me that for the same reasons it ought to be settled as between the company and the traders under section 202. It appears to me that it would be an anomaly if it were held that the difference between the company and the corporation must be settled by arbitration, while those on the same matters between the company and the traders need not. I do not think that the tolls and damages claimed by the trader plaintiffs are moneys to be paid under the provisions of the Act of 1885; but still, in accordance with what was done in the Caledonian Railway case, the action ought to be stayed until the question which falls to be determined by the arbitration has been decided. In my opinion, therefore, the action ought to be wholly stayed or dismissed as between the corporation and the defendant company, and should be stayed until the determination of the main question as between the traders and manufacturers and the defendant company.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., read his judgment as follows: As I have the misfortune to differ from the majority of the court, it is necessary that I should as briefly as possible state my own views. [His lordship stated the nature of the action and the preliminary objection.] The question depends upon the proper construction and effect of a few sections in the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885. The plaintiffs' case is shortly this: [His lordship stated it as set out above.] Section 88 of the Act of 1885 is an elaborate section, obviously inserted in the interests of Warrington. It commences as follows: [His lordship read it.] Then follow twenty-three sub-sections under which various rights are conferred upon the corporation and the traders, and various restrictions and obligations are imposed upon the canal company. [His lordship referred to sub-section 14, and read sub-section 22.] Now it will be observed from the introductory words that although certain rights are given by the section to the traders, power is left to the corporation and the canal company by agreement to modify these provisions, but not, I think, to make entirely new and independent provisions. For this purpose the corporation was apparently treated as representative of the the traders. In 1896 an agreement dated the 9th of April, 1896, was entered into between the corporation and the canal company, which was, I think, intended to operate and take effect under the introductory words in section 88. [His lordship referred to clause 1, and read clause 10 at length.] I may remark in passing that this arbitration clause differs from the arbitration clause in section 88 of the Act of 1885, the appointment of the arbitrator resting with the President of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and not with the Board of Trade. [His lordship read section 43 of the Act of 1896.] Now it is necessary to consider the case of the corporation separately from the case of the traders. I cannot regard section 88, in its original form or as modified by the Act of 1896, as a mere agreement between the corporation and the canal company. I think it was an enactment dealing with, and conferring rights upon, not the whole public, but a particular class of public, namely—manufacturers, traders, and others at or near Warrington; and this being so, it seems to me that section 88 must be taken to have conferred rights to be dealt with and enforced only in the manner prescribed by sub-section 22; or, in other words, I think that sub-section excludes the jurisdiction of the court in any case of difference between the corporation and the canal company falling within the language of the sub-section: see the Caledonian Railway case. The authorities which have decided that under the Building Societies Acts and the Friendly Societies Acts the jurisdiction of the courts is ousted may be referred to as illustrating the general principles: see especially Crisp v. Bunbury 8 Bing. 394, and Municipal Building Society v. Kent, 32 W. R. 681, 9 App. Cas. 260. In my opinion the position is not changed by reason of the Act of 1896. The scheduled agreement confirmed by the Act must either be regarded as something to be read into and to form part of section 88, or as something more than a mere agreement between the parties, and as in substance a public enactment affecting not merely the parties, but traders and others. I agree, therefore, with my lord and Stirling, L.J., that the objection, so far as the corporation is concerned, is valid. With reference to the traders different considerations apply. Neither of the two arbitration clauses referred to in terms affects the traders, each relating only to differences between the corporation and the company. It is quite true that in a certain sense the corporation might be said to represent the traders for the purpose of obtaining from the arbitrator a declaration, yet it is difficult to see how either of those arbitration clauses can be applied to the case of individual traders, each of whom alleges that he has sustained damage by reason of the breach by the canal company of its statutory obligations. No traders could be a party to such an arbitration or require such an arbitration to be entered upon. The introductory words of section 88 suffice to show that it was intended to confer certain rights upon the traders for whose benefit the section was enacted, and even apart from that there is sufficient in the section itself to entitle the traders to maintain an action for damages unless there is some other provision in the Act expressly excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court: see Davis v. Taff Vale Railway Co. It seems to me wrong to postpone the adjudication upon the claims of the traders until after an award in a reference to which they will not be parties. I agree with Stirling, L.J., on this point. It is suggested, however, that section 202 of the Act of 1885 has the effect of ousting or postponing the jurisdiction of the court. [His lordship read the section.] I may remark in passing that this arbitration clause differs from both the arbitration clauses I have already set out. No importance was attached to this section in the argument in the court below, but it is nevertheless open to the appellants to contend that the jurisdiction of the court is excluded by it. I am not able to attribute such force to the section. Even if, which may be doubted, it has any application to a claim to damages of the nature I have indicated, I think it is at the most only a clause enabling either party to apply to the court to stay the proceedings and to refer to arbitration, and is not a clause excluding the jurisdiction of the court: see the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co. I cannot conclude that the jurisdiction of the court is ousted for all time in every case of dispute between the canal company and members of the public with reference to the statutory obligations imposed on the canal company towards those members of the public. These obligations are both numerous and varied. They extend over nearly 100 sections. I find in some sections an express reference to section 202: see, for example, section 72, sub-section 7, and section 85, sub-sections 3, 8, and 10. It may be that section 202 only prescribes a mode of arbitration for those cases in which in the earlier part of the Act arbitration is prescribed but no particular mode of arbitration is specified. But, however that may be, I do not find myself able to agree with the view of the majority of the court, that it is not competent to us at the present moment to consider the case presented by the traders. The result, in my opinion, is that the objection prevails as to the corporation, but not as to the traders, and the strict course would be to strike out the corporation as co-plaintiffs, and to leave the other co-plaintiffs to continue the action. But although no relief could be given to the corporation in this action, the misjoinder is not very material, for the questions arising for decision as between the traders and the canal company involve or include the questions sought to be raised as between the corporation and the canal company, and under these circumstances, in my view, we ought now to deal with the merits of the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Grundy, Kershaw, Samson, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondents, Burton, Yeates, & Hart, for Alexander Wilson & Cowie, Liverpool.

From K. B. Div.
(Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) — May 6.

STEPHENS v. DUDBRIDGE IRONWORKS CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant — Compensation for injuries by accident—Apprentice—Infant—Election by infant to claim under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—Agreement not for the benefit of infant—Subsequent action to recover damages at common law—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1. sub-section 2 (b); s. 7, sub-section 2.

An apprentice who was an infant, met with an accident in the course of his employment, and he agreed with his employers to accept a weekly payment amounting to half his wages in compensation, and signed a receipt.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

which stated that he elected to accept this sum under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims for compensation. Subsequently he brought an action against his employers at common law for damages in respect of the same injuries, based on their negligence in not having fenced the machine plane.

Held, that the Act by including an apprentice in the general word "workman" did not alter the law applicable to contracts made by infants, and that, it not being for the infant's benefit to accept compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, his election to accept the same did not bind him, and his claim under the Act was therefore no bar to his common law right to sue.

Decision of Bruce, J. (19 Times L. R. 665), affirmed.

Appeal by the defendant company from a considered judgment of Bruce, J., who tried the action by consent of the parties without a jury.

The action was brought by the plaintiff, a lad of seventeen years of age (suing by one Smith, his guardian and next friend), to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the defendants' negligence. The defence so far as is here material consisted in a plea that the plaintiff had elected to receive compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that, having received payment under that Act for a certain number of weeks, was debarred from any other remedy.

The facts were these: The plaintiff, who was apprenticed to the defendants, met with an injury by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment at an unfenced planing machine and lost three fingers of his left hand. At the time of the accident he was receiving 5s. a week from the defendants as wages. Upon an application to the defendants for a lump sum of money as compensation for the injury, the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff 2s. 6d. a week—i.e., half the plaintiff's average weekly earnings, and the plaintiff agreed to accept this payment "in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims to compensation accrued or to accrue in respect of all injuries or injurious results" arising from the accident. The plaintiff on the following day went to the office and signed a receipt in the following terms: "Received of the Dudbridge Ironworks Co. (Limited), by payment of the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation (Limited), the 4th day of October, 1902, the sum of 12s. 6d., being the first five of the successive weekly payments which I elected to accept under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims of compensation accrued or to accrue in respect of all injuries or injurious results, direct or indirect, arising or to arise from an accident sustained by me or about the 15th day of August last whilst in the employment of the above." Under this agreement the plaintiff received a total sum of 37s., and the defendants then took him back to work at the same wages as before or higher wages.

The plaintiff then commenced the action by his next friend in the High Court claiming damages in respect of the injury which he had received and alleging negligence by the defendants in not having fenced the planing machine.

At the trial the defendants admitted negligence on their part, and the damages were assessed by agreement at £75; but they contended that the defendant had exercised his option in accepting the weekly payments as compensation under the Act of 1897, and was so debarred by s. 1, sub-section 2 (b) from claiming independently of that Act.

Bruce, J., on further consideration, held that the plaintiff, being an infant, was incapable of exercising an opinion whether to claim under the Act of 1897 or to proceed in an action for negligence, and he held that the agreement by the plaintiff to accept compensation under the Act in satisfaction of all his rights against the defendants in respect of his injury was not for his benefit; and he accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff for the agreed amount of damages, less the sums which the plaintiff had received from the defendants by way of weekly payments under the Act.

The defendants appealed.

Ruegg, K.C. (J. Corner and A. S. Poyser with him), for the defendants.—The notice of claim given here was sufficient to start proceedings by an injured workman under the Act of 1897, and the agreement by the employers to pay 2s. 6d. a week could have been recorded by the registrar of the county court under Schedule II. (8): Powell v. Main Colliery Co., 49 W. R. 49, [1900] A. C. 366. Therefore the acceptance of those terms by a workman would be an exercise of an option to proceed under the Act, and he could maintain no other remedy. By the definition of workman in section 7, sub-section 2, apprentice can be read into section 1, sub-section 2 (b), for workman, and therefore the plaintiff is debarred from claiming damages at common law. The intention of the Legislature was to provide an insurance scheme for workmen engaged in any employment to which this Act applied that should do away with the necessity of bringing an action if the parties would agree on the terms set out in the Act, and this settlement without legal proceedings would be rendered useless if this appeal is dismissed. The infant was competent to enter into this contract, and he must stand by it: Clements v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 42 W. R. 338, [1894] 2 Q. B. 482.

A. T. Lawrence, K.C., and Morton Brown, for the plaintiff, were not heard.

COLLINS, M.R., after stating the facts, said: The defendants admitted negligence, and the only question we are called upon to decide is whether by reason of the proceedings which had taken place before the commencement of the action the plaintiff was estopped or prevented from putting in suit his common law right to damages. Shortly after the accident a claim was made on the masters by the lad's uncle and guardian. The claim purported to be a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897, but the guardian asked for something—namely, a lump sum down—which it was not competent for him to get under the provisions of that Act. The masters replied that they were willing to make compensation in accordance with the Act—namely, to pay a weekly sum amounting to half the weekly wages which the lad had been earning before the accident. The offer was accepted, and the lad then signed a receipt in the fullest terms electing to accept the weekly payments in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims for compensation in respect of injuries arising from the injury, and he continued to receive the weekly payments until he was restored to health and was able to work again. He then apparently consulted a solicitor. At any rate this action was brought in the High Court, and by the defence the question of law was raised whether, by reason of the events which happened between the accident and the bringing of the action the lad was debarred from taking these proceedings at common law. Now, by sub-section 2 (b) of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, when injury is caused by the negligence of the employer or of some person for whose act or default he is responsible, nothing in this Act shall affect any civil liability of the employer, "but in that case the workman may, at his option.

either claim compensation under this Act or take the same proceedings as were open to him before the commencement of this Act; but the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation for injury to a workman by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to any proceedings independently of this Act except in case of such personal negligence or wilful act as aforesaid." It was contended that the lad here was a workman within the meaning of the Act, and that under this sub-section he had an option as to which remedy he would pursue, and that he had exercised that option. In order to fortify that contention reference was made to the definition of workman given in section 7 of the Act which defines the word "workman" as including "every person who is engaged in an employment to which this Act applies, whether by way of manual labour or otherwise, and whether his agreement is one of service or apprenticeship or otherwise, and is expressed or implied, is oral or in writing." It was argued that there was a statutory permission to a boy under age to make the option mentioned in the sub-section. But had the statute by giving that option altered or got rid of the ordinary law of the country? The ordinary law of the country is that an infant is not bound by a contract made by him which is not for his benefit. In this case Bruce, J., came to the conclusion that the contract which the defendants said ousted the jurisdiction of the court was not for the benefit of the infant, and he decided that he ought not to withhold from him the benefit of his common law right to damages. In my opinion the decision of Bruce, J., was right, and this appeal consequently fails.

ROMER and MATHEW, L.JJ., gave judgment to the same effect.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, C. T. Courtney Lewis, for W. Langley Smith, Gloucester.

Solicitors for the defendants, Watson, Sons, & Room, for Wansborough & Co., Bristol.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) March 4.

BOARD OF TRADE v. SAILING SHIP "GLENPARK" (LIMITED). (a.)

Ship — Seaman — Distressed seaman — Provisions for relief—Expenses of maintenance and passage home— "Sufficient evidence"—Wages paid abroad in excess of such expenses—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 190, 191, 193—Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 44), s. 4.

Held, that a seaman might nevertheless be a "distressed seaman" abroad within the meaning of section 191 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, although the wages due and paid to him abroad exceeded the amount of the expenses incurred on his behalf for maintenance and passage home.

Held, further, that although the mere fact that a seaman has been shipwrecked abroad is not conclusive evidence of distress, yet that in the present case there being evidence on which the learned judge could find (as he did) that the seamen were distressed, it was unnecessary to decide whether the "sufficient evidence" mentioned in section 193 meant "conclusive evidence."

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal by the defendant company from a judgment of Bigham, J., reported 51 W. R. 554, [1903] 2 K. B. 324, given in a commercial cause, tried upon an agreed statement of facts which was substantially as follows:

The action was brought as a test action by the Board of Trade against the defendants, the owners of the sailing ship Glenpark, of Liverpool, to have decided the meaning of the words "distressed seamen" in section 191 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; and they sought to recover from the defendants £99, the balance of expenses incurred in relieving and sending home, as distressed seamen, certain members of the crew of the Glenpark, which in the course of a round voyage from Cardiff was wrecked off the coast of South Australia in February, 1901. The crew were saved, and were maintained by the authorities, first at Port Victoria and afterwards at Port Adelaide. At the latter place the representatives of the owners of the vessel paid the crew the wages due to them. The majority of the men were able to obtain fresh employment, but those who did not do so were sent home.

The owners had paid part of the expenses incurred by the authorities, but they disputed liability for the balance now claimed, on the ground that as to certain members of the crew to which the balance now claimed referred, they, after receiving their wages, had themselves sufficient money to take them home, and therefore were not "distressed seamen" abroad within the meaning of Merchant Shipping Act and the Board of Trade Regulations, Nos. 68, 90, and 95.

At the trial, Bigham, J., held that the eleven men in question were not the less "distressed seamen," there being nothing in the provisions of the statute which excluded from the category of distressed seamen those who being shipwrecked abroad happened, at the time of the disaster, to be entitled to arrears of wages, and he accordingly gave judgment for the Board of Trade.

The shipowners appealed.

Danckwerts, K.C., and Maurice Hill, for the defendants.—The part of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, containing the sections 190 to 194 is headed "Distressed Seamen." By section 190 the Board of Trade is empowered to make regulations for the relief, maintenance, and sending home of seamen and apprentices found in distress abroad, and no seaman shall have a right to such relief except his case comes within the conditions provided by those regulations. When those conditions are looked at, the case of the seamen in question here does not come within those regulations, because, shortly, by the payment of wages they ceased to be in a condition of "distress." In the case of these men the payment of wages does gave them the means to get home, which the Act says is a right they can claim only from the shipowners if they are shipwrecked abroad and have not the wherewithal to pay their passage back or keep themselves on the journey. No. 86 of the Board of Trade Regulations, which extended the relief to seafaring persons generally, being British subjects engaged in merchant vessels, is to the same effect, and by regulation 90 no relief is to be afforded to shipwrecked seamen who refuse to work their passage home or refuse to accept reasonable employment. So, too, by regulation 95, shipwrecked seamen who stand by a wreck to salvage property are not to be considered as distressed seamen during the time they are so earning money. [They also referred to section 191, sub-sections (1) and (4), of the Act of 1894.] By section 193 (i) as amended by section 4 of the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898, such expenses are to be a debt due to the Crown from the owner of the ship, and by sub-section (2) may be recovered by the Board of Trade on behalf of the Crown by ordinary process of law. Secondly, the production by the plaintiffs of the account of expenses, together with the proof of payment thereof, is not conclusive evidence of the plaintiffs' right to recover. It was only intended to save unnecessary expense as affording evidence of the total sum actually paid, and does not prevent the owners from objecting to items which they dispute. Section 193, sub-section (3) of the Act of 1898 enacts "that in any proceeding for such recovery the production of the accounts (if any) of the expenses furnished in accordance with this Act or the Distressed Seamen Regulations, and proof of payment of the expenses by or on behalf of the Board of Trade, shall be sufficient evidence that the expenses were incurred or repaid under the Act by or on behalf of the Crown." But all that section does is to merely cast upon the defendants the onus of proving that the expenses were not properly incurred. That still leaves the matter open to proof, for the Act uses the words "conclusive" where a contrary intention is intended: see, for example, section 310, sub-section (2). They referred to Nothard v. Pepper, 17 C. B. N. S. 39 at p. 50; Barraclough v. Greenhough, 15 W. R. 21; L. R. 2 Q. B. 612; and Reg. v. Fordham Justices, 22 W. R. 85; L. R. 8 Q. B. 501.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G. (Sir Edward Carson, S.G., and Sutton, with him), for the plaintiffs.—The evidence here supports the finding of Bigham, J., that the men while at a foreign port were "distressed seamen," and the mere fact that the wages paid to these men happened to exceed the actual cost incurred in obtaining their passage and food home does not in law refute the inference of fact drawn by the learned judge. It was never intended that a shipwrecked seaman who had signed on for a round voyage should be compelled to spend his wages paid him in getting home from a foreign port and thus land at home perhaps with nothing in his pocket on which he could support himself until he could find employment, and helpless to provide for those who were dependent on him for support. The time to look at is the time of the shipwreck. Then as to the defendants' contention that the production of accounts and proof of payment of expenses is not conclusive evidence. Their contention on that point that "sufficient evidence" in section 193 (3) does not mean conclusive evidence, we submit is wrong, but at any rate the decision on that question here is immaterial, because there was ample evidence, and that unrebutted, upon which the learned judge could find, as he did find, that at the time of the shipwreck these men were, in fact, distressed seamen.

Maurice Hill replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Bigham, J., and the question that is raised for our decision is, shortly, whether certain seamen were "distressed seamen" within section 191 of of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. His lordship then referred to the facts, and continuing said: In these circumstances were the men, from and after the time when their wages were paid—and it was not disputed that up to that time they were distressed seamen—distressed seamen within the meaning of the statute, so as to require the governor or other specified officer to provide for their maintenance and passage home, in accordance with the provisions of section 191 (i) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894? It was contended that though these seamen at the time of the shipwreck came within the description of "distressed seamen," as used in that section, yet that they were not in distress at Port Adelaide, because each of them received wages which exceeded the amount of expenses incurred in his case. In my opinion, the question whether they were or were not distressed seamen, notwithstanding they had been paid arrears of wages due, is a question of fact. It is quite possible that a seaman who has lost all except what he stood up in might be said to be a distressed seaman, although he had wages due to him (which were paid) sufficient to bring him at his own expense back to the port from which he sailed. For aught we know the seaman might have a family to support in England, and unable on many grounds to meet the expense. It is all a question of fact, and therefore we are not permitted to hold that mere evidence that he was shipwrecked abroad is conclusive evidence of distress. A shipwrecked seaman might be a nobleman or a millionaire, with plenty of money in his pocket, and in such a case he could not be called a "distressed seaman" who was entitled to maintenance and a passage home at the public expense. I have already stated what the evidence was upon this point, and by section 193 (3) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the account of the expenses duly furnished, and proof of payment thereof by or on behalf of the Board of Trade, shall be sufficient evidence that the expenses were incurred or repaid by or on behalf of the Crown. It was said that under that section the account furnished by the person charged with the duty of meeting the expenses incurred in sending the men home was sufficient evidence that the expenses were incurred or repaid by or on behalf of the Crown. I need not now decide the point whether the word "sufficient" evidence used in section 193 of the Act means "conclusive" evidence, but, without deciding that, my opinion is that in favour of the view that the accounts furnished would be sufficient evidence unless that evidence, which is not the case here, was contradicted. I do not desire to decide that point, however, because in my opinion there is plenty of evidence to justify the finding of the judge below that these seamen were distressed seamen.

Therefore, for the reasons I have given, there is no ground shown for our interfering with the learned judge's decision, and indeed upon the evidence I myself should certainly have arrived at the same conclusion. Upon the second point—namely, whether the words sufficient evidence are to be deemed conclusive evidence—I desire to reserve my opinion, as I think that point does not really arise in the present case.

ROMER, L.J.—I concur. In my view the question whether a shipwrecked seaman was or was not a "distressed seaman" at a particular port is a question for fact in each case. I can quite understand that it might be said of a seaman who, when wrecked at a foreign port, had £500 in his pocket, that that seaman was not distressed within the meaning of the statute. In this case, however, the question was one of fact—whether or not these particular seamen were distressed. I think the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the learned judge that they were distressed seamen. There is in this case in my opinion what the Act calls sufficient evidence to support that finding. And, more, no evidence to the contrary was given.

I desire to express no opinion upon the question whether "sufficient evidence" means "conclusive evidence" under the Act in reference to the production of the accounts and proof of payment.

MATHEW, L.J.—I agree. As I understand the case it is not disputed that if the wages received by a shipwrecked seaman at a foreign port are short of the expenses that would be incurred for his maintenance and passage home he would be a distressed seaman within the meaning of the Act. The question in this case must be, in my opinion, one of fact. A seaman does not necessarily cease to be a distressed seaman because he receives money which would be sufficient to take him home. He may have other obligations to meet. The receipt of wages in this case cannot be treated as conclusive.

Without giving any opinion upon the question whether the production of accounts and proof of payment is conclusive evidence that the expenses have been incurred under the Act, there was in this case sufficient evidence to that effect, and that evidence was unanswered.

I agree, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed, and that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, The Solicitor of the Board of Trade.

Solicitors for the defendants, Rowcliffes, Rowles, & Co., for Hill, Dickinson, & Co., Liverpool.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } June 23.
Farwell, J. }

In re PIMM (DECEASED).
SHARPE v. HODGSON. (a.)

Will—Construction—Specific devise of freeholds—Direction to pay "my duties"—Estate and settlement estate duties—Freeholds exonerated—Finance Acts, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 5 (1), 6 (2), 8 (3) (4), 9 (1) (4), and 14 (1); and 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19—Direction to pay incumbrances—Mortgage on freeholds—Further security—Apportionment—Locke-King's Acts (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69).

A testator devised freeholds in trust for his daughter and her children, and gave the residue of his estate, both real and personal, in trust for sale and conversion, the clear residue to be divided, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and duties, and any incumbrances charged on his said estate.

Held, a direction to pay all duties arising by reason of the dispositions of the will, and therefore to pay estate and settlement estate duties on the freeholds.

The same freeholds were subject to a mortgage, for which a life policy (which formed part of the residue) had been deposited as further security.

Held, that the mortgage debt must be apportioned according to the respective values of the properties charged, and that the proportion on the policy moneys should alone be paid out of residue.

In re Athill, 29 W. R. 309, 16 Ch. D. 211, followed.

Adjourned summons for determination of questions on the construction of a will.

James Norris Pimm, by his will dated the 28th of May, 1900, devised to his trustees his freehold houses, Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Fulwood's-rents, Holborn, upon trust to pay the net rents and profits to his daughter Martha (the defendant Mrs. Hodgson) for life, and afterwards upon trust for her children, with a power to her to appoint a life interest to her husband; and after disposing of his business and bequeathing certain pecuniary and other legacies, he devised and bequeathed "all the rest and residue of my personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and all my real estate of every tenure and wheresoever situate, not hereby otherwise disposed of, including . . . my freehold property, The Mansion, Staines, my long and short leasehold properties . . . unto and to the use of my said trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, respectively," upon trust for sale and conversion with power to postpone sale, "And after payment, out of the net proceeds of sale, calling in, and conversion, of my debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, and duties, and the incumbrances which may be charged on my said estate or any part thereof, and the said incumbrances on No. 2, St. James's-place, upon trust to hold the clear residue in trust for and to divide the same amongst my wife, Martha Pimm, and my five sons" (naming them).

Except as above-mentioned, there was no reference in the will to No. 2, St. James's-place, which, it was not disputed, formed part of the residue. The will as originally framed contained a specific devise of that house to the testator's wife, but he afterwards altered his intention, and the direction to pay incumbrances on that property was inadvertently left standing when the will was altered.

One of the three houses in Fulwood's-rents, No. 6, was subject to a mortgage for £1,500. This sum was secured by two deeds, one conveying the freeholds subject to a proviso for redemption, and the other purporting to assign a life policy. This second deed was expressed to be supplemental to the first, and was executed later but on the same day. It recited that it had been agreed that such further security should be given as was thereby made. It contained no covenant to pay, but in the proviso for redemption there was a reference to the covenant in that behalf in the principal indenture. It was stamped as a collateral security while the principal indenture bore the full stamp for a mortgage for £1,500. And there was a schedule which purported to contain particulars of the policy, but which had not been filled up. A policy on the testator's life for £1,250 with the Gresham Life Assurance Society was, however, deposited with the mortgagee after the deeds were executed.

James Norris Pimm died in 1903, and the present summons was taken out by his widow, his son J. N. Pimm the younger, and Samuel Sharpe, three of the executors and trustees—the fourth, another son, having renounced probate.

The questions for decision were: (1) Whether the estate duty and settlement estate duty on the freehold houses should be charged thereon or paid out of residue; (2) whether the mortgage debt on the freehold No. 6, Fulwood's-rents, and further secured on the policy of insurance should be discharged (a) entirely out of the said freehold or (b) out of the policy moneys so far as they would extend, or (c) apportioned rateably between the two.

The summons was first heard on the 29th of April, 1904, when it was ordered to stand over for further evidence, and the judge directed that the widow and J. N. Pimm the younger, both of whom were beneficiaries under the residuary bequest, should be made defendants in addition to Mrs. Hodgson, leaving Sharpe as the only plaintiff.

P. S. Stokes, for Sharpe, took no part in the argument, which was between the defendants Mrs. Pimm and her son and the defendant Mrs. Hodgson.

H. Greenwood, for the latter.—The short point on the Act is that apart from any direction the mortgage debt would be apportioned between the freehold and the policy moneys, each fund bearing its share: Trestrail v. Mason, 26 W. R. 260, 7 Ch. D. 655. The Act may be excluded by a very slight expression of a contrary intention, though by virtue of the Amending Act a mere direction to pay debts is not enough. The court was against me at the last hearing when I argued that by "my said estate" the testator meant his whole estate. I must therefore accept it that he meant his residuary estate. But he adds "or any part thereof," and this was a debt charged on part of his residuary estate—namely, the policy moneys. Therefore there is a direction to pay it out of residue unless some words are read in indicating that only a proportionate part is to be so paid. A contrary intention is here shown more clearly than by the words which were held sufficient by Chitty, J., in In re Trevelyan, Perceval v. Trevelyan, 26 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 43. All that is necessary is a description of the debt; the mode of description is not important. As to the duties, there is nothing to cut down the meaning of the word "duties." In In re Leveridge, Spain v. Lejoindre, 50 W. R. 205, [1901] 2 Ch. 830, Joyce, J., held that a direction to pay "the estate duty" included the settlement estate duty; and the word here used is wide enough to include all duties.

(a.) Reported by R. HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Upjohn, K.C., and Curtis Price, for Mrs. Pimm and J. N. Pimm, the son, cited In re Athill, Athill v. Athill, 29 W. R. 309, 16 Ch. D. 211, In re King, 52 W. R. 230, [1904] 1 Ch. 363, and referred to the Finance Act, 1894, ss. 5 (1), 6 (2), 8 (3) (4), 9 (1) (4), and 14 (1), and the Finance Act, 1896, s. 19.

[THE COURT referred to In re Lewis, Lewis v. Smith, 48 W. R. 426, [1900] 2 Ch. 176; In re Maryon-Wilson, Wilson v. Maryon-Wilson, 48 W. R. 338, [1900] 1 Ch. 565.]

FARWELL, J., after reading extracts from the will as above quoted, said: The first point is this: The testator has specifically devised certain freeholds which he has settled so that settlement estate duty as well as estate duty becomes payable. It is contended on behalf of Mrs. Hodgson that both are payable out of the residuary estate. The question is what duties are included in the testator's direction to pay "my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and duties," out of the proceeds of sale and conversion? The expression "my duties" is certainly a wide phrase, and I can see no ground for restricting its generality. I think it is a somewhat cumbersome mode of expressing what he had in his mind, and I think what he meant to say is "all duties to which my estate is liable by reason of any of the dispositions I have made in my will." I can see no other sensible construction of this direction in the residuary clause of the will. It is true that the duties are payable to the revenue, but they arise under the provisions of the testator's will and in this sense are the testator's duties. This being in my opinion the correct interpretation of the testator's language I can see no ground for restricting the generality of the expression "my duties," and I think the decision of Joyce, J., in In re Leveridge has some bearing on the present case. In re King, which depends on section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896, has no application here; it merely decides that a direction to pay "testamentary expenses" is not an express direction to pay settlement estate duty so as to throw the burden of that duty on residue in exoneration of specifically bequeathed personalty. The result is that all the duties in respect of this specifically devised property are payable out of the general residuary estate.

Another point arises in this way. The testator had created a charge on one of these houses and that charge also affects a policy of insurance which is part of the residuary estate. The policy was not in my opinion a collateral security in the sense of being secondary, but was mortgaged as part of the same transaction. The direction as to incumbrances is, in effect, to pay those affecting "my said estate," that is to say, the testator's residuary estate, and it implies knowledge on his part that the specifically devised estate was not entitled to be exonerated. Where he intends that such estate should be exonerated, as in the case of No. 2, St. James's-place, he takes care to mention it. My view is that when he refers to incumbrance he does not mean the amount which would be chargeable as between debtor and creditor, but the amount for which the policy would be liable in a due course of administration. The case comes within the general principle laid down by Cotton, L.J., in In re Athill, and there being nothing to show a contrary intention, the amount of the debt must be apportioned between the freeholds and the policy-moneys in proportion to their amount, the proportion falling on the latter being alone borne by the residue.

Solicitors, Yarde & Co.; Albert Sargeant.

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } April 19, 20.

In re SOUTH AFRICAN SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—"Reconstruction"—"Amalgamation"—Bonus to preference shareholders—Bonus to debenture-holders—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161.

Neither the word "reconstruction" nor the word "amalgamation" with reference to limited companies bear any definite legal meaning. These words are commercial expressions having no exact meaning.

The reconstruction of a limited company involves the desire to preserve the undertaking of the company otherwise than by selling it; that in some altered form the undertaking will be continued so that the persons carrying it on shall substantially continue to carry it on, and that substantially the same business shall be continued, although all the assets of the company may not pass to the new or resuscitated company, and all the shareholders of the old company may not become the shareholders of the new company. It does not necessarily involve that the new or reconstituted company should take over the liabilities of the old company. It is not vital, either, that the whole assets or that the liabilities should be taken over.

Amalgamation of two companies involves the blending of the two undertakings instead of the continuance of either one. It is not necessary that the whole of the two undertakings should become blended or that all the corporators should be parties to the transaction so long as that is what substantially takes place. It may take place either by a transference of undertakings A. and B. to a new corporation C., or by the continuance of undertakings A. and B. by B. upon the terms that the shareholders of A. shall become shareholders of B. It is not necessary that there should be a new company. There may be a continuance of one of the two companies upon the terms that the undertakings of the corporators of both companies shall be substantially merged in one.

S. company, by its memorandum of association, declared that its preference shareholders should, in the event of a winding up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, have a bonus of 15 per cent. It issued debentures upon the terms that in the event of a winding up for the same purpose the debentures should be redeemed at a percentage over the par value. The memorandum of association of A. company and the terms of its debentures contained similar provisions. S. company sold its business and most of its assets to A. company for shares in A. company. A. company subsequently sold the business and assets it had bought of S. company to I. company for a sum equivalent to its share capital and debenture issue and a further sum. Subsequently S. company sold to a new company C. S. T. its shares in A. company and its remaining assets. S. company and A. then went into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of carrying out these agreements and thus enjoying their assets, and not for the purpose of realizing and dividing their assets.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the companies were being wound up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, and that consequently the events upon which the bonuses to the preference shareholders and the debenture-holders became payable had occurred.

This was a summons in the winding up of the above company which came on for hearing with another summons in the winding up of another company, and with a debenture-holder's action against each of the companies.

These matters raised a question as to the rights of the preference shareholders in the companies and of the debenture-holders; the same questions in the case of each company.

These questions were whether the preference shareholders were entitled to a bonus of 15 per cent. upon their shares, and whether the debenture-holders were entitled to a bonus, in the case of one company of 7½ per cent., and in the case of the other company of 5 per cent.

These matters came on originally before Byrne, J., when a further question, raised by one of the summons as to the rights of the preference shareholders to dividends for the period between the last payment of dividend and the commencement of the winding up was raised.

His lordship decided this question in the negative, but reserved judgment upon the other questions.

Byrne, J., having died before delivering the reserved judgment, the matter came on for hearing upon these latter questions before his lordship Buckley, J., and the case is reported only upon the principal question as heard and decided by Buckley, J.

The following statement of the facts is in its essential features taken from the judgment of the learned judge: The South African Supply and Cold Storage (Limited), called at the trial the "Supply Co.," was incorporated in 1899 with a capital of £300,000, subsequently increased to £309,000, in ordinary shares of £1 each, and £150,000 in preference shares of the same amount. Its memorandum of association provided for its carrying on a business in the supply of meat and cold storage, and subsidiary objects, including a power to amalgamate with any other company having objects altogether or in part similar to those of the company itself.

Clause 5 of the memorandum of association provided that the preference shares should confer upon the holders thereof "the right, in the event of a winding up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, to a bonus of 15 per cent. on their par value."

Article 159 of the articles of association provided for the division of assets in the winding up in specie with the sanction of an extraordinary resolution, and that "if thought fit"—which his lordship said meant if the resolution so provided—such division might be made otherwise than in accordance with the legal rights of the members of the company, except where defined by the memorandum of association.

The South African and Australasian Supply and Cold Storage Co. (Limited), called at the trial the "Australasian Co.," was incorporated on the 25th of February, 1902, with a capital of £1,000 000 in ordinary shares of £1 each, and £150,000 in preference shares of £1 each, and the memorandum of association contained a similar provision as to the rights of its preference shareholders to that of the Supply Co., there being a proviso in clause 5 as follows: "Provided, nevertheless, that in case of a winding up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation there shall be paid to the holders of the said shares in addition to the amount of the capital paid up thereon a bonus of 15 per cent. on their par value."

And article 160 of the articles of association contained exactly the same proviso with regard to the division of the assets in specie in a winding up as that contained in article 159 of the Supply Co.

The Supply Co. created debentures to the amount of £100,000, which were to become enforceable (among other events) if an effective resolution for the winding up of the company should be passed.

Condition 1 of the debenture provided that "any of the stock not previously redeemed will be redeemed when and as soon as the security hereby constituted becomes enforceable, that is to say, at the rate of £107 10s. per every £100 of the stock in the event of the said security becoming enforceable by reason of a voluntary winding up of the company for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, but otherwise at the rate of £100 for every £100 of the stock.

The Australasian Co. created debentures to the amount of £500 000, with a condition as to a bonus to the holders in the event of the winding up of the company for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation precisely similar to that of the debentures issued by the Supply Co., except that the bonus was to be £5 instead of £7 10s. for every £100.

On the 19th of February, 1902, shortly before the incorporation of the Australasian Co., there was incorporated the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Co. (Limited), called at the trial the Imperial Co., with a capital of £650,000, in ordinary shares, and there was a prospect of competition between the companies.

In that state of things, on the 27th of February, 1902, the Australasian Co. entered into an agreement with the Supply Co. for the purchase of—shortly stated—the business and business premises of the Supply Co. and a portion of their assets amounting to about £1,665,000, consisting of investments, cash, and things other than its business, in consideration of £1,000,000, as to £333,333 in ordinary shares, £150,000 in preference shares, £116,650 in debentures, and £400,017 in cash, payable by the Australasian Co.

By this purchase the Australasian Co. acquired the business, stock-in-trade, and business premises, but they did not acquire a large amount of the outstanding assets.

This his lordship called "the first sale" by the Supply Co.

On the 26th of February, 1903, the Supply Co. entered into a second sale which will be later described.

On the 12th of May, 1902, another company, called the Cold Storage Trust (Limited), was incorporated with a capital of simply £618,000 in ordinary shares, this figure being exactly twice the amount of the ordinary shares of the Supply Co. Subsequently, on the 17th of February, 1903, the Cold Storage Trust (Limited), increased its capital by creating 150,000 preference shares of £1 each, so that at that date this company had an ordinary capital of double the amount of that of the Supply Co. and a preference capital share for share the same. No explanation was given why it was originally created without the preference capital; his lordship said it was obviously a slip.

On the 11th of August, 1902, certain heads of agreement which were more formally entered into by an agreement of the 28th of May, 1903, the effect of which was that the Australasian Co. sold to the rival company, the Imperial Co., the business, stock-in-trade, and cash working capital it had bought in February, 1902, of the Supply Co., the purchase price being £1,650,000. That was in fact equivalent to £1,000,000, the capital of the Australasian Co., £500,000 the debenture issue, and a sum of £150,000. In the heads of agreement of August, 1902, this latter sum was in the schedule set apart for payment to certain firms interested in the Imperial Co. at that date, and was to represent the goodwill of the company.

Subsequent to this agreement a second sale by the Supply Co. took place. It had, under the agreement of February, 1902, acquired this large number of shares in the Australasian Co. which had sold its business to the Imperial Co. in consideration of shares in that company, so that the Supply Co. had thus become interested in the Imperial Co. The Supply Co. in that state of things, by an agreement of the 26th of February, 1903, sold to the Cold Storage Trust (Limited), all its assets, that is to say, its shares in the Australasian Co. and its remaining assets (£1,665,000 of which had been sold in February, 1902, to the Australasian Co.), with the exception of a sum of £295,085, which latter sum was sufficient to answer, with a margin of £40,000, the debts of the Supply Co. which were to be taken over by the purchasers. In substance it was a sale by the Supply Co. to the Cold Storage Trust (Limited) of all its assets with this exception for this purpose. The consideration to be given for the purchase by the Cold Storage Trust (Limited) was the whole of its capital, the 618,000 ordinary and 150,000 preference shares.

On the 28th of May, 1903, there was entered into the formal agreement which reproduced, or ratified, or carried out the terms evidenced by the heads of agreement of August, 1902. Neither these heads nor the formal agreement contained anything about going into liquidation, but clause 15 of the heads of agreement provided that the Australasian Co. should be entitled to retain out of its assets agreed to be transferred a sum of £500 "for liquidation expenses," which his lordship remarked was an indication that the company was thinking of liquidation at that time.

On the 19th of September, 1902, after the heads of agreement, but before the formal agreement of May, 1903, had been entered into, there was a meeting of the Australasian Co. at which the chairman and a shareholder made speeches describing in detail the transactions they were recommending to the company to be carried out.

On the 29th of December, 1902, there was a meeting of the Supply Co., who were then looking forward to the execution of the agreement of the 26th of February, 1903, for the sale to the Cold Storage Trust (Limited), at which the chairman dealt with the subject of the proposed agreement.

On the 27th of May, 1903, a resolution was passed to wind up the Australasian Co., which was confirmed in the June following. The resolution passed was simply that the company should be wound up voluntarily, without any words indicating the purpose of the winding up.

On the 8th of June, 1903, the Supply Co. passed a resolution which was confirmed in July, 1903, to wind up the company voluntarily, and the scheme was again detailed by the chairman. [The effect of the various speeches made at these meetings is stated in the judgment.]

On the 20th of November, 1903, at an extraordinary meeting of the Supply Co. it was resolved that the liquidators of the company should be authorized to distribute amongst the contributories of the company, in the proportion of two shares for every ordinary share held by the company, the 618,000 held by the Supply Co. in the Cold Storage Trust (Limited) under the agreement of the 26th of February, 1903.

Thereupon the above actions were commenced and summonses taken out.

The plaintiff in each of the above actions sued on behalf of himself and all other holders of debenture stock, and claimed a declaration that the holders of debenture stock were, in the events which had happened, entitled to be redeemed (in the case of the Supply Co.) at the rate of £107 5s. per £100, and (in the case of the Australasian Co.) at the rate of £105 per £100.

The defendant in each action, the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation (Limited), was in the case of each company the trustee for the debenture-holders.

The above summonses were taken out in November, 1903, by the liquidator of the companies against preference shareholders for the determination of the questions (1) whether under the memorandum and articles of the companies and the agreements above mentioned the holders of the preference shares were entitled to receive on the winding up of the companies a bonus of 15 per cent. on the par value; and (2) whether the holders of preference shares were entitled to any and what dividend for the period from the 1st of April, 1903, on such shares to the commencement of the winding up.

Cave, K.C., and Ashton Cross, for the plaintiffs in the debenture-holders' actions.—The sale by the Supply Co. to the Australasian Co. was a reconstruction of the Supply Co, the sale being of substantially all the assets of the one company for shares in the other company. It falls within the definition of "reconstruction" given in the text-books: Palmer's Comp. Prec. (8th ed.), vol. 1, ch. 21, p. 1280, and Lindley on Companies (6th ed.), vol. 2, book 4, ch. 3. The effect of the transaction was that the old company became merged in the new company: In re Bank of Hindustan, China, and Japan, 13 W. R. 937, 2 Hem. & Mil. 657. It is not necessary that the whole of the assets should be taken over by the purchasing company: Hooper v. Western Counties and South Wales Telephone Co., 41 W. R. 84, 68 L. T. 78. If it is not reconstruction, then it is amalgamation: Wall v. London and Northern Assets Co., 47 W. R. 219, [1898] 1 Ch. 469; and see observations of Davey, L.J., in New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. (Limited) v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q. B., p. 622.

Buckmaster, K.C., and A. M. Wells, for the preference shareholders of the Supply Co.

Jenkins, K.C. and C. A. Bennett, for the preference shareholders of the Australasian Co.—Our case is that the Australasian Co. amalgamated with the Imperial Co. There was a fusion of the two companies: Wall v. London and Northern Assets Co.

Astbury, K.C., and W. E. Vernon, for the ordinary shareholders of the Supply Co.—The winding-up of this company differed from reconstruction, as the whole assets were not transferred in consideration of the shareholders having shares in the new company share for share instead of their shares in the old company. What took place was a sale, and not a reconstruction: In re Borax Co., 49 W. R. 212, [1901] 1 Ch. 326. Nor was it an amalgamation, for the two companies remained distinct.

Norton, K.C., and A. R. Kirby, for the liquidators of the Supply Co. and of the Australasian Co.—There was no reconstruction of the companies for the reasons given. Nor was there any amalgamation of the Australasian Co. with the Imperial Co. To effect an amalgamation a new company must be formed distinct from either of the companies amalgamated, but which consists of both: Palmer's Comp. Prec. (8th ed.), ch. 22, p. 1317.

Gatey, for the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation (Limited).

BUCKLEY, J.—The whole question which I have to determine is whether in the case of each of these two companies there has or has not been a winding-up "for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation." As regards these words I conceive that neither the word "reconstruction" nor the word "amalgamation" bears any definite legal meaning at all. It is not a legal, it is a commercial expression, and each of the words as a commercial expression bears no exact or definite meaning. It is a matter to be looked into in each case whether the transaction is such as that in the meaning of commercial men it is comprehended under those terms. Beyond that I have to consider whether the winding-up of those companies was "for the purpose of" such reconstruction or amalgamation. That question cannot be answered simply by reading the resolutions for liquidation and seeing whether they are expressed to be for the purpose of these things. I must examine whether, as a matter of substance and of fact, the liquidation or winding up was arrived at for these purposes. The facts with which I have to do are these. [His lordship stated the facts and continued:] At the meeting of the Australasian Co. on the 19th of September, 1902, before the agreement of May, 1903, was executed, there were speeches by the chairman and by Sir James Sievewright, detailing the transactions which they were recommending to the company. They were contemplating that the sale should provide share for share for the shareholders of the company the £1,000,000 capital of the Imperial Co. to replace the share capital of the Australasian Co., and the 500,000 debentures of the Imperial Co. were to provide for the 150,000 preference shares and the 350,000 debentures of the Australasian Co. The agreement does not say that they shall do that, I agree; but that is what they were contemplating, intending, and proposing in considering whether they should enter into the agreement or not. On the 29th of September, 1902, there was the meeting of the Supply Co. They were then looking forward to the execution of the agreement of the 26th of February, 1903, for the sale to the Cold Storage Trust (Limited). That is plain, because the chairman says, "I have much pleasure in meeting the shareholders. This feeling is tinged with sadness at the reflection that this is the last annual general meeting which we shall hold, as the next time you are called together will be to formally put the company into liquidation." That being so, he says, "I am going to ask you to consider whether you will enter into the agreement of the 26th of February, 1903; if you do, what we are going to do is to liquidate the company—of course for the purpose of carrying that out." He speaks of "merging" the companies, details exactly how the 618,000 shares of the Cold Storage Trust are to go, share for share, to represent £2 for every £1 in the Supply Co., and then says that the 150,000 preference shares are to answer the 150,000 preference shares of the Supply Co. The general observation is that it is quite plain that they were entering into an agreement for the purpose of carrying it out by liquidation.

The speeches made at the meeting of the Australasian Co. on the 27th of May, 1903, when the resolutions to wind up the company were passed, are again of the same purport as those of the meeting of the 19th of September, 1902. The scheme is again detailed at the meeting of the Supply Co. on the 8th of June, 1903, for the purpose of passing the winding-up resolution. It is quite plain from what was then said that they went into liquidation for the purpose of doing what was detailed in these agreements, and not for the purpose of winding up in the sense of realizing their assets and dividing the proceeds among themselves. They went into liquidation for the purpose of giving effect to this particular form of enjoying their assets by getting shares in another company for them, and directing them, or having the potentiality of dividing them, if proper resolutions were passed by the several companies, among the shareholders in the way detailed in the speeches. I have said enough to show that in my judgment the words "for the purpose of" are satisfied.

Then it remains to be considered whether what took place was a "reconstruction or amalgamation" within the words of the memorandum and articles of association and the conditions of the debenture stock. What does reconstruction mean? To my mind it means this: There is an undertaking being carried on of some definite kind. You arrive at the conclusion that it is not desirable to kill that undertaking; it is desirable to preserve it in some form. Then its reconstruction involves that you are not going to preserve the undertaking by selling it to an outsider who is going to carry it on. That would be a mere sale. It involves that in some altered form the undertaking is going to be continued so that substantially the same business shall be continued and substantially the same persons shall carry it on. It does not involve that all the assets shall pass to the new or resuscitated company, nor that all the shareholders of the old company should be shareholders in the new or resuscitated company, but that substantially the business and the persons interested must be the same. Does it make any difference that the new company, or reconstituted company does or does not take over the liabilities of the old company. I think not. I think it is none the less a reconstruction because you except from the assets taken over some such part as that substantially the business is left; and it is immaterial whether the liabilities are taken over by the resuscitated or new company or are provided for by excepting from the scheme of reconstruction a sufficient amount to answer them. It is not, therefore, vital that either the whole assets should be taken over or that the liabilities should be taken over. You have to see whether substantially the same people carry on the same business. That, I conceive, would be a reconstruction. Now, what is an amalgamation? An amalgamation involves, I think, to some extent a different idea. There you have got to have the rolling of two concerns somehow or other into one. You must weld two things together, and arrive at an amalgam—a blending of two undertakings. It does not necessarily follow that the whole of the two undertakings should pass, but substantially they must pass, nor need all the corporators be parties, but substantially they must be parties. The difference is that in the case of amalgamation you must have in some sense the blending of two concerns one with the other; not necessarily the continuance of one concern, but the blending of two concerns. An amalgamation may take place, it seems to me, either by the transference of undertakings A. and B. to a new corporation C.; or it may be by the continuance of the undertakings of A. and B. by B. upon terms that the shareholders of A. shall become shareholders of B. In either case you have an amalgamation. It is not necessary you should have a new company. You may have a continuance of one of the two companies upon the terms that the undertaking of the corporators of both shall substantially be merged in the one. That is what I understand those two words to mean. Let us see what has happened in this case. First, as regards the Supply Co. By virtue of its two sales, first to the Australasian Co. for shares, &c., in the Australasian Co., and then by the sale of all those shares in the Australasian Co. and all its other assets to the Cold Storage Trust for all the share capital in the Cold Storage Trust, the Supply Co. (by which I mean that corporation) became entitled to all the shares in the Cold Storage Trust, which represented all the assets of the Supply Co. with the exception of this £295,000. The Supply Co. had the power, by using article 159 of its articles of association, to hold all those shares in the Cold Storage Trust as a corporation, and to distribute them among the corporators of the Supply Co., and in point of fact by a resolution of the 20th of November, 1903, they have resolved to divide the 618,000 shares amongst their ordinary shareholders. But suppose they had not done so, I do not think it would have made any difference. They would have carried out a transaction in which the undertaking which they theretofore carried on would be found reproduced by another corporation, the Cold Storage Trust; and the Supply Co. now has, and by virtue of its powers can give to its corporators. the right to be all the corporators in the Cold Storage Trust. To my mind that is a reconstruction of the Supply Co. You cannot say it is an amalgamation, as it seems to me, for this reason, that the Cold Storage Trust had nothing with which to amalgamate. It had not a business of its own; it was acquiring its business under this sale. The Cold Storage Trust comes into existence as a company which is a reproduction in a new manner of the Supply Co. I think that is a reconstruction of the Supply Co.

Then what happens with regard to the Australasian Co.? The Australasian Co. having become entitled to the business of the Supply Co. by virtue of its purchase, sold that business to the Imperial Co., who also had a business of its own. The Imperial people were taking £150,000 for the goodwill of that business. It seems to me that this is an amalgamation. Here the Supply Co.'s business and the Imperial Co.'s business became blended in the hands of the Imperial Co., and the corporators of the Australasian Co. were contemplated as becoming holders, share for share, of shares in the Imperial Co. to replace the shares of the Australasian Co.

I have only one word to add with regard to the Supply Co., which I have had to postpone to this date. It is that inasmuch as by the sale of February, 1903, the shares in the Australasian Co., which the Supply Co. had become entitled to, passed to the Cold Storage Trust, and by virtue of the sale by the Australasian Co. to the Imperial Co. they are reproduced in the form of shares in the Imperial Co., there is again a blending of the interest of the Cold Storage Trust and the Imperial Co., and the result of the whole complicated transaction is that everything that there was before is found either in the Imperial Co. or in the Cold Storage Trust, holding shares in one or the other. I think in the case of each of the two companies there have been satisfied the words "a winding up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation." Briefly, they wound up, not for the purpose of discontinuing or parting with their undertaking, but for the purpose of continuing to be the owners of their undertakings in an altered form. The result is that the 15 per cent. bonus in the case of the preferential shareholders is payable on the share capital, and 7½ per cent. bonus is payable to the holders of debenture stock of the Supply Co., and 5 per cent. bonus is payable to the holders of the like stock of the Australasian Co.

Solicitors, Gerrish & Foster; Mellor & Co.; F. Kimber, Bull, & Duncan; Ashurst, Morris, Crisp, & Co.; Bennett, Chance, & Ferris.

Chan. Div.
Warrington, J. } May 16.

In re WHITING'S SETTLEMENT.
WHITING v. DE RUTZEN. (a.)

Settlement—Condition subsequent—Marriage of beneficiary at any time—Consent of third party necessary—Gift over.

A condition subsequent in a settlement, providing for forfeiture of the interest of a beneficiary and her issue in the settled property, if she should marry at any time without the consent of a specified person, is good, provided there is a gift over of the settled property.

By an indenture dated the 22nd of January, 1886, and by subsequent deeds-poll, Henry Whiting, the settlor, settled £30,000 upon trust for himself for life, and thereafter upon trust for his daughter Juliette for life, and thereafter upon trust for the issue of her marriage, and, in default of issue, upon certain other trusts.

There was a proviso that if the said Juliette should marry without the consent in writing of the said Henry Whiting, or, after his death and during the lives of J. A. Whiting (his wife), H. P. Whiting and M. N. Whiting, without the united consent of all three while living, or without the joint consent of the two survivors or without the consent of the last survivor, the trusts declared subsequent to the death of Henry Whiting were to cease and the trust fund was to vest in the magistrates for the time being of the police-court of Bow-street for the benefit of a police relief fund. The restraint was to apply to every marriage contracted by the said Juliette during the lives or life of the persons or person where consent was made necessary as aforesaid.

Henry Whiting, J. A Whiting, and M. N. Whiting died.

In 1902 Juliette married Sir A. Turner without H. P. Whiting's consent.

The question was whether the gift over had taken effect.

Mulligan, K.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the trustees and unborn children of Lady Turner.

Rowden, K.C., and Marsham, for the magistrates.

Sir E. Clarke, K.C., and Manby, for Lady Turner.

R. J. Parker and Tomlin, for the Attorney-General.

WARRINGTON, J., stated the facts and gave judgment to the following effect: In this case I consider myself bound by the decision in Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Mer. 108, 17 R. R. 33, to decide that the interest taken by Lady Turner and her possible issue has been forfeited in favour of the police relief fund. It is contended on the part of Lady Turner that the condition subsequent on her marriage without consent is not merely inoperative and in terrorem only, but that it is void altogether as infringing the rule of the Canon Law, which has to some extent been incorporated into the law of England, that a condition in restraint of marriage is void.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It has been frequently decided that such a condition, limited as to time, place and person, is good notwithstanding the rules of the Civil Law. The contention here is that the condition, if it extends to any marriage made by Lady Turner at any time, is not within the exceptions so engrafted on the rule of the Canon Law. If there were no authority, that would be a very interesting question to discuss. But I am bound by the authority that is only really in point—Lloyd v. Branton. In that case there was a trust, as there is here, for the lady and her children and the proviso as to marriage, on the face of it, extended to any marriage. On behalf of the lady and her husband it was argued, first, that there was no sufficient bequest over—with that we have nothing to do here—and secondly, that the condition could not be held to extend to a marriage without consent after the party had attained twenty-one. The reporter, I think, ought to have stated a third head—that the condition, if held to extend to marriage without consent after the party had attained twenty-one, would be bad. What the reporter calls the second head was divided by counsel into two parts—first, with regard to construction, that the condition ought to be limited to marriage under twenty-one; secondly, an argument founded on the general proposition of law, independent of construction, that, if not so limited, the condition was bad. Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. 89, was cited, and, so far as it went, the passage of the judgment at p. 97 was undoubtedly in favour of the arguments which counsel were then presenting to the court. I only refer to that case to show that counsel placed before the master of the Rolls all the materials available in support of their argument. Nevertheless, the Master of the Rolls said (at p. 116): "It is now too late to raise a doubt on the legality of the condition on which Mrs. Barnard's right to the bequests given her by the will is made to cease. In the modern case of Dashwood v. Lord Bulkley, 10 Ves. 230, the validity of such a condition does not seem to have been considered as at all open to controversy, although it was not confined to marriage under twenty-one.

It is true that Dashwood v. Lord Bulkley is not a decision in favour of the point then before the Master of the Rolls, but it is also true that, in that case, there was a very elaborate discussion as to whether consent had been given, which would have been irrelevant if the consent required had been limited to marriage under twenty-one.

In my opinion Lloyd v. Branton is a distinct authority for the proposition that a condition subsequent, causing a forfeiture of the previous gift in the event of the marriage of the donee at any time without the consent of a specified person, is good, provided there is a gift over. The case seems to me to be exactly in point, not only the general proposition, but also on the smaller question as to whether the condition as to forfeiture and the gift over destroyed the interest of the children as well as that of Lady Turner, and on that point I think I must so decide. I confess to having been anxious to find, if I could, some way out of giving effect to this condition, and I would have been glad to do so if, upon the true construction of these deeds, I could satisfy myself that the settlor intended to limit the condition to a marriage under twenty-six. But I must read the deeds together. With a certain amount of regret, I come to the conclusion that the interest of Lady Turner and her possible issue have been forfeited and that the magistrates at Bow-street are therefore entitled to have the fund transferred to them according to the terms of the settlement.

Solicitors, Frere, Cholmeley, & Co.; Boxall & Boxall; Solicitor to the Treasury.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) May 3.

HOGMAIER v. OVERSEERS OF WILLESDEN. (a.)

Justices—Special petty sessions—Revision of jury list—Power to state a case—Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 47), s. 33—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 13, sub-section 11.

Justices sitting in special petty sessions for the purpose of revising jury lists are not a court of summary jurisdiction, and have, therefore, no power to state a special case for the opinion of the court under section 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.

Case stated.

The case was stated at the instance of the appellant to raise the question whether veterinary surgeons are exempt from service on juries, but was subject to the preliminary point as to whether in the circumstances of the case the justices sitting at special petty sessions had any power to state a case.

The following were the reasons, in the opinion of the justices: (1) There was no "hearing of an injunction or complaint" as required by section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879; (2) the justices were not a court of summary jurisdiction within section 33 of the Act of 1879, which empowers any person aggrieved, who desires to question a conviction, order, determination, or other proceeding of a court of summary jurisdiction, on the ground that it is erroneous in point of law, to apply to the court to state a special case; (3) the Interpretation Act, 1889, section 13, sub-section 11, enacts as follows: "The expression 'court of summary jurisdiction' shall mean any justice or justices of the peace, or other magistrate, by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by or who is authorized to act under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, whether in England, Wales, or Ireland, or whether, acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any of them, or under any other Act, or by virtue of his commission, or under the common law." The justices conceived that the definition must be governed by the words "to whom jurisdiction is given by or who is authorized to act under the Summary Jurisdiction Act," otherwise the words at the end of the section would mean justices acting in any capacity whatever.

The jurisdiction of the justices in this matter was given to them, not under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, but under special Acts relating to jurors. They could only sit in special petty sessions within the last seven days of September (the Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 10), with an adjournment thereof within seven days (25 & 26 Vict. c. 10), s. 8). It had been held that justices sitting in special sessions for licensing were not a court of summary jurisdiction (Boulter v. Kent Justices, [1897] A. C. 556), nor in special sessions for granting game licences (R. v. Bird, 62 J. P. 301).

Morton Smith, for the appellant.—The justices have power to state a case. The expression "court of summary jurisdiction" is defined by section 13, sub-section 11, of the Interpretation Act, 1889, to include justices acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Act "or any other Act." That is wide enough to cover justices exercising their duties under the Juries Act. They are also a petty sessional court within sub-section 12 of section 13 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and on that ground was a court of summary jurisdiction. The cases cited by the justices are distinguishable. The case of Fourth City Mutual Building Society v. Churchwardens of East Ham, [1892] 1 Q. B. 661, is in my favour.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent did not appear.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—The question we have to consider is whether justices sitting in special petty sessions for the purposes of revising and allowing jury lists under the Juries Act, 1825, have power to state a case for the opinion of the court. The power of stating a case is now governed by section 33 of the Act of 1879, which provides that any person who desires to question a conviction, order, or determination of a court of summary jurisdiction on the ground that it is erroneous in point of law or is in excess of jurisdiction may apply to the court to state a case. The language of that section is somewhat wider than section 3 of the Act of 1859, but in order to bring this case within section 33 of the Act of 1879 it is necessary that they should be sitting as a "court of summary jurisdiction. Counsel for the appellant has referred to section 13, sub-section 11, of the Interpretation Act, 1889, but I think the meaning of that section is that justices are a court of summary jurisdiction when they are exercising powers similiar to those conferred by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, but derived from the common law or from some other Act. Now, I quite agree that the courts of petty sessions may have power under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, but I think if it had been intended to provide by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, that all justices sitting in petty sessions should have power to state a case one would have expected to find very different language used. When one considers section 10 of the Juries Act, 1825, it seems to me that there is a class of jurisdiction which cannot be properly described as being under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, or under Acts conferring similar powers. I think it more nearly resembles the proceeding of a public body who act on their own knowledge without being fettered by the rules of evidence. For these reasons I think the objection raised by the magistrates is one to which we must give effect, and that we cannot entertain this case.

WILLS, J.—I agree. I only wish to add that the words "petty sessional court" as used in section 13, sub-section 12, of the Interpretation Act is a comparatively modern phrase, and I doubt very much whether it could be found in any Act passed more than fifty years ago. I cannot help thinking that if the Interpretation Act had intended to include special petty sessions within the definition of a court of summary jurisdiction it would have said so. Probably it will be found that the phrase petty sessional court is never used unless the tribunal or court to which it is applied is really exercising judicial powers, and therefore it may very well be that that use of the words "petty sessional court" implies and involves that the tribunal is a court of summary jurisdiction with power to state a case. It would, however, be a very considerable extension of existing notions to bring all meetings of justices in petty sessions within the same category.

KENNEDY, J.—I agree.

Case struck out.

Solicitor for the appellant, G. Thatcher.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J.) May 2.

ASHTON v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Railway—Bye-law—Intermediate station—Passenger breaks journey at a junction where it was necessary for her to change—Right of company to treat contract ended and to require ticket to be given up if passenger leaves the station.

The plaintiff took a return ticket, available for seven days, on the defendant's line from Chorley to Manchester. She returned the same day by a train from Manchester which only brought her as far as Bolton, where she had to change and wait some half-hour for the next train to Chorley. She therefore determined to visit a friend in the town and to return in the evening by a later train. On quitting the station the ticket collector informed her that, as the next train would be leaving for Chorley shortly, if she did not go by it but left the station and returned by a later train, she must give up her ticket and re-book. She gave up her ticket under protest, and on completing her return journey by a subsequent train took a ticket to Chorley, for which she paid 11½d. In an action by her to recover the sum so paid,

Held, that in the absence of special terms a contract by a railway company to carry a passenger from one station to another does not give the passenger a right to break the journey, although the station where the passenger desires to alight and stay for a time is a junction at which he or she was obliged to change trains. Therefore, in the present case, the sum paid for a ticket from Bolton to Chorley could not be recovered back by the plaintiff from the company.

Appeal by the company from a decision of the registrar of the county court of Lancashire holden at Chorley.

The action was brought to recover the sum of 11½d. paid by the plaintiff to the defendants under protest in the following circumstances:

On the 15th of September, 1903, Mrs. Ashton, the plaintiff, who lived at Chorley, took a return ticket from Chorley to Manchester available for seven days. On the same day she started back from Manchester by a train which went as far as Bolton on the way to Chorley, but diverged at Bolton and went on to Blackburn. No question was raised as to the plaintiff's right to travel by this train as far as Bolton. At Bolton she alighted. Half-an-hour afterwards a train was timed to leave Bolton for Chorley, but as she wanted to pay a visit in the town of Bolton, she decided to return by a later train and left the station. The ticket collector required her to give up her return ticket, and she had consequently to take a new ticket from Bolton to Chorley at a cost of 11½d, which sum she claimed to recover in this action.

The registrar held that the case of a person making a necessary change at a junction could be distinguished from that of a passenger who alighted at an intermediate station from a train which would have carried him direct to his destination. The bye-laws which applied in the latter case could not, in his opinion, be deemed to extend to the former unless the language of them was strained. He therefore entered judgment for the plaintiff for 11½d. against the defendants. Hence the appeal by the railway company.

C. A. Russell, K.C., and Openshaw, for the defendants.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Arthur Powell, K.C., and Woodfin, for the plaintiff.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This is not a question, as it seems to me, of the right of a passenger to leave the railway company's premises while waiting for a train in which to continue his journey. The plaintiff is seeking to impose on the company the duty of carrying her by two separate transits, and the effect of her counsel's contention would be that she could claim a right to terminate the contractual relations between herself and the company and to resume them again at her will. We must apply our common knowledge of the ordinary incidents of railway travelling. Everybody knows what is meant by breaking a journey. Tickets are sometimes issued by railway companies with special terms enabling the passenger to break the journey at certain stations—that is, to leave the company's premises and then to return and resume the journey under the same contract. Counsel for the plaintiff contended that this is the common incident of every railway journey; that a return ticket from Chorley to Manchester and back implies a contract by the railway company not only to carry the holder of the ticket from Chorley to Manchester and back, but also, if the train stops at any station between the termini, and the passenger is minded to leave the railway, to permit him to do so and to return and resume the journey when he pleases and so to travel between two termini—there being nothing on the ticket to designate the particular train or to limit the number of the trains by which the plaintiff might travel—by a series of journeys instead of one journey. I can see no ground for suggesting that that is the contract of the company. It is well known that a passenger by leaving the station breaks off contractual relationship with the railway company. The contract of the defendants was to carry the plaintiff from Chorley to Manchester and back by one continuous contractual operation, not to perform that operation piecemeal by enabling the plaintiff to enter into a series of contractual relations from hour to hour or day to day as and when she pleased. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiff's contention, if sound, would convert one single contract to carry a passenger from London to Liverpool into a series of separate contracts to carry from London to the first intermediate station, and so on from each intermediate station to the next, and then from the last intermediate station to Liverpool. I think it clear that apart from special terms passengers have no right to deviate or to break the journey.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Woodcocks, Ryland, & Parker, for C. Moorhouse, Manchester.

Solicitor for the respondent, William Buttle, for John Whitfield, Chorley.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

K. B. Div. (Bigham and Darling, JJ.) — June 13.

In re EVERSON.

Ex parte THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Practice—Appeals from county courts—Leave to appeal—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 104—Bankruptcy Appeals (County Courts) Act, 1884 (47 Vict. c. 9), s. 2—Bankruptcy Rules, rr. 129 (2), 134 (a).

Except by leave of the county court judge no appeal lies to the Divisional Court from any order relating to property when it is apparent on the face of the proceedings that the money or money's worth involved does not exceed £50 in value. A refusal of leave to appeal is not an "order subject to appeal" within the meaning of section 104 (2) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Appeal from the decision of the county court judge at Newport, Mon., refusing to avoid as a fraudulent preference a payment of £16 12s. 6d. made by the debtor to a creditor within three months of bankruptcy.

The county court judge refused leave to appeal, whereupon application was made ex parte to Bruce, J., in chambers (acting as bankruptcy judge in the absence of Wright, J.), for leave to appeal, and the application was granted.

Muir Mackenzie, for the appellant.

Hansell, for the respondent.—There is a preliminary objection to this appeal being heard, the money's worth involved does not exceed £50, and by rule 129 (2): "Except by leave of the court no appeal to the Court of Appeal shall be brought when it is apparent from the proceedings that the money or money's worth involved does not exceed £50." If that rule be read in conjunction with section 2 of the Bankruptcy Appeals (County Courts) Act, 1884, which assigns appeals from county courts to the Divisional Court instead of the Court of Appeal, it is clear that "the court" in rule 129 must mean the county court. [BIGHAM, J.—"The court" evidently means the court of original jurisdiction.]

Muir Mackenzie.—There is a right to come and question the order of the county court judge refusing leave to appeal. By section 104, sub-section 2, as amended by section 2 of the Bankruptcy Appeals (County Courts) Act, 1884, orders in bankruptcy matters in the county court shall, at the instance of the party aggrieved, be subject to appeal to the Divisional Court, and by rule 134*a* it is provided that where there is an appeal to the High Court from the county court any order not involving the decision of the appeal may be made by the bankruptcy judge of the High Court, who in this case was represented by Bruce, J.

Hansell, in reply.—An order refusing leave to appeal is not an "order" from which an appeal lies within the meaning of the Act: Laing v. Eadie, [1901] A. C. 210.

BIGHAM, J.—The preliminary objection must prevail. It appears on the face of the notice of motion that property of less than £50 in value is involved and the case therefore comes within rule 129 (2): "Except by leave of the court no appeal to the Court of Appeal shall be brought when it is apparent from the proceedings that the money or money's worth involved does not exceed £50." "Court" there means the court of original jurisdiction, in this case the county court and "court of appeal" means in this case the Divisional Court. The leave of the county court to appeal in this case has never been granted, and therefore it cannot be heard.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It is argued that you can appeal from a refusal of leave to appeal, and it is said that Bruce, J., in chambers has reversed the county court judge. We do not think that an order refusing leave to appeal is an "order" from which any appeal can be brought at all.

DARLING, J.—I agree. It has been argued that if the court below refuses leave to appeal, you can appeal against that refusal, the result of which is that you can appeal without the leave of the court below. If that contention is right, there is no meaning in the words, "except by leave of the court . . . no appeal shall be brought" in rule 129.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for appellant, Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Solicitor for respondent, F. Kinch.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). May 17.

CANNON BREWERY CO. (LIMITED) v. GAS LIGHT AND COKE CO. (a.)

Gas—Arrears of gas rent due by outgoing tenant—Purchase by incoming tenant of outgoing tenant's business and interest in premises—Right to recover from incoming tenant—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 16—Metropolis Gas Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125), s. 39—Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. xxiii.), s. 18.

Under the 18*th section of the Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act,* 1872, an incoming tenant who has purchased the goodwill of his predecessor and continues to carry on the business on the premises, but does not require a supply of gas, is not liable for arrears of gas rate due by the outgoing tenant. Should he require a supply for the premises himself, then the gas company may insist on payment of these arrears as a condition of such supply.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 565, [1903] 1 K. B. 593) reversed.

Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Mead, 45 L. J. M. C. 71, 24 W. R. Dig. 111, approved.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Mathew, L.JJ.) (reported 51 W. R. 565, [1903] 1 K. B. 593), which reversed that of the Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.).

In June, 1901, the lessee and occupier of a house in the Harrow-road, where he carried on the business of a grocer and retail wine and spirit and beer merchant, sold his interest in the premises and the good will of his business to the appellants, and gave up possession to them, leaving £10 1s. 3d. due for arrears of gas supplied to him by the respondent gas company.

The appellants continued to carry on the business, but made no application for, nor did they require, any gas from the respondents, who, however, sued the appellants, the brewery company, for these arrears under the 18th section of the Gas Light and Coke Co. Act, 1872, and the Divisional Court thought they were not liable.

The Court of Appeal held that they came within one of the exceptions, and that consequently the arrears might be recovered from them as the incoming tenant continuing the business of his predecessor from whom the goodwill had been purchased.

The various sections of the Acts sufficiently appear in the judgment.

C. A. Russell, K.C., and A. H. Spokes, for the appellants.

Danckwerts, K.C., and R. Vaughan Williams, for the respondents.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—In this case the respondents, the Gas Light and Coke Co., sued the Cannon Brewery Co. for arrears of gas rates. The Court of Appeal supported the claim and gave judgment in favour of the gas company. The arrears were not attributable to any default on the part of the brewery company. The brewery company had no relations with the gas company in the past. They do not propose or desire to have any relations with them in future. The debt they have been adjudged to pay is not their debt in any sense. It is the debt of the outgoing tenant, whose interest in the premises supplied with the unpaid gas they have purchased, and whose trade or business they are now continuing. The claim was made on the strength of the following section of the Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872: "18. In case any consumer leave the premises where gas was supplied to him without paying to the company the rate or meter rent due from him, the company shall not require from the next tenant of the premises payment of the arrears so left unpaid unless the incoming tenant agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears, or unless the incoming tenant shall continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant, and shall have paid to the owner, lessee, or mortgagee in possession, or to the outgoing tenant of such premises, a consideration for so doing, but the company shall, notwithstanding any such arrears, in the absence of collusion between the outgoing and incoming tenant, supply gas to the incoming tenant as required by this Act on being required by him to do so." The grounds on which the Court of Appeal proceed are these: Their view is that when the Act says that the gas company shall not require from an incoming tenant payment of arrears left unpaid by the outgoing tenant unless one or other of two conditions is fulfilled, it is necessarily implied that if either of those conditions is fulfilled such payment may be required. Now, it is admitted that the second condition has been fulfilled in the case of the brewery company. The gas company, therefore, they say, are authorized by this Act to require payment of the arrears from the brewery company. Then comes the question, what is the meaning of the word "require"? To solve that question the learned judges of the Court of Appeal turn to the last sentence of the section. And there they find an absolute obligation on the part of the gas company to supply gas to an incoming tenant notwithstanding the existence of arrears owing by his predecessor in title. The next step is easy enough. As the obligation to supply the incoming tenant is in their opinion absolute and unconditional, it would be idle to tell the gas company that they may require payment of arrears unless power is given to enforce compliance with the demand. Hence it follows that the word "require" imports liability on the part of the incoming tenant, and confers a right of action on the gas company. The result is certainly startling. Gas companies in the metropolis, alone of all traders, corporate or unincorporate, are privileged in certain cases to collect debts due by defaulting customers from persons who have never been and never mean to be customers of theirs. The learned judges of the Court of Appeal, in deciding against the brewery company, advisedly overruled a decision of Blackburn and Lush, JJ., which was in point and directly contrary to their view. I refer to the case of The Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Mead, 45 L. J. M. C. 71, 24 W. R. Dig. 111, decided in 1876. There is, however, as Mr. Russell pointed out, one flaw in the reasoning of the Court of Appeal. The learned judges have overlooked a few words in section 18. The obligation on the part of the gas company to supply gas to an incoming tenant is not absolute or unconditional. It is qualified by the words "as required by this Act." When the history of gas legislation in the metropolis is borne in mind, those words are very significant, and the difficulty created by a provision at first sight indirect and obscure vanishes altogether. Originally, gas companies in the metropolis were free to extend their works as they pleased. The system of separate districts was unknown. The service of gas was left to the ordinary laws of supply and demand. At length, "in order to economise capital and avoid the too frequent opening of streets," the principal companies, including the Gas Light and Coke Co., agreed to confine their supply of gas to separate districts. This arrangement was confirmed and regulated by the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860. "Districting," to use an expression found in the Act, made a great change in the position of gas companies. In its own district each company obtained a monopoly. It was, therefore, necessary, in the interest of consumers, to place certain restrictions on dealings between gas companies and intending customers. Subject to the provisions of the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, every gas company was still left free to enter into any contract with any owner, occupier, or local authority for the supply of gas "in such manner and on such terms and conditions" as the parties might agree (section 19). But by section 21 no contract for the supply of gas was to contain "any term or condition contrary to any of the provisions" of the Act. And then came section 39, which is word for word the same as section 18 of the Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act of 1872, except that the latter section introduces for the first time the condition about the incoming tenant continuing the trade or business of the outgoing tenant. Now, the Gas Clauses Act, 1847, the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, and the several Acts of the Gas Light and Coke Co., by incorporation and reference, all form one code, and the expression "this Act" in section 18 of the Act of 1872 includes them all. The result is that if the brewery company, on taking over the premises, had required a supply of gas, they and the gas company might have entered into any contract in relation to such supply not contrary to any of the terms and conditions of the code. As a condition of such supply the gas company, under the circumstances, might have required from the brewery company payment of the arrears left unpaid by the outgoing tenant. But inasmuch as the brewery company do not require the gas company to supply them with gas, section 18 of the Act of 1872 does not apply, and the gas company are not in a position to require payment of arrears from the brewery company. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision in The Gas Light and Coke Co. v Mead was quite correct, and that the order of the Court of Appeal in the present case ought to be reversed, with costs, both here and below, and I move your lordships accordingly.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord DAVEY.—I think that the decision in the case of The Gas Light and Coal Co. v. Mead was right, though the reasons for it are not very fully or clearly expressed in the reported judgments of the learned judges. In my opinion the question for our decision turns exclusively on the proper construction to be put on section 18 of the Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act of 1872; but in order to understand and apply that section it is necessary to consider the law regulating the relations between the gas company and their customers at that date. Without troubling your lordships with going through the sections of the various Acts to which reference has been made, the situation may be summed up thus: The occupier of any premises within the district had a right to require a supply of gas to the premises subject to his entering into a contract, if so required by the gas company, to pay gas rates for such supply for two years, and subject to his giving security if required (see sections 14 and 15 of the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860). The remedies of the gas company for recovery of the gas rates were by summons or action against the consumer to whom the gas had been supplied, and the company was empowered to stop the gas from entering the premises of such person by cutting off the service pipe (section 16 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847). Section 18 of the gas company's Act of 1872 deals with the case of a change in the occupation of the premises. In its original form this section is first found in the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, section 39 of which is identical with this section, except that the words "unless the incoming tenant shall continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant, and shall have paid . . . a consideration for so doing" are omitted. It reappears in the same form in the gas company's Act of 1870, where it is found in a group of clauses (12 to 14) enabling the company to require a contract to be signed at any time, and to require an incoming tenant to give security, as well as the person to whom the supply was originally made, and in each of these cases the remedy of the company was to discontinue the supply of gas and remove the meter, and providing also that where the occupier is an agent or servant of some other person such last-mentioned person shall be liable to pay gas rent to the company in the same manner and to the same extent as the occupier. I am of opinion that it would be contrary to sound principles of construction to imply from such negative words as you find in section 18 of the gas company's Act, 1872, an affirmative enactment giving a right of action against an incoming tenant coming within the excepted description for his predecessor's debt if some other construction can be found for the words. I am of opinion that there is another construction which does less violence to the words and is the right construction. The Master of the Rolls expressed the opinion that the learned judges would not have decided Mead's case as they did had they not thought that the gas company had a right to cut off the supply as against the incoming tenant till the arrears owing by the outgoing tenant were paid. If they thought so, I am not so certain as the Master of the Rolls is that they were wrong; for the words "premises of such person" may be construed as descriptive only of the premises in respect of which the supply of gas has been made. But it is not, in my opinion, necessary to decide this question for the purpose of construing section 18 of the Act of 1872. I think that the words "the company shall not require from the next tenant of the premises payment of the arrears so left unpaid" are amply satisfied by referring them to the conditions of supply to the new tenant, and mean that the company shall not require payment of the arrears as a condition of continuing such supply or before entering into a contract for the same. And I construe the words at the end of the sentence "but the company shall, notwithstanding any such arrears . . . supply gas to the incoming tenant" as meaning a tenant within the protection of the section, or (in other words) I read the words of exception "unless, &c.," as applicable to the whole of the section. The right, therefore, from which an incoming tenant who is within one of the two excepted descriptions is excluded is that which other incoming tenants enjoy —of being entitled, notwithstanding the arrears, to a supply of gas by the company if required by him. This seems to me to give an harmonious, consistent, and rational construction to the whole section without doing any violence to the words or making any such implication as that of a right of action against one person for another person's debt. The construction which I have thus put on section 18 appears to me to be favoured by the context in which the corresponding clause is found in the Act of 1870 in two respects. In the first place, it gives the company the same remedy against the excepted persons as they have against an incoming tenant who refuses to sign a contract or to give security, and in the next place, in section 14 of the Act of 1870, where it was intended to make one man liable for another's debt, it is properly done by express words. The result is that, in my opinion, the appellant, coming within one of the excepted descriptions of incoming tenants, if he requires a supply of gas, will have to pay the outgoing tenant's arrears before he can obtain it; but if he does not require a supply, he is under no liability, and cannot be sued for the arrears. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, with costs here and below.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD read a short judgment to the same effect.

Lord ROBERTSON.—As is justly observed by Stirling, L.J., "it is an unusual piece of legislation to make a person who has not incurred a debt liable to pay for it." The facts of the present case give peculiar point to that remark. The appellant company have no sort of relation to the respondents, have never used their gas, and want none of it. They have merely bought the business of a customer of the respondents, who left owing them for his gas. On no doctrine or principle of law or ethics can it be suggested that, apart from statutory enactment, there is any obligation on the appellants to pay this account. This being so, the respondents can only succeed by showing some positive enactment that A shall pay B's debt. Now I have never been able to see, in the section relied on, either the form or the substance of such an enactment. The main proposition of the section is negative, that is to say, it prevents the respondents doing something which it assumes them to have the power to do. This seems to me to furnish the key to the enactment. Before looking at the exceptions we have got to find out what it is to which they are exceptions. We have got to find out something which the respondents had, antecedently, the right to require, for it is this which (with the exceptions stated) the Act is going to prevent. Well, now, two competing theories are put forward. The one is that the word "require" means require as a condition of supplying gas. It seems to me that this is clearly the meaning of the word, at all events in the Act of 1860, in which, as section 39, this section first appears. The Act deals with the question what are to be the contractual relations between the gas company and its customers, and what may, and what may not, be the conditions of the contract. Among other things, the company may not require from a new occupier payment of his predecessor's arrears, and so on. Now it is difficult to suppose that when this section was put into subsequent Acts it was intended to have a new and different meaning, and in the absence of anything to the contrary, I should read it in the Acts of 1871 and 1872 just as I read it in the Act of 1860. The main proposition in the section, as ultimately framed (section 18 of the Act of 1872), is interrupted to express the exceptions, but it is resumed in the latter part of the section. The initial and the concluding words are correlative and co-extensive. With the exceptions stated, says the Act of 1872, the company shall not require payment of arrears, and, notwithstanding non-payment, gas shall be supplied. This construction is supported when the exceptions are looked to. The main enactment being, in the interests of the customer, to prevent a new occupier being coerced by the pressure of monopoly into a contract to pay other people's old scores, it is fair enough that this protection should not be given in the specified cases. The competing theory, adopted by the Court of Appeal, is that the word "require" is made to extend to persons not contracting or seeking to contract with the company. Now it is quite certain that, before this clause was enacted at least, they had no right to sue the successor, and the theory, therefore, is that the main enactment forbids the exercise of a non-existent power. Accordingly, the only operative part of this section on this theory would be the exceptions, and in the exceptions to a negative the respondents find the statutory enactment of liability for a third party's debts. This seems to me a grave infringement of principle in statutory construction, and I say so with the less hesitation because the learned judges do not discuss this difficulty, and accordingly have done nothing to remove it. Where a new liability is to be created the Legislature does it by direct enactment, and Mr. Spokes pointed with great force to section 15 of the Act of 1871, as showing that this rule is observed in the very catena of statutes now before your lordships, and in matter closely germane to the present question. The exception to a prohibition is primâ facie the conservation of the existing state of things. We were not referred to any illustration in legislation of pecuniary liability being imposed on a class of the community by such circuitous methods. It is in vain to appeal to solecistic or conversational slovenliness as justifying far-reaching implication in statutes imposing liability, and it is to be remembered also that this is not even a case of contract or statutory contract when individual parties are dealing with their own rights. In the present case I think the true meaning of the section is sufficiently ascertained, and presents an intelligent and coherent enactment; but, even if the matter had been left more obscure than it is, I should have declined to affirm the liability of the appellants.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Boulton, Son, & Sandeman, Bedford; Monier-Williams & Robinson.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) } May 31; June 1.

In re H. L. LONGBOTHAM AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Solicitor — Costs — Taxation — Third party — Bill of mortgagee's solicitor taxed by mortgagor—Application for review—Certificate of taxing-master—Practice—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 38.

Under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), where a third party taxes a bill, this taxation is on the footing of a taxation between the solicitor and the client, and if the third party be only interested in and liable to pay the costs of one matter, under this section, as a matter of principle, he can obtain taxation of the bill so far as concerns that one matter only, and on the footing of being liable to pay only the taxed costs of that matter.

Where in the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs incurred by him under a mortgage transaction, if the third party is a mortgagor and he is only interested in the relations between the solicitor and his client, a mortgagee, so far as they concern the position of the client strictly in his character of mortgagee, the mortgagor is entitled under this section to have taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs limited to the items of costs incurred by the client strictly in his position of mortgagee.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (reported W. N., 1904, p. 78), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported W. N., 1904, p. 78).

The facts were as follows:

The matter came before Kekewich, J., on an application to review a certificate of the taxing-master on the taxation by a mortgagor of the bill of costs of the solicitor of the mortgagee under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73).

By an order dated the 19th of August, 1903, upon the petition of L. B. Crossley, it appeared that L. H. Longbotham and A. T. Longbotham, a firm of solicitors, were employed by a client on or about the payment off of moneys due under a mortgage executed by the petitioner in favour of the client and the transfer thereof to a third party; and that the said solicitors, on or about the 4th of July, 1903, delivered unto the petitioner their bill of fees and disbursements, which the petitioner was advised ought to be taxed, and it was accordingly ordered that it be referred to the taxing-master to tax and settle the said bill, and that the petitioner and also the said solicitors produce before the master, upon oath as he should direct, all books, papers, and writings in their custody or power respectively relating to the matters thereby referred or any of them.

The taxing-master certified that he had taxed the bill upon the principles laid down in In re Gray, 49 W. R. 298, [1901] 1 Ch. 239, 49 W. R. Dig. 172, that the taxation was on a party and party basis, and that all the items which, in his opinion, could not be charged as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee had been taxed off. Objection was taken by the solicitors to this taxation of their bill of costs under the order of the 19th of August, 1903, and they presented a long list of objections, to which the master replied on the 24th of December, 1903.

The matter came before Kekewich, J., on a summons, when counsel, in support of the summons, strongly contended that the case was completely covered by authority, which laid down that the taxation of a bill of costs of the solicitor of a mortgagee as mortgagee must proceed according to the rules which would govern the taxation of the same bill of the solicitor for the mortgagee personally. His lordship thought that the cases which were decided on the construction of the Act of 1843, by s. 38, virtually decided that the taxation must proceed as between solicitor and client (these cases are found in Beavan's Reports, vide infra). The learned judge, after stating that, apart from practice, it was a matter of very considerable importance, and after hearing counsel for the applicants, and before he heard counsel for the respondents, and also having regard to the decision of Cozens-Hardy, L.J. (then Cozens-Hardy, J.), in In re Gray, above referred to, upon which the taxation was based, thought it was desirable to obtain a certificate from the taxing-master as to what the practice was at the present time, and he therefore prepared a short case, stating the facts and the point which was raised, and he also gave the taxing-master an opportunity of seeing the papers to see exactly how the point arose. He received from the senior taxing-master a certificate in the following terms: "To the Honourable Mr. Justice Kekewich. Your lordship having desired a certificate from the Master of the Supreme Court (Taxing Office) of the practice generally in cases between the mortgagor and the solicitor of the mortgagee, I beg respectfully to report that the practice followed by the Masters under section 38 of 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73 (the Solicitors Act) up to within recent years was to tax as between the solicitor and the client (the parties chargeable in the first instance) and not as between the solicitor and the party liable to pay, effect, however, being given as far as possible to the cases of Re Negus (1895) 1 Ch. 73, and Re Abbott 4 L. T. N. S. 476, and the observations of Cotton, L.J., in Re Morecroft, 29 SOLICITOR'S JOURNAL 471 in the Court of Appeal. The principles, however, laid down by these cases were, in the opinion of the masters, considerably extended by the case of Re Gray, [1901] 1 Ch. 239, and since that case the practice in the Taxing Office in taxations under this section has been to tax, apart from the order, as between the solicitor and the party or estate liable to pay."

His lordship stated that after that certificate he felt it his duty to follow the practice laid down, subject, of course, to his decision being reversed by the Court of Appeal.

He accordingly dismissed the summons with costs, giving leave to appeal.

The solicitors appealed.

G. Lawrence, for the appellants.

He cited In re Wells, 8 Beav. 416; In re Jones, 8 Beav. 479. on p. 480, per Lord Langdale; In re Tyson, 9 Beav. 119; In re Bignold, 9 Beav. 269; In re Barrow, 2 W. R. 109; 17 Beav. 547; 18 Jur. 181; 2 W. R. Ch. Dig. 51, 84; In re Taylor, 2 W. R. 249; 18 Beav. 165; 18 Jur. 666; 2 W. R. Ch. Dig. 85, 94; In re Baker, 11 W. R. 792; 32 Beav. 526; 2 N. R 151; 11 W. R. Ch. Dig. 108; In re Massey. 13 W. R. 797; 34 Beav. 463; 11 Jur. N. S. 594; 13 W. R. Ch. Dig. 86; In re Abbott, 4 L. T. N. S. 576; 9 W. R Ch. Dig. 85; In re Newman, 15 W. R. 630 and 1,189; 2 Ch. Apps. 707; 15 W. R. Ch. D. 128 & 129; In re Morecroft, 29 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 471; In re Holliday and Godlee, 58 L. T. N. S. 301; 36 W. R. Dig. 56; In re Dickson, 5 W. R. 108; 8 D. G. M. & G. 655; 5 W. R. Ch. Dig. 93; Brown v. Burdett, 36 W. R. 225; 40 Ch. D. 244; In re Negus, 43 W. R. 68; [1895] 1 Ch. 73; 43 W. R. Dig. 176; In re Gray, 49 W. R. 298; [1901] 1 Ch. 239; 49 W. R. Dig. 172; Daniel's Chancery Practice (7th ed.), p. 1,728; Fisher on Mortgages (5th ed.),

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

on p. 911; Morgan and Wurtzburg on Costs, p. 41. [By COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Re Brown, 15 W. R. 1,030; L. R. 4 Eq. 464, 15 W. R. Ch. Dig. 30.]

T. L. Wilkinson, for the respondent, was not called on.

THE COURT reserved judgment till the day following.

June 1.—ROMER, L.J., read his judgment as follows: I will deal first with this case on the principle that when a third party taxes a bill under section 38 of the Act of 1843, it is clear, both from the wording of the section itself and the authorities, that the taxation must be on the footing of a taxation between the solicitor and the client. But the third party, is not for all purposes in connection with the taxation, to be treated as if he were himself the client. For instance, when the client has paid the bill, and might not be able to show special circumstances sufficient to entitle him to have the bill taxed, it does not follow that of necessity the third party is thereby precluded from obtaining taxation. The proviso at the end of section 38 shows that, and in my opinion that proviso is important and useful, and a court will doubtless act upon it in cases where justice requires that the third party should not be bound by what has taken place between the solicitor and the client. Again, the solicitor may have acted for the client in more than one completed matter, and the client may not be entitled as against the solicitor to obtain delivery of a bill and taxation except on the footing of having all the matters included and taxed. But if the third party be only interested in and liable to pay the costs of one matter, it is clear in my opinion, as a matter of principle, that under section 38 he can obtain taxation of the bill so far as concerns that one matter only, and on the footing of being liable to pay only the taxed costs of that matter. And that principle really decides this case, and shows that the appeal should fail. For in the present case the third party is a mortgagor, and he is only interested in the relations between the solicitor and his client so far as they concern the position of the client strictly in his character of mortgagee. The mortgagor, therefore, is entitled, under section 38, to have taxation of the solicitor's bill limited to the items of costs incurred by the client strictly in his position of mortgagee. And it is on that principle that the taxing-master has proceeded. It may well be that the client, as between himself and the solicitor, is liable for costs incurred in relation to the mortgaged property, with which the mortgagor is not concerned, and for which the mortgagor is not liable. Those will be costs incurred by the mortgagee in his personal capacity so far as regards the mortgagor, and not costs incurred by him in the capacity of mortgagee strictly and properly considered, and accordingly would not have to be taxed or considered by the taxing-master in a taxation by the mortgagor as third party. And I may add, though it may not be necessary to do so for the purposes of the present case, that if the mortgagee chose to sanction a charge of his solicitor beyond what he and the solicitor knew, or must be taken to have known, could be properly charged as against the mortgagor, though the mortgagee might be bound for the excess by reason of his sanction, the mortgagor would not be bound, for the sanction by the mortgagee would be held to be given by him in his personal capacity, and not in his capacity of mortgagee. With regard to the authorities, they are so numerous that I do not pretend to say that all the observations of the various judges who decided them can be reconciled. But the principle on which this judgment is based is not, in my opinion, contrary to any express decision that has been cited. I do not think it will serve any useful purpose to go through the cases cited seriatim. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Bower, Cotton, & Bower, for Longbotham & Sons, Halifax; Indermaur & Brown, for Pearce, Todmorden.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) April 22.

GIBSON v. WORMALD & WALKER (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Accident—Compensation—Award by arbitrator appointed by a county court judge—Appeal to Court of Appeal—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule II., clause 4.

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, no appeal lies direct to the Court of Appeal from the award of an arbitrator appointed by a county court judge to assess a claim for compensation under that Act.

Appeal by the defendants from the decision of an arbitrator appointed by the county court judge of Dewsbury under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant having filed a request for arbitration for the assessment of compensation under the Act, the county court judge, under clause 2 of Schedule II. to the Act, appointed a barrister, under the authority of the Lord Chancellor, as arbitrator to hear and determine the claim.

The arbitrator found for the applicant. The employers entered this appeal from his decision and the appeal now came on for argument.

Upon the appeal being opened, counsel for the applicant took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay direct to the Court of Appeal from an award of an arbitrator appointed by the county court judge. No application was made to the arbitrator during the hearing to state a case for the opinion of the county court judge, and though an application was made to him after he had made his award, he held that he was functus officio and could not entertain the application.

Compston, for the applicant in support of the objection.—The only right of appeal against the decision of an arbitrator appointed by a county court judge is that which is given by clause 4 of Schedule II. of the Act of 1897, which says the Arbitration Act of 1897 shall not apply to any arbitration under this Act; but the arbitrator may, if he thinks fit, submit any question of law for the decision of the county court judge, "and the decision of the judge on any question of law, either on such submission or in any case where he himself settles the matter, shall be final unless . . . either party appeals to a Court of Appeal. . . ." By clause 3 the arbitrator has all the powers of a county court judge. By rule 30 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, where an arbitrator submits a question of law to the county court judge, such submission must be in the form of a special case: See judgment of Collins, L.J., Leech v. Life and Health Assurance Association, 49 W. R. 482, [1901] 1 K. B., at p. 709.

Scott Fox, K.C. (with him Wilberforce), for the employers.—This appeal raises a question of law and comes therefore within the subject-matter of clause 4. By clause 3 of Schedule II. the arbitrator has all the powers of the county court judge. When his decision is given it carries with it all the limitations and incidents attendant to the decision of a county court judge sitting as arbitrator under the statute. One of those incidents is the right of "appeal by either party to the Court of Appeal." The reasonable view of the power given by clause 4 of Schedule II. to an arbitrator appointed as deputy for the county court judge to submit a point of law to the judge is that should he not do so, and the parties are dissatisfied, the parties are left to their right of appeal to this court. If the contention of the applicant is upheld, and the objection allowed, the effect of it would be that the award of a deputy arbitrator would be final in every case in which he refused or was not asked to state a special case during the course of the proceedings. The difficulty might be got over by this court treating the question now raised as a casus omissus from the provisions of the Statute. If the court takes that view, then they would have, under the general jurisdiction, power to give the words in clause 4 the suggested interpretation and hear the appeal on its merits: Rex v. Owen, 51 W. R. 168; [1902] 2 K. B. 436.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COLLINS, M.R.—I think this preliminary objection must succeed. Clause 4 provides the only way in which a decision of a tribunal of first instance constituted under the Act can be reviewed by us, and in that clause there is a distinction drawn between an arbitration before a county court judge and one that is held before an arbitrator. In the latter case the only way in which his decision can be reviewed is, if the arbitrator thinks fit, he may submit any question of law to the county court judge, whose decision upon such submission would, subject to the rules, be open to appeal. It was contended that the other clauses of the schedule, when looked at, showed that the Legislature must have intended to give an appeal from the decision of an arbitrator, and it was pointed out in particular that clause 3 gives to such an arbitrator all the powers of a county court judge. The answer to that contention is that the right of appeal is a matter outside the powers of the county court judge, and consequently outside the powers conferred on the arbitrator. The right of appeal from the judge arises aliunde, and the right to review the decision of an arbitrator must also arise aliunde. A strong appeal was made on the ground of the anomalies that would arise from holding that there was no direct appeal from the decision of an arbitrator appointed by a county court judge. We were asked to say in effect that the decision of such an arbitrator was open to the same review as that of the judge on the ground that this was a casus omissus, and that we should carry out the intention of the Legislature. But it must be remembered that the Act was necessarily passed before any of its provisions could be tried by the test of practice. It is probable that the Legislature had before them the view that proceedings under the Act were generally to be by arbitration before a committee or an arbitrator, and not proceedings of a technical legal character. The primary idea seems to have been an arbitration not open to review, and dealt with by non-technical process. An appeal was given in cases before the county court judge, but in other cases the only appeal given is where the arbitrator thinks fit to submit a question of law for the decision of the county court judge. It does not appear, in this view of the matter, that the present is a casus omissus, for it is reasonable to suppose that the intention of the Legislature was carried out in the provisions of the section. There is no provision for an appeal direct to this court from any arbitrator other than the county court judge, and we cannot enlarge our own rights. The only method of reviewing the decision of an arbitrator is by submission of a point of law to the county court judge, and consequently no appeal lies to this court, and the preliminary objection to our hearing this appeal succeeds.

ROMER, L.J., and MATHEW, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for applicant, Telfer Levianskey & Co., for Clegg & Sons, Sheffield.

Solicitors for the employers, Walker & Rowe, for F. Dwyer, Dewsbury.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Jan. 29, 30; Feb. 1, 2.

In re HANBURY.
HANBURY v. FISHER. (a.)

Will—Construction—Precatory trust—Gift beneficial or in trust—Absolute gift to wife "in confidence"—Gift over in default—Power of appointment—Absolute donee.

A testator gave, bequeathed, and devised to his wife the whole of his real and personal estate absolutely "in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit; and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces." The testator died childless, leaving a widow and seven nieces surviving him.

Held (by Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ., Cozens-Hardy, L.J., dissenting), that the widow took the property absolutely for her own benefit, and that no trust was created in favour of the nieces.

Per Cozens-Hardy, L.J.—Upon the construction of the will as a whole the widow took more than a life interest, and if all the nieces died before her the absolute gift would remain. But it was clear the testator intended that the nieces should take a share, either as she should determine or in default in equal shares.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J.

The facts were as follows: An originating summons was taken out before Kekewich, J., for the determination of the will of the late Right Hon. William Hanbury, M.P., the President of the Board of Agriculture.

The will was dated the 31st of October, 1893, was in the testator's own handwriting, and contained the following clause: "I give, bequeath, and devise to my very dear wife Ellen Hanbury the whole of my real and personal estate and property absolutely, in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit; and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament, I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces."

(a) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The testator further added: "I make this will in full confidence that my dear wife will show the affection of a daughter to my dear mother and stepfather." He appointed his wife and Charles Fisher executrix and executor of his will, and he gave the said Charles Fisher "such sum, not exceeding £150, as my dear wife may decide upon."

The testator died on the 28th of April, 1903, leaving his wife and seven nieces him surviving.

The summons was taken out by the widow against the said Charles Fisher, the other executor, and the seven nieces for the purpose of having the will properly construed.

Kekewich, J., held that under the will the widow was the donee absolutely for her own benefit of all the real and personal estate and property of the testator.

The nieces appealed.

Warmington, K.C., Vernon Smith, K.C., Christopher James, and Mark Romer, for the nieces.—It is a precatory trust. The testator expresses a wish that his nieces should have an interest in his estate. In re Bagshaw's Trusts, 25 W. R. 659, applies here. The testator's intention in the will must be looked to, and not from any particular words: In re Hamilton, Trench v. Hamilton, 43 W. R. 461, 577, [1895] 2 Ch. 370, 43 W. R. Dig. 200. A trust, however expressed, is obligatory. This will is an absolute gift to the wife, with a gift to such nieces as she selects living at her death, and in default of appointment, to all the surviving nieces. The whole will must be looked at In re Williams, Williams v. Williams, 45 W. R. 519, [1897] 2 Ch. 12, 29, 45 W. R. Dig. 174 (where Rigby, L.J., quoted the words of Lord Langdale, M.R., in Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 148, 172).

They also cited Sherratt v. Bentley, 2 My. & K. 149 157.

[VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Williams on Executors, 9th edit., vol. 2, at p. 934.]

Haldane, K.C., Warrington, K.C., and Austen-Cartmell, for the widow.—The main idea of the will was to give the widow an absolute and unfettered discretion in the disposal of the property. "Devise" does not mean to "appoint." [STIRLING, L.J.—Does not "in full confidence" impose some restriction?] It means to express the motive of the absolute gift. There is no power of appointment.

They cited Holmes v. Godson, 8 W. R. 415, 8 D. M. & G. 152, 159, 8 W. R. Dig. 118.

Vernon Smith, K.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 2.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read his judgment. [His lordship stated the will, and continued:] I will for the purpose of my judgment first assume that the words in this will following the words "in full confidence" do not, having regard to recent decisions, constitute a trust in favour of the nieces. Now, if that is so, the main question which we have to decide is whether the words "and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament, I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces," impose a condition which is repugnant to the previous absolute gift, or whether these words should be construed as creating an executory devise or gift over after an absolute gift. Now, in the first place, if you read the words from "I give and bequeath" down to the word "absolutely," and omit the words from "in full confidence" down to but exclusive of the words "and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament, I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces," it seems to me impossible to construe those latter words as creating an executory devise or gift over, or otherwise than as repugnant to the absolute gift and devise to the wife. It was argued that if we take into consideration the words "in full confidence . . . that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit," this justifies us in reading the words "in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will and testament" as if they were "in default of any such disposition," and it is said that if we do this the direction "in default of such disposition" really constitues a devise or gift over in favour of the nieces who shall survive the widow. In the first place, the words are not "any such disposition," and in my opinion it cannot be said that there is anything in the will which renders it necessary to interpolate that word "such," except the fact that the words of the will, read as they stand, contain a direction inconsistent with the law, founded on principles of public policy, which says, that in the event of an owner in fee dying intestate the estate shall go his heir, and in the case of personal property to his next-of-kin; or, to put it shortly, contains a direction which defeats the course of devolution which the law provides as incident to an absolute interest. My observation is, of course, quite apart from the question whether the words of this will, taken as a whole, create a trust binding on the conscience of the widow as owner in fee of the realty, or absolute owner of the personalty. Holmes v. Godson, 8 W. R. 15, 8 D. M. & G. 152, 159, and in particular the judgment of Turner, L.J., seems to me, if properly applied, to govern this case, and to justify thus far my conclusion. Now, is there a trust in favour of the nieces? The law appears to me now to be this—that a gift, followed by such expressions as "in full confidence," will not by mere force of the words create a trust. You must take the will which you have to construe and see what it means—see, that is, what is the intention of the testator as expressed in his will, and answer the question "aye" or "no," according to the intention of the testator as expressed by that will. I will first deal with the considerations arising on this will which favour the trust, and then with the words which go to negative it. The words "in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself" favour a trust, because they suggest that the wife is not to dispose of the corpus, but to keep it till her death; but this is a very lame mode of that which is really inconsistent with the ordinary use of the word "absolutely," which primâ facie means in a will unfettered in respect of any condition or trust. Next we have the words "I hereby direct," which are certainly consistent with a trust, but, it may be observed, are inconsistent with the word "absolutely." Lastly, there is the bequest "I give to Charles Fisher such sum, not exceeding £150, as my dear wife may decide upon." This can hardly be said to favour a trust otherwise than in the sense that it goes to negative the absolute property of the widow. But I cannot think that there is really anything in this point, especially as the sentence, taken as a whole, is evidence of the wish of the testator that his wife's discretion should control everything. I think I ought to add in favour of the trust that there does not seem to me to be any uncertainty of fund or object. On the other hand, the word "absolutely" certainly goes to negative a trust imperative on the widow, and the words "in full confidence" in immediate collocation with the word "absolutely" go to emphasize that word, as if the words had been "in full confidence nevertheless that my very dear wife will use the property as I should have done." I cannot easily bring myself to the conclusion that this form of words would be used by any one who at the same time intended to impose any obligation on his wife. Again, the words "in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament" seem to me unnatural, if a trust was intended, although, of course, they are not so absolutely inconsistent with the trust as they would have been if the words had been "any disposition," omitting the words "by her will or testament." Then the testator directs that "all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will" shall be divided, &c., which looks very much like an attempt by him to control the disposition of property which he had intended she should absolutely acquire under his will. Again, he uses in the clause relating to the personal relations of the widow with his mother the words "in full confidence" when he obviously could not have intended to create a trust. Then there is the general form of the will, which seems to me to exclude any intention by the testator to bind his wife by imperative obligations. In the case of the gift of money to go to his sister, where he did intend an imperative obligation, he carefully excludes this money from the property which is to go to his wife absolutely. On the whole I think there is no trust, and no executory devise or gift over, but merely a forgetfulness by a testator, who intended to give to his wife an unfettered absolute property, of the rule of law which prevents him when he has made such a gift from controlling the subsequent devolution of the property thus acquired by his gift. I ought to add that I have considered that part of the argument in which it was contended that, according to the true construction of the will, the wife took a life estate, with a power of appointment, and I think that cannot be supported. The result is that the judgment of Kekewich, J., will be affirmed.

STIRLING, L.J.—I have come to the same conclusion, and substantially for the same reasons, but having regard to the difference of opinion which unfortunately exists in the court, I think it is right that I should state in my own way the reasoning which has brought me to take the view which I have just expressed. We have to deal with a will which is the workmanship, as I understand, of the testator himself, or at all events of someone not skilled in the law, and certainly it is expressed in such a way as to give occasion to great difficulty in ascertaining the real meaning of the testator. He begins with a disposition which is absolutely clear if it stood by itself: "I give, bequeath, and devise to my very dear wife Ellen Hanbury the whole of my real and personal estate and property absolutely"; but later on there are words which appear strongly to indicate an intention on the part of the testator that in certain events the property so given to the widow absolutely should go over to his surviving nieces. He says that in a certain event, which I shall refer to in a moment, "I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces," and to my mind the real question which we have to deal with is, What is the event on which that gift over was to take place? It was admitted by the counsel for the nieces that if the will had run thus: "I give, bequeath, and devise to my very dear wife Ellen Hanbury the whole of my real and personal estate and property absolutely," and that had been followed by the words, "and in default of any disposition thereof by her will or testament I hereby direct," and so forth, the gift in default of any disposition of the property by the wife by her will or testament would be repugnant and void in law. In my opinion this admission was well founded, and is in accordance with the law laid down in Holmes v. Godson. It was admitted, on the other hand, by counsel for the widow, that if the will had run thus: "I give, devise, and bequeath to my very dear wife Ellen Hanbury the whole of my real and personal estate and property absolutely, and if one or more of my nieces shall survive my said wife, then at her death to such one or more of them as she shall by will select, and in default of such selection to all my said surviving nieces in equal shares," the gift over in favour of the surviving nieces would have been perfectly good, and would have taken effect by way of executory devise and bequest in the event of any niece surviving. An example of such a gift is to be found in Crozier v. Crozier, 21 W. R. 398, L. R. 15 Eq. 282, 21 W. R. Dig. 278.

Now, the argument for the nieces consisted substantially in an endeavour to bring the case under the last category to which I have referred. They are, however, met with this great difficulty, that the event on which the testator has in terms said that the property acquired by his wife is to go over is not the event of any of the nieces surviving his widow, but the event of his widow failing to make any testamentary disposition. To escape from this difficulty it was said that the will must be read as a whole, and that weight must be given to the clause of which up to this point I have not taken any notice—namely, "in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit." Unquestionably the whole will must be read together, and that clause must be taken into consideration. It was contended that this being done the will ought to be read as if the word "such" had been inserted before the word "disposition," so that the gift would take effect only in the event of the testator's widow failing to dispose of his property by will in favour of one or more of the surviving nieces. I confess that during the argument I was much impressed by this contention, and if I thought that this really expressed the intention of the testator, I should have been very willing to have given effect to it. But after careful consideration I cannot find enough in this will to enable me so to hold. The insertion of the word "such" appears to me entirely to alter the complexion of the will, and to afford an indication that the testator's intention was that his widow should not be at liberty to make a testamentary disposition of his property except in favour of one or more of the surviving nieces. Reading the will as it stands, and by the light of the view taken by the majority of the Court of Appeal in In re Williams as to the effect to be given to such expressions as "in full confidence," I am unable to find that the testator has given such an indication. It appears to me that all the testator intended to do was to provide against the possible intestacy of his widow, and that he has in this respect made a mistake as to the law—a mistake which is not infrequently found in the testamentary dispositions of persons who make their own will. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal fails.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., read his judgment: This case affords a striking instance of the difficulty of construing a will drawn by a layman, although at the first glance the language used seems clear and free from ambiguity. The testator was a man of large property, real and personal. He left a widow but had no child. Among his nearest relations were his nieces. It is apparent that he was minded to benefit his wife, in whom he had full confidence. It is equally apparent that he desired that such of his nieces as should survive his wife should, directly or indirectly, derive benefits under his will.

Now, it is contended on the part of the widow that the gift to her is absolute and free from any trust, condition, or gift over, and that in so far as the testator has expressed a "confidence" that she will devise her absolute property in a particular way, no binding effect can be attributed to it, and that the final direction in the event of her not making any disposition thereof by will is repugnant and void: vide Holmes v. Godson, 8 W. R. 15, 8 D. M. & G. 152. On the part of the nieces it is contended that there is a clear gift on the widow's death in favour of the surviving nieces equally, subject to a power of appointment by will given to the widow enabling her to distribute the property between the nieces in different proportions.

Upon the whole I think the widow's contention cannot prevail. I do not doubt that she takes more than a life interest. Should all the nieces predecease her her absolute interest will remain. But the surviving nieces, if any, are sufficiently indicated as the persons to take after her death. Effect can be given to this overriding intention without unduly straining the language. There are several points which tend to support this view. In the first place, the testator seems to have contemplated that, although his widow would use the property, it would remain intact at her death. In saying this I of course do not refer to things quæ usu consumuntur. Use and enjoyment, as distinguished from disposition of the capital, is what the testator's words indicate. This alone would not suffice to cut down or destroy her primâ facie title as absolute owner, but it cannot be wholly disregarded. In the second place, the words "at her death she will devise to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit" do not necessarily import a disposition by her of her own property, but may well be read as an appointment by her of his property. No technical words are required for either the creation or the exercise of a power, if the intention is clear. In the third place, the words "in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will" seem from the context necessarily to require the insertion of the word "such" before "disposition." In the fourth place, there is the positive direction that, in the event of what I have called the special power of appointment not being exercised by the wife, all the property shall be equally divided among the nieces. You are not left, as frequently happens, to imply a gift, or to hold that the wife is bound to make an appointment. This express gift is the most distinguishing feature of the case. Lastly, I attach some slight importance to the final legacy to Charles Fisher of "such sum not exceeding £150 as my dear wife may decide upon." If she were the sole and absolute owner of the whole property, why this limit of £150? If the other view is adopted, there is an intelligible reason for the form of this bequest. Not more than £150 is to be taken away from the capital to which the nieces may become entitled.

The result is that, though, I need not say, not without considerable doubt, I do not find myself able to agree with the judgment of Kekewich, J., or my brethren Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Walker, Martineau, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondents, Patersons, Snow, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } July 5, 6, 18.

MELLOR v. WALMESLEY. (a.)

*Land by the sea—Foreshore—Accretion—Parcels in conveyance—"Situate on seashore"—"Bounded by seashore"—Meaning of "seashore"—Measurements and plans inconsistent with description—*False demonstratio—Hearsay evidence—Declaration in discharge of professional duty.

A conveyance of land described in the parcels as "situate on the seashore" and "bounded on the west by the seashore" passes all the land down to the foreshore—i.e., to the high-water mark of medium ordinary tides, notwithstanding that the plan on the deed shows a more restricted boundary which satisfies the measurements and contents given in the parcels.

The lord of a manor, of which the foreshore at B. was parcel, granted in 1864 two plots of land there to M. and H. respectively in fee. In each of the deeds the parcels described the plot as "situate on the seashore" and as "bounded on the west by the seashore." the northern, southern, and eastern boundaries being also named. The measurements from east to west and from north to south, and the contents correctly calculated from those measurements, were given, and agreed exactly with a rectangular figure representing the plot in a plan drawn on the deed, three sides of the figure corresponding with the north, south, and east boundaries named. The plan also showed a wavy line marked "sea coast," between which and the fourth or west side of the figure was a strip of land a few yards wide. It was proved that in 1864 the sea had sometimes covered this strip, and occasionally even washed over the plots as they were marked on the plans. Also, that the distance between the lines of high-water of ordinary spring tides and ordinary medium tides was about 100 yards, but the position in 1864 of neither of these high-water marks could now be ascertained. Since then the sea had gradually receded, leaving considerable accretion to the land. In an action by successors in title of the grantees against successors in title of the grantor to ascertain the true western boundary of plaintiff's land,

Held, that the word "seashore" was used in the deeds as equivalent to "foreshore," and as meaning that space, primâ facie, vested in the Crown, of which the landward limit was the line of medium high tide between the springs and the neaps; that the deeds thus contained an adequate description of what was intended to pass by them, which was not vitiated by errors in dimensions or quantity nor by inaccuracies in the plans; that the western boundary at the date of the grant was, and still remained, the seashore; and that any accretion belonged to the plaintiffs.

Levels taken by a deceased surveyor under contract with a local board not admitted in evidence.

This was the trial of an action by the respective owners in fee of two dwelling-houses and plots of land, situate by the seaside at Blundellsands, in the township of Great Crosby, in Lancashire, to have the seaward boundary of the said plots determined as against the defendants, by whose predecessor in title they had been granted, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from erecting a fence or committing trespass on the plaintiffs' land, and from excluding the plaintiffs from access to the sea. The claim involved the question of right to accretion of land by gradual recession of the sea.

The said plots had been respectively granted in 1864 to James Mellor and Thomas Huntington (who were the respective predecessors in title of the plaintiffs Mellor and the plaintiff Brown) by Nicholas Blundell, who was then lord of the manor of Great Crosby. The land comprising the plots was originally part of Great Crosby Marsh, and was allotted to the predecessor in title of Nicholas Blundell under an Inclosure Act, 52 Geo. 3, c. 6, the western boundary being given in the award as "the high-water mark on the strand or shore of the River Mersey," which was an arm of the sea. The foreshore was parcel of the manor.

(a.) Reported by R. HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The conveyance to James Mellor was dated the 30th of July, 1864, the parcels being as follows: All that piece of land situate on the seashore at Blundellsands, in the township of Great Crosby, in the county of Lancaster, and measuring in front thereto 93 yards or thereabouts, on the eastern boundary 93 yards or thereabouts, and running in rear or depth backwards on the north and south sides thereof respectively 77 yards or thereabouts, and containing in the whole 7,161 superficial yards or thereabouts, be the said several dimensions and admeasurements respectively a little more or less, which same piece of land is bounded on or towards the south by other land of the said Nicholas Blundell, on or towards the east by an intended new road of 15 yards in breadth to be called Burbo-bank-road, on or towards the north by Blundellsands-road, and on or towards the west by the seashore."

The conveyance to Huntington was dated the 17th of October, 1864, and the parcels were in identical terms with the foregoing, except that in this case the northern boundary (where the plots adjoined) was given as "land lately sold to James Mellor," instead of the Blundellsands-road.

The parcels in each deed referred to a plan drawn thereon in which the dimensions were the same as in the parcels, the plots being shown as abutting eastwards on the proposed Burbo-bank-road (which had since been made in the position intended), while towards the west, separated from the plots by a strip of sand a few yards wide, was a thick, black, wavy line, which was marked "sea-coast."

Each of the grantees erected a house on his plot, and afterwards built a wall separating the plot from the sands, and having an opening and steps by which to pass from the plot to the sands.

Nicholas Blundell died in 1894, and in the year 1902 the defendants, who were his devisees in trust, erected on the strip above mentioned a post and rail fence, excluding the plaintiffs from access to the sea.

The plaintiffs thereupon brought this action for a declaration that their respective premises were bounded on the west side thereof by the sea shore, and that they, as owners of the said premises, and their respective lessees and tenants, were respectively entitled to free access and egress to and from the sea, from and to the said premises respectively. They also asked for an order for the removal of the fence and an injunction restraining the defendants from erecting any fence on the plaintiffs' said premises or committing any trespass thereon or doing any act to obstruct or impede the said free access or egress. Their contention was that the defendants, as privies of Nicholas Blundell, were estopped by the deeds from denying that at the date thereof the premises comprised in and conveyed thereby immediately adjoined and were bounded on the west side by the seashore.

The tide at Blundellsands was subject to considerable variation. It was in evidence that in 1864 the sea had sometimes, even on a calm day, washed over the land not disputed to have been sold to Mellor and Huntington, and that it frequently reached the site of their walls. Also that the difference between high water of ordinary spring tides and high water of ordinary medium tides was about 100 yards, but the exact position of either of these lines of high water in 1864 could not be ascertained. A witness, called on behalf of the defendants for the purpose of identifying the first-named with the black wavy line on the plans, produced for that purpose a level book founded on surveys made by a deceased surveyor under a contract with the Great Crosby Local Board in 1864, and it was submitted this might be received in evidence as a declaration made in discharge of duty in the ordinary course of business or professional employment, but the court, on counsel for the plaintiffs objecting, ruled that the evidence was inadmissible.

It was proved that since 1864 the sea had gradually receded, leaving bare a considerable quantity of land opposite to the plaintiffs' plots, and the right to the accretion depended on the result of this action.

Neville, K.C., and Courthope Wilson, for the plaintiffs.—One question is, Suppose a discrepancy between parcels and plan in a conveyance, which ought to prevail? Another is this: When you grant land, describing it as "situate on the seashore," and as "bounded on or towards the west by the seashore," can you afterwards be heard to say that it is not so situate and bounded? We submit you cannot. They cannot here prevent the plaintiffs' land from extending to the foreshore, because the seashore is one of the boundaries. [SWINFEN EADY, J.—It comes to this, then, that seashore and foreshore are the same thing.] Seashore in these conveyances means foreshore, and has no other meaning. It is the space between high and low water mark, as laid down in Attorney-General v. Chambers, 2 W. R. 636, 4 D. M. & G. 206. "Seashore" is the proper legal term, used by Lord Hale (De jure maris, chap. 6), and "foreshore" is a term substituted for it. If the measurement is inconsistent with the boundaries it is falsa demonstratio, without which there is a proper description of the land conveyed. The contents are unnecessary. As to accretion in such a case as this, the line of high water is a fluctuating boundary, and the adjoining owner's boundary fluctuates with it.

They also cited Horne v. Struben, [1902] A. C. 454, 50 W. R. Dig. 20; Scratton v. Brown, 4 B. & C. 485, 498; In re Hull and Selby Railway, 5 M. & W. 327; Roberts v. Karr, 1 Taunt. 495, 503; Espley v. Wilkes, L. R. 7 Ex 298, 303; International Tea Stores Co. v. Hobbs, 51 W. R. 615, [1903] 2 Ch. 165; Llewellyn v. Earl of Jersey, 11 M. & W. 183, 189; Hall on the Seashore (2nd ed.) p. 8; and Moore on the Foreshore (3rd ed.) p. 674.

Levett, K.C., and O. Leigh Clare, for the defendants.—Lord Hale gives three definitions of seashore, but the word is also one of a general signification. A curious instance of its use in this sense is to be found in The Queen v. Gee, 1 E. & E. 1068, 1070, where in the questions for the decision of the court it is indiscriminately applied to different sections of the land from high-water of spring tides down to low-water of neap tides. The plaintiffs' own witnesses admit that in 1864 the sea only occasionally washed the outside of Mellor's wall, and at exceptional times came a few yards further, and that the foreshore, or line of high water of ordinary tides, was 100 yards lower down. The plans on the deeds show, by the wavy line, what is meant by the seashore or seacoast, and it is clearly not the foreshore. We are not estopped from relying on the true facts as disclosed by the plaintiffs' witnesses. Estoppel requires words of certainty, and when you find in the deeds two expressions—seashore and seacoast—and when writers so old as Lord Hale use "seashore" in three different significations, there is not sufficient certainty for an estoppel. Roberts v. Karr was a case of right of way only; here a right of property is in question. As to accretion, we admit that if the plaintiffs have a boundary up to the foreshore they must succeed.

They cited also Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & A. 268, 278, 299, 301.

Neville, K.C., in reply.—"Foreshore" is the equivalent of littus maris, and is the word used when "seashore" would be inapplicable, as in the case of a tidal river. Attorney-General v. Chambers shows the "shore" to be the ground between ordinary high and low-water mark. This also is what would pass by a grant of the seashore.

The grant must be construed most strongly against the grantor. He has conveyed land bounded by the seashore, and the defendants now want to say that it was bounded by other land of the grantor and not by the seashore. The effect of the grant cannot be limited by reference to the plan. It is falsa demonstratio. The words of grant by metes and bounds are to be relied on and one of these is a fluctuating boundary.

On the question of access he cited: Lyon v. Wardens, &c., of the Fishmongers Co., 25 W. R. 165, 1 App. Cas. 662; Attorney-General of Straits Settlement v. Wemyss, 13 App. Cas. 192; 36 W. R. Dig. 203.

Cur. adv. vult.

SWINFEN EADY, J.—The question to be determined in this action is whether the piece of land intervening between the western wall of the plaintiffs' premises and the sea belongs to the plaintiffs or to the defendants. The plaintiffs claim the whole of it; the defendants claim it, and have enclosed with a post and rail fence a part of it. No distinction has been drawn between the two adjoining properties, owned by the plaintiffs respectively.

The plaintiffs' premises are situated at Blundellsands, in Lancashire, and were conveyed to their predecessors in title, respectively, in fee in the year 1864 by the defendants predecessor in title, the late Mr. Nicholas Blundell, of Crosby Hall.

In the conveyance to the late James Mellor the land upon which Weston House has since been erected was described as follows: "All that piece of land situate on the sea shore at Blundellsands, in the township of Great Crosby, in the county of Lancaster, and measuring in front thereto ninety-three yards or thereabouts; on the eastern boundary ninety-three yards or thereabouts; and running in rear or depth backwards on the north and south sides thereof respectively seventy-seven yards or thereabouts, and containing in the whole 7,161 superficial yards or thereabouts, be the said several dimensions and admeasurements respectively a little more or less, which same piece of land is bounded on or towards the south by other land of the said Nicholas Blundell on or towards the east by an intended new road of fifteen yards in breadth to be called Burbo-bank-road on or towards the north by Blundellsands-road, and on or towards the west by the seashore, which said piece of land hereinbefore expressed to be hereby granted is more particularly delineated in the plan drawn on the back of these presents and therein marked with the letter A."

The plan shows a rectangular piece of land, with the exact dimensions given in the parcels figured upon it, and also shows a small strip some ten feet in width intervening between the land and what is called "sea coast" on the plan.

It appears that since 1864 a considerable accretion has occurred at the spot in dispute, and the question is to whom does the accretion belong. The gain has been slow and gradual. It is clear, from the case of In re Hull and Selby Railway, 5 M. & W. 327, that in all cases of gradual accretion which cannot be ascertained from day to day, the land so gained goes to the person to whom the land belongs to which the accretion is added, and vice versâ, both as between subject and subject, and as between Crown and subject. In that case Alderson, B., said: "Suppose the Crown, being the owner of the foreshore—that is, the space between high and low water mark—grants the adjoining soil to an individual, and the water gradually recedes from the foreshore, no intermediate period of the change being perceptible, in that case the right of the grantee of the Crown would go forward with the change. On the other hand, if the sea gradually covered the land as granted, the Crown would be the gainer of the land."

The question therefore is—to whom does the land belong to which the accretion has been added?

It was contended on behalf of the defendants that although the parcels in the conveyance describe the land as bounded on or towards the west by the seashore, the word "sea shore" was not used in its more restricted sense, or the third of the three meanings given by Lord Hale in his treatise De jure maris, chapter 6, and moreover that the plan on the conveyance showed a narrow strip of ground a few feet wide, intervening between the western boundary of the land conveyed and a thick, black, wavy line with the words "sea coast" written just beyond it, which indicated that the grantor did not intend granting the land right down to the water, the land conveyed being described and shown on the plan by exact dimensions which were satisfied without including the additional strip.

The real question is whether, according to the true construction of the deed, the land conveyed extends to the boundary of what is in legal intendment the seashore—namely that portion only of the land adjacent to the sea, which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flux and reflux of the tides.

It was established in Attorney-General v. Chambers, 2 W. R 636, 4 D. M. & G. 206, that in the absence of all evidence of particular usage, the right of the Crown to the seashore landwards, is, primâ facie, limited by the line of the medium high tide between the springs and the neaps. This is the seashore or foreshore, which is ordinarily and primâ facie vested in the Crown, subject to the rights of the King's subjects of fishing and navigation. In my judgment it is in this sense and meaning that the word is used in the conveyance, where the land conveyed is expressed to be situate on the seashore, measuring in front thereto 93 yards or thereabouts, and bounded on or towards the west by the seashore. The intention of the grantor, to be gathered from the language used in the deed, was to convey the land between the Burbo-bank-road on the east and the seashore on the west—otherwise the western boundary would have been described not as the seashore but as other land of the grantor.

Defendants contended that the black line shown on the plan on the conveyance was the high water mark of ordinary spring tide, that is, the bi-monthly spring tide occurring at full and change of the moon, and that the line of high water ordinary tide was 400 feet away. The defendants were, however, unable to prove the line of high water ordinary spring tide. They called for that purpose Mr. Goodison, a civil engineer and surveyor, formerly practising at Liverpool, but it appeared from his examination that he was unable to verify the figures of the survey, which were taken by his principal, Mr. Taylor. The actual line of high water spring tide, or high water medium tide, in 1864, at the spot in question has not been proved.

Even if the defendants had succeeded in showing that the thick black line on the plan was the line of high water spring tide in 1864, it would not have been of much assistance for the purpose of explaining the plan and reconciling it with the parcels in the deed, as there was still the intervening strip of ground to explain and account for. According to the plan the land would not even then be bounded on the west by the seashore, assuming that seashore extends landwards to the limit of high water spring tides.

There are still higher tides twice a year at the equinoxes, but according to the evidence these tides, about the date of the conveyances and afterwards, came considerably above the thick black line and above the strip, for Mr. J. A. Huntington remembered Blundellsands House being built, and when the first bricks were being laid on the site where the house itself still stands, the tide surrounded the people, who could not leave until it went down, and the bricks were laid where the tide had been. This was on a very calm day with no wind. As the plans for that house were passed by the Local Board on the 7th of March, 1865, this incident probably took place at the spring tides occurring at the vernal equinox in that year.

With regard to the other plot, upon which the house was not built until much later, Mr. James Mellor remembers seeing the sea come over a portion of their garden several times after Huntington's wall was built. These exceptional high tides came over a portion of the plots, which, on any construction of the deed, are included in the land conveyed.

The result is that no one of the three meanings of the word "seashore" given by Lord Hale would make the description of the property, as contained in the parcels, accurately fit in and accord with the plan. The intervening strip, to which the defendants attach so much importance, would prevent the land being bounded by the seashore. Having regard to the description of what was intended to be conveyed—namely, a piece of ground on the seashore—and to the east and west boundaries being given—namely, Burbo-bank-road and the seashore—I am of opinion that the deed contains an adequate and sufficient definition, with convenient certainty, of what was intended to pass by it—namely, all the land between the Burbo-bank-road and the seashore—or foreshore in the strict and legal sense and meaning, and accordingly that any erroneous statement as to dimensions or quantity, or any inaccuracy in the plan, will not vitiate the description or have any effect: see Morrell v. Fisher, 4 Ex. 591, 604; Doe d Smith v. Galloway, 5 B. & Ad. 43, 51; Llewellyn v. Earl of Jersey, 11 M. & W. 183, 189; Horne v. Struben, [1902] A. C. 454, Sheppard's Touchstone, 247.

I therefore decide that by the two conveyances the grantees acquired all the land of the grantor between the Burbo-bank-road and the seashore, and that the accretion to this land belongs to them, and that the western boundary of their land remains to-day what it was on the day of the grant—namely, the seashore.

Solicitors, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Payne, Frodsham, & Bewley, Liverpool; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Weld & Thomson, Liverpool.

Chan. Div. Warrington, J. } June 29, 30.

HARRIS v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN) (LIMITED). (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Restrictive covenant—Assignment of lease—Covenant by assignees to observe covenants of lease—Action by assignees—Injunction—Indemnity—Negative or positive covenant—Construction.

The usual covenant in an assignment of leaseholds on the part of the assignees to observe and perform the covenants and conditions of the lease, and keep the lessees, their assignors, indemnified against all claims and demands on account of the same, is to be construed as one of indemnity only, and the lessees are not entitled as of right to have the negative covenants specifically enforced against the assignees by injunction. And, if the lessor has not sued them or threatened them with proceedings in respect of the breaches of the covenants in the lease by the assignees, the lessees cannot obtain either an injunction against or damages from the assignees.

Semble, that the covenant by the assignees being affirmative in form, although to perform other covenants of a negative kind, is not a covenant which the court is bound to enforce by injunction.

A. let premises to B. for thirty years at a rent, B. covenanting (among other things) not, during the term, to make any alteration or addition to the premises. B. assigned the premises to C. (a company), which covenanted with him during the residue of the term "to observe and perform the covenants and conditions contained in the lease, and which henceforth on the lessees' part ought to be observed and performed, and keep indemnified" B., against claims and demands on account of the same. C., without B.'s leave, made certain alterations in the premises which were required for the convenience of the business carried on there. B. thereupon sued C. for an injunction to restrain it from altering, and for a mandatory injunction to restore the premises to their former condition. The lessor had not objected to the alteration or threatened B. with legal proceedings.

Held, that the covenant by C. was one of indemnity only, and that B. could not enforce it as of right against C. by injunction; and that, as B. was not threatened by his lessor, and had himself suffered no damage, he had no cause of action.

Action.

This was an action by the lessee under a lease containing restrictive covenants against their assignees, upon the usual covenant in the assignment as to the covenants of the lease and indemnity, and the question was whether the covenant was to be construed as merely one for indemnity or not.

In October, 1902, a house and premises, No. 162, Western-road, Brighton, were demised by a Mr. Broadbridge to the plaintiffs for a term of thirty years at the rent mentioned. The lease contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiffs not to make any alteration or addition whatever to the premises, except with regard to putting in a new shop front in the manner provided for.

On the 24th of June, 1903, the plaintiffs made an assignment of the premises for the residue of the term of thirty years to the defendants. The assignment contained a covenant by the defendant company as follows: "And the company hereby covenants with the vendors"—that was the assignors—"that the company, their successors, or assigns, will during the residue of the said term pay the rent reserved by the said indenture"—that was the indenture of lease of October, 1902—"and observe and perform the covenants and conditions therein contained, and which henceforth on the lessees part ought to be observed and performed, and will keep indemnified the vendors and each of them, and their and his estate and effects, from and against all claims and demands on account of the same."

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the same date the lessor, Broadbridge, demised the premises to the plaintiffs for a further term of forty-one and a-half years from the end of the term of thirty years. The defendants entered into possession of the premises, and carried on a large business there as chemists and druggists, and dealers in fancy articles. Finding that the water-closet accommodation was insufficient for the convenient carrying on of their business they constructed three new closets upon the first floor, making new windows, and carrying the soil pipes outside the building. This was done without the consent of the plaintiffs. As the defendants refused to re-instate the premises in their former condition, the plaintiffs brought this action against them, claiming an injunction to restrain them from making alterations upon the premises, a mandatory injunction directing them to remove the new closets, and to restore the premises to their former condition, and also claiming damages.

Cave, K.C., and Curtis Price, for the plaintiffs.—We have a right to enforce the covenant entered into by the defendants. It is affirmative in form but negative in substance, as it is to observe the covenants in the lease, one of which is not to make any alteration in the premises.

Rowden, K.C., and Maughan, for the defendants.—A covenant of this kind has never been enforced by injunction against assignees; no such case can be found in the books. The contract is one of indemnity merely: Poole and Clarke's Contract, 48 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 588, 20 Times L. R. 604. Moreover, this is an affirmative covenant which the court has a discretion not to enforce by injunction. The covenant will not be construed so as to prevent alterations necessary for the convenient occupation of the premises, Bickmore v. Dimmer, 51 W. R. 180, [1903] 1 Ch. 158. Further the alterations must have been made to comply with the regulations of the sanitary authority, and the court will not under such circumstances either grant an injunction or give damages against the occupiers for complying with these requirements.

They also referred to Lloyd v. Dimmack, 26 W. R. 458, 7 Ch. D. 398, and Moule v. Garrett, 18 W. R. 697, L. R. 5 Exch. 132.

WARRINGTON, J.—It has been argued on behalf of the defendants that the alteration made by the defendants was not a breach of the covenant contained in the lease, for the reason that it was necessary for the convenient and proper carrying on of their business, the carrying on of which was contemplated at the time the lease was taken. On that point I will merely say this: There is a good deal to be said for that contention, and I do not propose to express my opinion one way or the other. It was further contended on behalf of the defendants that, assuming what was done to be a breach of the covenant, the court would not interfere by injunction, inasmuch as it was said that the alteration was necessary in order to comply with the requirements of the proper sanitary authority. On that point, also, I express no opinion. There remains the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to require the defendants specifically to perform the negative covenant contained in the lease. In considering that question one must first see what is the position of the plaintiffs in reference to the person who can enforce the covenant in the original lease—the lessor. He clearly cannot obtain an injunction against the plaintiffs for two reasons—one, because they have committed no breach of it. The breach has been committed by persons over whom they have no control. And he cannot obtain a mandatory injunction requiring them to restore the premises to their original condition, because they are not in possession, and have no right to possession. He cannot therefore obtain an injunction against the plaintiffs in any form. He can, however, obtain damages from them if he has suffered any by breach of the covenant. Next, under the circumstances, and having regard to the relative positions of the lessor and the original lessees after the assignment, what is the true meaning and effect of the covenant contained in the assignment upon which the plaintiffs are suing? That covenant seems to me to be one of indemnity, and indemnity only. If I were to hold that that covenant was intended to require the assignees, as between themselves and the original lessees, specifically to perform every covenant in the lease, I must say that it is quite immaterial whether the lessor objects to the breach, or whether he waives the right to enforce the covenant. It would be an independent covenant entered into with the lessees by the assignees, and I should have nothing to do with anything else. I cannot so hold. I think that the true object of the covenant entered into in an assignment of a lease is to indemnify and protect the original lessee against breaches of the covenants in the lease under which he holds. There is admittedly no direct reported decision on this question; there is no case where a lessee has sought to enforce by injunction against an assignee a negative covenant contained in a lease. I have to guide me only an expression of opinion by Vaughan Williams, L.J., concurred in by the other lord justices in the recent case of Poole and Clarke's Contract. That case related to the sale of freeholds which were subject to negative covenants entered into by the vendor, and the Court of Appeal held that the vendor was entitled to a covenant of indemnity only, and qualifying words for that purpose were added to the covenant, and Vaughan Williams, L.J., expressed the opinion that on the sale of leasehold property the words of the covenant ought to be construed as having the effect of the covenant as qualified in the case before them. That decision and dictum assist me in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are not entitled as of right and as covenantees in the assignment to enforce specifically the negative covenants of the lease; they are entitled to an indemnity only. If the lessor sues them for damages for the breach which has been, or is alleged to have been, committed by the assignees, they have a right to indemnity from the assignees, but the covenant goes no further. The lessor has not sued the lessees, and I see no reason to suppose from the letters he has written that he intends to sue them, and consequently the lessees have no present right of action against the assignees. It has been further contended that the covenant in the assignment is not a negative covenant at all, and there is a good deal to be said for that contention. If I were driven to a decision, I should conclude that it was not a negative covenant within the rule binding the court to enforce it by injunction. I think that there is a difference between the case where a vendor or lessor takes from the purchaser or lessee a covenant that a certain thing shall not be done and where all he insists on is that certain other covenants shall be performed. If the lessees had insisted upon, and the assignees had entered into the same covenants as those contained in the lease, there would have been a negative covenant contained in the assignment which the lessees could have enforced by injunction. This may be repeating what I have already decided. The covenant here is in terms affirmative, and that distinguishes it from the cases where the court has no discretion in granting an injunction.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors, Nye, Norton, & Clowes, for J. K. Nye & Treacher, Brighton; Tyrrell, Lewis, Lewis, & Broadbent.

K. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) May 19; June 6.

AKROKERRI (ASHANTI) MINES (LIMITED) v. ECONOMIC BANK (LIMITED) AND NOBBS.
BIPPOSU MINES (LIMITED) v. SAME.
ATTASI MINES (LIMITED) v. SAME.
ASHANTI MINES (LIMITED) v. SAME. (a.)

Bank—Stolen cheques—Payment for a customer—Collecting agents—Holders for value—Special crossing—"Holder"—Addition to crossing—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 77, sub-section 3; ss. 78, 82.

An account was opened by N. with stolen cheques at the defendant bank, and stolen cheques were paid in from time to time N. knew at the time of opening the account that the bank's practice was not to discount bills, and that cheques paid in would not be paid against until cleared. On paying in the counter-clerk entered the amount in a book and handed the cheque and paying-in slip to a clerk, who entered the particulars in the waste-book. The cheque was put in a box, the paying-in slip was then given to the ledger clerk, who posted then and there the amount in the ledger to the credit of N.'s account. The cheque was crossed generally. The bank specially crossed the cheque to W. D. & Co., and impressed on the cheque the words "account Economic (defendant) Bank." From time to time the cheques were forwarded to W. D. & Co. for clearance. If no notice of dishonour from W. D. & Co. was received by 9 a.m. on the day following the defendant bank entered the amount of the prior day's cheques to the credit of N. in his pass-book, but under the date of the paying in of the cheque. The defendant bank had a current account, which was in credit, and a loan account, which was in debit, with W. D. & Co. W. D. & Co. held securities exceeding in value the debit to the loan account, specifically deposited by the defendant bank. There was no negligence or want of good faith on the part of the defendant bank.

Held, that the ledger entries did not constitute the bank holders for value. The bank was an agent to collect, and received payment for their customer. The clearing agents had no lien on the cheques by reason of the debit to the loan account. The impressed words did not amount to an addition to the crossing. The defendant bank could cross specially the cheques crossed generally: section 77 (3). "Holder" does not necessarily mean "holder for value."

Action tried in the Commercial Court.

This was an action to recover damages for money had and received, and for conversion.

Scrutton, K.C., and Bateson, for the plaintiffs.

Hamilton, K.C., G. Wallace, and A. M. Talbot, for the defendants.

The following cases were referred to: Capital and Counties Bank v. Gordon, 51 W. R. 671, [1902] 1 K. B. 242, [1903] App. Cas. 240; Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers, 39 W. R. 657, [1891] App. Cas. 107; Clutton & Co. v. Attenborough & Son, 44 W. R. 114, [1897] App. Cas. 90; and Colonial Bank v. Exchange Bank of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, 34 W. R. 417, [1886] 11 App. Cas. 84.

The facts sufficiently appear in the following considered judgment.

BIGHAM, J.—These actions are brought to recover damages for the alleged conversion of a number of cheques, and the question which I have to determine is whether the defendants are entitled to the benefit of the statutory defence provided by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, which enacts that: "Where a banker in good faith and without negligence receives payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself, and the customer has no title or a defective title thereto, the banker shall not incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment." The facts are as follows: The four plaintiff companies had one office in London, which they used in common. They had also one clerk, a man named Nobbs, who acted as their secretary. From time to time Nobbs fraudulently procured the directors to sign cheques drawn on the companies' bankers and made payable to the order of different persons with whom the companies were in the habit of doing business. The cheques were crossed generally and then handed to Nobbs to be forwarded to the different payees. Nobbs, however, kept them for himself, forged the endorsement of the payees, and then handed them to the defendant bank, by whom they were forwarded to the plaintiff's bankers for presentation and payment. They were duly paid, and Nobbs received the proceeds from the defendants. Nobbs has been prosecuted to conviction for the frauds, and is now in prison. To assist him in carrying out his frauds Nobbs had opened an account with the defendants, and the better to conceal his frauds he opened it in a false name—that of Evans. The defendant bank carries on a business which may be described as that of a deposit or savings bank. By the memorandum of association its objects are described as being "to carry on the business of a bank, but so that a company shall not engage in any discount operations or make loans or permit any overdrafts"; and the investments which it is permitted to make are limited to certain selected statutory trustee securities. When Nobbs opened his account he read and signed an application form, which contained, amongst other things, a notice that no bills would be discounted and that cheques would not be paid against until cleared. The course pursued when Nobbs brought the stolen cheques to the defendants was this. He filled up a paying-in slip and handed it, together with the cheque, to the defendants' counter clerk; this clerk entered the amount in a book kept for such purposes at his desk. The clerk then gave the cheque and the paying-in slip to another clerk, who entered the particulars in a book called the waste-book. The waste-book clerk then put the cheque into a box and handed the paying-in slip to the ledger clerk, who posted the amount there and then in the ledger to the credit of the Evans (Nobbs) account. The box was used as a receptacle for all cheques brought to the bank by customers, and it was cleared several times in each day by a messenger, who took the cheques to the bank of Messrs. Williams Deacon & Co., to whom the defendants specially crossed the cheques. Beneath the special crossing the defendants by a rubber stamp impressed on the cheques the words "account Economic Bank." Thus when the cheques reached Williams Deacon & Co.'s hands they were specially crossed to those bankers, and bore in addition the words mentioned. It appears that the defendants had two accounts open with Messrs. Williams Deacon & Co.—one a current account, which was always in credit, and the other a loan account, which was always in debit. Williams Deacon & Co. always held securities belonging to the defendants exceeding in value the debit to the loan account. These securities were deposited specifically to secure that account. There were occasions when the amount to the debit of the loan account exceeded the amount to the credit of the current account. On the evening of the day on which Williams Deacon & Co. received the cheques they attended with them at the Clearing-house and cleared them. By 9.30 on the next morning the defendants were informed by Williams Deacon & Co. whether any, and, if any, which, of the cheques had been dishonoured, and if no such advice arrived the defendants assumed that the cheques had been duly honoured by the banks on which they were drawn; and it was then, and not till then, that the defendants entered the amounts to the credit of the customers of the pass-books. The entries, however, though in fact made the day after the cheques were received, were dated as of the day of the receipt of the cheques.

(a.) Reported by W. T. TURTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Thus Nobbs never got a credit entry in his pass-book until after the defendants had received the proceeds of the cheque which he had handed to them. The defendants acted throughout in good faith and without negligence. On the foregoing facts, it is quite clear that at common law the defendants by what they did rendered themselves liable to account to the plaintiffs for the proceeds of the cheques. They had no more right as against the plaintiffs to deal with the cheques than had the thief from whom they got them. Then arises the question whether they have a statutory defence, and that depends upon whether the facts bring them within the protection afforded by section 82 of the Act. Now it is clear that the cheques were crossed cheques when they were received by the defendants. They were, therefore, of the kind to which the section applies. It is also clear that the defendants were bankers within the meaning of the section and that they acted in good faith and without negligence. So far, therefore, the defendants are within the terms of the section. What is it, then, that remains to be considered? Two things. The first, whether, when the defendants received payment, they did so for their customer; the second, whether there are any circumstances outside the receipt of payment which render them liable for the conversion. The section says that, in order to afford a protection to the defendant banker, the payment must have been received by him for a customer; and the section then limits the protection to the liability incurred by reason of such receipt. Then, first, did the defendants receive the payment for their customer? The expression "for a customer" has been often discussed, and its meaning has now been made fairly plain by judicial interpretation. Money is received for a customer in those cases only where the banker acts as a mere agent to collect. Thus it is that if the banker as between himself and his customer becomes the holder of the cheque for value before he collects it, he does not receive the payment for his customer, he receives it for himself. The question, then, resolves itself into this—Did the defendants receive the payments as mere collecting agents for Nobbs? It is argued that they did not, because they gave Nobbs credit for the value of the cheques in their ledger before they sent them to Williams Deacon & Co. for collection, and, so it is said, made themselves holders of the cheques for value. But, in my opinion, the entries in the bank's ledgers did not make the bank holders for value. The entries neither conferred any right on Nobbs to draw the money out of the bank, nor did they fix the bank with any liability to pay the money to him. It might have been different if the entries had been made in the pass-book, for that book belongs to the customer and the entries made in it by the bank are statements on which the customer is entitled to act. Suppose, after the ledger entries were made, but before the cheques were sent to Williams Deacon & Co., Nobbs had asked the defendant bank to return him the cheque, could the bank have refused to comply with his request? Could they have said, No; the cheques are ours, for by entries in our ledger of which you know nothing we have given you credit for the amounts and so have made ourselves holders for value? I think not. Nobbs, having regard to the terms on which the business was carried on, would have been entitled to say that he had never assented to any transfer of the cheques, and that therefore they were still his. In truth, notwithstanding the ledger entries, no credit was given to Nobbs, nor was it intended that he should have credit; and, if Nobbs had demanded the money, the defendants would have been entitled to refuse to pay it to him. I think, therefore, that the defendants, in forwarding the cheques to Williams Deacon & Co., and so obtaining the money, were acting as mere agents to collect and were receiving the payment for their customer within the meaning of the section of the Act. The next question is—Have the defendants done anything more than receive payment so as to make themselves liable in trover? It is said that they have. It is argued that, in sending the cheques to Williams Deacon & Co.'s bank, they subjected them to a lien in the hands of that bank by reason of the existence of the loan account, the debit to which at times exceeded the credit to the current account, and that this constituted a conversion. This is, in my opinion, a fanciful point. Williams Deacon & Co. received the cheques for the purpose of collection merely, and, therefore, could not use them except to present them for payment. They could not have detained them; they were bound at once to present them for payment. Moreover, Williams Deacon & Co., as bankers, would know that the cheques paid in to them might be the property of the defendant bank's customers (as, in fact, these particular cheques were), and they could have no right to exercise a lien on securities which were not the property of the defendants. Then it was said that the defendants had made an unauthorized alteration in a material part of the cheques by changing the general crossing into a special crossing. No doubt the Act of Parliament by section 78 makes the crossing a material part of a cheque and forbids any addition to or alteration of it except as authorized by the Act. But section 77, sub-section 3, expressly provides that where a cheque is crossed generally the holder may cross it specially. It was argued that this authority does not extend to mere agents for collection, and that "holder" must be read as meaning only holder for value. I see no reason, however, for limiting the operation of the section in such a way. Holder does not necessarily mean a holder for value. The expression includes every person who is in lawful possession of the instrument, and therefore includes an agent for collection. Lastly, it was said that the defendants had made an unlawful addition to the crossing by stamping upon the cheque the words "account Economic Bank." But, in my opinion, these words are not in any sense an addition to the crossing. A crossing is a direction to the paying bank to pay the money generally to a bank or to a particular bank, as the case may be, and when this has been done the whole purpose of the crossing has been served. The paying bank has nothing to do with the application of the money after it has once been paid to the proper receiving banker. The words "account A.B." are a mere direction to the receiving bank as to how the money is to be dealt with after receipt. The truth is, that all that the defendants did from the moment they received the cheques down to the time when they received the payment was done in the ordinary course of business for the purpose of safely and properly obtaining payment; and as section 82 protects the banker from the common law liability which the receipt of the payment would involve, it also of necessity protects him from any consequences which might otherwise flow from the steps properly taken to obtain the payment. This is made quite clear in the opinion of Lord Macnaghten, delivered in the House of Lords in the case of Capital and Counties Bank v. Gordon, [1903] A.C., 240. It is to be found at page 241: "The only question, therefore, is, Did the banks receive payment of these cheques for their customer? If they did, it is obvious that they are relieved from any liability which perhaps might otherwise attach to some preliminary action on their part taken in view and anticipation of receiving payment. The section would be nugatory—it would be worse than nugatory—it would be a mere trap if the immunity conferred in respect of receipt of payment, and in terms confined to such receipt, did not extend to cover every step taken in the ordinary course of business and intended to lead up to that result."

Judgment for the defendants, with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Stibbard, Gibson, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard & Sons.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } Feb. 16.

"THE MINNETONKA." (a.)

Ship—Collision — Damage — Freight — Substituted expense.

A steamship chartered by the Admiralty to carry a cargo of coal from the Tyne to Capetown came into collision with another steamship and put into the Thames for repairs. By agreement between the Admiralty and the owners of the cargo, the cargo was unshipped in London and sold, and a sum of £1,000 was paid by the Admiralty to the owners of the vessel as a "substituted expense" in lieu of the estimated greater expense of storage and re-shipment on board the vessel after the necessary repairs had been effected. Both ships were held to blame for the collision, and at the reference a moiety of the claim by the owners of the collier was paid by the owners of the other vessel, but at the reference as between that other vessel and the Admiralty, the claim made by the Admiralty for an adjuster proportion of the sum paid as "substituted expense" was disallowed by the registrar.

The Court, affirming the report of the registrar, held that that claim failed, because it was not a loss sustained by the Admiralty directly in consequence of the wrongdoing of the other vessel.

Motion.

This was an objection by way of motion to a report of the assistant registrar disallowing a claim by the Admiralty against the owners of the steamship Minnetonka for a sum of £276 18s. 4d., which they had agreed to pay the owners of the steamship Uskmoor (Messrs. Runciman & Co.) as consideration for the abandonment of a voyage on which The Uskmoor had been chartered by the Admiralty to carry coal to Cape Town, and which voyage had to be abandoned by reason of a collision in the Channel between The Uskmoor and The Minnetonka, in which collision both vessels were held to blame.

Acland, K.C., for the Admiralty.

Aspinall, K.C., and Pritchard, for the owners of The Minnetonka.

The following cases were cited in the course of the arguments: Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 10 C. P. 125; The Milan, Lush 388; The Marpessa, [1891] P. 403.

BUCKNILL, J., in giving judgment, said: This is an application by way of appeal from the report of the registrar, on the ground that that report cannot be supported in law. The matter has been before the court on two occasions. On the last occasion the court referred the matter back to the registrar to find whether any part of the amount claimed by the Admiralty, namely £276 18s. 4d., had in fact been allowed to The Uskmoor, in the reference between the owners of The Uskmoor and the owners of The Minnetonka, for the damage sustained by The Uskmoor in consequence of a collision between those two ships, for which they were found both to blame. The registrar has found that this amount has not been dealt with in that reference. Now, the story of the case must be gone into in order to get clearly at the facts—the real, the true facts. The Uskmoor was on a voyage from somewhere on the N.E. coast to South Africa, if I recollect rightly, laden with a cargo of coal, the property of the Admiralty. During that voyage she came into collision with The Minnetonka, in consequence of which The Uskmoor herself was damaged, and also, to a certain extent, the cargo on board. The Uskmoor then was taken to the River Thames to be repaired, and when it was ascertained that the repairs would take some time—it was estimated about six to eight weeks—the Admiralty and the owners of The Uskmoor very properly put their heads together to see what could be done in the circumstances for the benefit of each other. The Admiralty, in the first instance, suggested that the voyage should be abandoned. The charterers, it may be said, to make it quite clear, would have been contributors to the general average which would have had to be made up in the long run. On the 12th of June the Admiralty wrote to the owners of The Uskmoor asking them what arrangements they had made with regard to the storage of the cargo on shore or in lighters during the repairs to the ship. The letter ended with this paragraph: "Until the receipt of the surveyor's report it will not be possible to form a definite opinion as to the best course to pursue, but I should be glad to have your views as soon as possible as to the advisability of selling the coal and considering the voyage terminated, so as to avoid the expense of storage and re-shipping." The expense of re-shipping would not fall entirely upon the cargo owners, but the expense of storage, subject to general average, would fall upon the cargo owners. That letter was answered by the owners of The Uskmoor on the 13th of June, when they said the repairs would take about eight weeks, and it was impossible for them to advise the Admiralty as to the termination of the voyage, but that if the Admiralty wished to do so they (the owners of The Uskmoor) would do so for the consideration of 7s. 6d. per ton "as full freight." Then on the 17th of June the surveyor writes to the Admiralty, amongst other things, this: "Messrs. Runciman will now accept £1,000 in respect of the freight, which is a trifle more than Messrs. Hopkins,

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Son, & Cookes had advised you. They had written their letter to you before they could make sure whether it was £996 or £1,000. All that is wanted from you now is a letter to Messrs. Runciman stating that you offer them £1,000 in respect of the freight and stating that you will give them another cargo to replace the present one at the 16s. rate, or more if freights should rise in the meantime, of course they giving you proper and sufficient notice when the vessel is expected to be ready, and Messrs. Runciman to have the option of refusing the offer." On the same day Messrs. Hopkins, Son, & Cookes wrote to Mr. Lowrey, the secretary of the Salvage Association, and they put the case in this way: "We beg to inform you that we have carefully considered the facts and circumstances of this case, and assuming the voyage is terminated in London, and the shipowners are paid 4s. 6d. per ton, equal to £996 15s., this amount will be apportioned as per annexed sheet as a substituted expense in lieu of hire of barges: Six weeks £664 10s., shifting ditto £106 17s. 6d., re-shipping cargo £424 10s. 10d., total £1,195 18s. 4d.; and in addition to the above expenses which will be saved, the expected deterioration by breakage of coal, estimated by Mr. Lewis at about 10 per cent. at least on Cape Town values, and 2 per cent. for loss of weight, is avoided. It will, of course, be necessary to obtain the agreement of all interests to this arrangement." Then Mr. Lowrey wrote on the 18th of June to Messrs. Hopkins: "The ship underwriters have approved our suggestion that the coals should be sold in London and that the loss of the freight should be treated as a substituted expense." The keynote of this case is that the loss of freight should be treated as substituted expense. Then comes the letter of the 18th of June, setting out the figures of general average and freight, and there is the final letter from the Admiralty, on the 20th of June, to Messrs. Runciman: "Your expression 'to pay the shipowners the sum of £1,000' is understood as meaning the sum of £1,000 will be apportioned on the basis stated in my letter of the 18th of June, and a claim made by the owners upon the Admiralty for the portion thereof falling upon the cargo when the general average adjustment is completed." Now, when this case first went before the registrar and merchants it was put in this way: That the shipowners and the Admiralty had agreed that the sum of £1,000 was to be paid for freight. It is so mentioned in the shorthand writer's notes, which I have before me. To-day the claim is not for freight at all. It is not put as having anything to do with freight. That part of the case has been put on one side. It is put in this way: That the Admiralty have entered into an obligation, binding upon them, to pay to the owners of the ship £276 odd, and that there was a good consideration for that binding contract between them for the abandonment of the voyage. When ones comes to test the claim, to see what it really means, it is put in this way: If the voyage had not been abandoned, and if the cargo had remained in barges, and if the Admiralty had become responsible to pay, as they would have become, for the hire of the barges, the amount would have certainly exceeded £276. It may be that this is a sum of money which, in the circumstances of this case, the shipowners could recover from the Admiralty—I do not say it would be so or would not be so—but it does not follow that, because the Admiralty would be liable to the shipowners, therefore the Admiralty can put that liability over on to the backs of the owners of The Minnetonka, the wrong-doing ship. The only way in which the Admiralty can recover against the owners of The Minnetonka here is by showing a certain loss, or a sum of money lost; that is, a certain loss in consequence of a reasonable arrangement by the person having a claim minimising the claim which he has against the wrong-doer. But it must be a loss and a liability arising directly in consequence of the wrong-doing act of The Minnetonka. If it is not, then it is not recoverable. Is it the case here? I think it is not. The real facts, as I find them to be, and as I understand them to be, and as to them there is really no contradiction, are these: The abandonment of the voyage; as between the shipowners, The Uskmoor, and the cargo owners the Admiralty, a sum of money greater than £276 agreed to be paid; It is said now that that sum of money is a sum of money for which the Admiralty would have been liable in an event which has not in fact occurred; and to be a sum of money which directly represents a loss by the Admiralty occasioned by the wrongdoing of The Minnetonka. I think all these suggestions are not according to the real facts—that what really has happened is this, that the parties have put their heads together and come to some hypothetical figure not based upon fact, and not representing a direct loss or damage by the Admiralty in consequence of the wrongdoing act, and that therefore the Admiralty cannot make good this claim as against the owners of The Minnetonka. But there is something else, which, though not absolutely conclusive, is very important to be considered, and that is that this £276, if the Admiralty could make the owners of The Minnetonka pay it, would be payable to The Uskmoor, and the owners of The Uskmoor have already been paid all the loss they have sustained in consequence of the collision; and although it is possible to conceive a case where the owners of a ship may make a profit by the wrong-doing of the other party, in this case I think the owners of The Uskmoor would not be entitled to make such a profit, although, of course, that would not be answerable by the Admiralty if the Admiralty had undertaken, for good consideration, to pay a sum of money to The Uskmoor. In conclusion, it seems to me that this case fails, because it has not been made out in law or in fact to be a loss sustained by the Admiralty directly in consequence of the wrong-doing act of The Minnetonka. Therefore, my judgment must be against the appellants, and I confirm the report No. 1 of the registrar, and also report No. 2, with the result that those who have succeeded must have the costs of this appeal, and also of the second reference.

Solicitors for the Admiralty, The Treasury Solicitor.

Solicitors for the owners of The Minnetonka, Pritchard & Sons.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). May 16.

SAMUEL v. JARRAH TIMBER AND WOOD-PAVING CORPORATION. (a.)

Mortgage—Redemption action—Security for loan—Stipulation that mortgagee may purchase at fixed price within definite time—Clog on equity of redemption.

A stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagee is to have the option of purchasing the whole or any part of the mortgaged security within a definite time is invalid, as a clog on the equity of redemption, and the rule applies to a mortgage by a company of its debenture stock.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 439, [1903] 2 Ch. 1) affirmed.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., Romer and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) affirming the decision of Kekewich, J. (50 W. R. 601, [1902] 2 Ch. 479).

The facts are stated in the judgments.

P. O. Lawrence, K.C. (J. W. Manning with him), for the appellant.—The case is like Reeve v. Lisle, 51 W. R. 576, [1902] A. C. 461, and different from Bradley v. Carritt, 51 W. R. 636, [1903] A. C. 253. The stipulation amounts to an agreement to lend a further sum on specified terms. The appellant is entitled to damages, if not to specific performance: South African Territories v. Wallington, 46 W. R. 545, [1898] A. C. 309.

Warrington, K.C. (Martelli with him), for the respondents.—In Noakes & Co. v. Rice, 50 W. R. 305, [1902] A. C. 24, there was no interference with the right of redemption. This is at any rate an infringement of the doctrine "once a mortgage always a mortgage."

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., replied.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I regret that in this case the state of the authorities leaves me no alternative than to affirm the judgment of Kekewich, J., and the Court of Appeal. A perfectly fair bargain made between two parties to it, each of whom was quite sensible of what they were doing, is not to be performed because at the same time a mortgage arrangement was made between them. If a day had intervened between the two parts of the arrangement, the fact of the bargain which the appellant claims to be performed would have been perfectly good and capable of being enforced, but a line of authorities going back for more than a century has decided that such an arrangement as that which was here arrived at is contrary to a principle of equity, the sense or reason of which I am not able to appreciate, and very reluctantly I am compelled to acquiesce in the judgments appealed from.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—By letter dated the 11th of of June, 1901, the appellant, Henry Samuel, offered to advance to the respondent company £5,000 at 6 per cent. upon the security of £30,000 first mortgage debenture stock of the company, subject to his having "the option to purchase the whole or any part of such stock at 40 per cent. at any time within twelve months." Other conditions were attached to the offer, but they are not material for the purpose of the present question. Then followed this provision: "The advance to become due and payable with interest at thirty days' notice on either side." The offer was accepted by the company. The stock was duly created and registered in Samuel's name. Within the period of twelve months, and before the company gave notice of intention to repay the advance, Samuel claimed to purchase the whole of the mortgaged stock at the agreed price. Thereupon the company brought this action, asking for redemption and a declaration that the option was illegal and void. Both Kekewich, J., and the Court of Appeal decided in favour of the company. Having regard to the state of the authorities binding on the Court of Appeal, if not on this House, it seems to me that they could not have come to any other conclusion, although the transaction was a fair bargain between men of business without any trace or suspicion of oppression, surprise, or circumvention.

It is, I think, unnecessary to consider what the true construction of the agreement between Samuel and the company may be. The result would have been precisely the same if the agreement had in terms declared that the option was not to continue after repayment. The law undoubtedly is that a condition such as that in question, if legal and binding at all, must come to an end on repayment of the loan.

In the Court of Appeal the question was treated as governed by the principle, of which Noakes v. Rice is a recent example, that on redemption the mortgagor is entitled to have the thing mortgaged restored to him unaffected by any condition or stipulation which formed part of the mortgage transaction. That principle, I think, is perfectly sound. But, in my opinion, the question here depends rather upon the rule that a mortgagee is not allowed at the time of the loan to enter into a contract for the purchase of the mortgaged property. This latter rule, I think, is founded on sentiment rather than on principle. It seems to have had its origin in the desire of the Court of Chancery to protect embarrassed landowners from imposition and oppression. And it was invented, I should suppose, in order to obviate the necessity of inquiry and investigation in cases where suspicion may be probable and proof difficult. I gather from some general observations made by Lord Hardwicke in Mellor v. Lees, (1742) 2 Atk. 494, that he would have been disposed to confine the rule to cases in which the court finds or suspects "a design to wrest the estate fraudulently out of the hands of the mortgagor" and to cases of "common mortgage"—that is, as I understand it, mortgage of land by deed. It will be observed that in the later case of Toones v. Consett, (1745) 3 Atk. 261, which is often referred to for a statement of the rule, his lordship speaks only of "a deed of mortgage"—an instrument which perhaps rather lends itself to imposition; for no one, I am sure, by the light of nature, ever understood an English mortgage of real estate. In Vernon v. Bethell, 2 Eden 110, 113, Lord Chancellor Northington, then Lord Henley, laid down the law broadly in the following terms: "This court, as a court of conscience, is very jealous of persons taking securities for a loan, and converting such securities into purchases. And therefore I take it to be an established rule, that a mortgagee can never provide at the time of making the loan for any event or condition on which the equity of redemption shall be discharged, and the conveyance absolute. And there is great reason and justice in this rule, for necessitous men are not, truly speaking, free men, but to answer a present exigency, will submit to any terms that the crafty may impose upon them." This doctrine, described by Lord Henley as an established rule nearly a hundred and fifty years ago, has never, so far as I can discover, been departed from since or questioned in any reported case. It is, I believe, universally accepted by text writers of authority. Speaking for myself, I should not be sorry if this House could have seen its way to modify it so as to prevent its being used as a means of evading a fair bargain come to between persons dealing at arm's length and negotiating on equal terms. The directors of a trading company in search of financial assistance are certainly in a very different position from that of an impecunious landowner in the toils of a crafty moneylender. At the same time, I quite feel the difficulty of interfering with any rule that has prevailed so long, and at present I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion at which the Court of Appeal has arrived.

I am therefore of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Lord LINDLEY.—The letter of the 11th of June, 1901, written by the defendant to the plaintiff company, contained an offer of a loan of £5,000 to the company upon certain terms, and this offer and the terms proposed were accepted by the company by their letter in answer dated the 14th of June, 1901.

These two letters constituted an agreement between the parties. The main provisions are as follows—namely, first, that the defendant should forthwith lend the company £5,000 at 6 per cent., redeemable on thirty days' notice by either party. Secondly, that the defendant should have as security £30,000 of the company's first mortgage debenture stock transferred to him. Thirdly, that the directors of the company should elect a nominee of his on their board. Fourthly, that the defendant should have the option of purchasing the whole or any part of such stock at 40 per cent. at any time within twelve months. Fifthly, that he should have a further option—namely, in the event of the company at any time raising further capital or selling its undertaking for shares or stocks of another company, the defendant should have the option of underwriting the taking up of such new capital, or shares, or stocks at a commission of 10 per cent.

The first question is, what is the true nature of this agreement? Is it a mortgage with an option to purchase, or is it a conditional sale? Or is it an agreement giving Samuel an option to hold the debenture stock as a mortgage or a purchase? It appears to me to be clearly a mortgage with an option to purchase. A loan of £5,000 on security was what the company wanted, and what Samuel agreed to let the company have on terms. They were not bargaining for anything else. As soon as the £5,000 was advanced, and the debenture stock was placed at Samuel's disposal. he was in the position of mortgagee of that stock. He had the rights of a mortgagee, and the company had the rights of a mortgagor. There was that reciprocity and mutuality of remedies which distinguish a mortgage transaction from a conditional sale from other transactions more or less resembling a mortgage, but not really constituting a mortgage. The transaction was, in my opinion, a mortgage, plus, amongst other things, an option to purchase, which, if exercised by the mortgagee, would put an end to the mortgagor's right to redeem—that is, would prevent him from getting back his mortgaged property. This was the view taken by Mr. Justice Kekewich, and by all the members of the Court of Appeal, and I am unable myself to view the transaction differently.

In Lisle v. Reeve, [1902] 1 Ch. 53, Buckley, J., suggested some instances in which he considered a mortgagee might validly stipulate for an option to buy the equity of redemption; but although his decision was affirmed first by the Court of Appeal and afterwards by this House—Reeve v. Lisle—the affirmance proceeded entirely on the fact that the agreement to buy the equity of redemption was no part of the original mortgage transaction, but was entered into subsequently, and was an entirely separate transaction to which no objection could be taken. It is plain that the decision would not have been affirmed if the agreement to buy the equity of redemption had been one of the terms of the original mortgage. The Irish case, In re Edwards' Estate, (1861) 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 367, is to the same effect.

I cannot help thinking that both parties intended that the two options to purchase the £30,000 debenture stock and to underwrite further capital or debenture stock, if issued, were to be exercisable even after payment off of the £5,000. But the decision of this House in Noakes v. Rice and Bradley v. Carritt conclusively show that, whatever might have been intended, Samuel could not have been entitled to exercise either option after payment of his loan. But these decisions, and the previous decision of Salt v. Northampton (Marquis), 40 W. R. 529, [1892] A. C. 1, emphatically recognize the old doctrine, "once a mortgage always a mortgage," which is too well settled to be open to controversy. Lord Hardwicke said, in Toomes v. Conset: "This court will not suffer, in a deed of mortgage, any agreement in it to prevail, that the estate become an absolute purchase in the mortgagee upon any event whatsoever." But the doctrine is not confined to deeds creating legal mortgages. It applies to all mortgage transactions. The doctrine "once a mortgage always a mortgage" means that no contract between a mortgagor and a mortgagee, made at the time of the mortgage and as part of the mortgage transaction—or, in other words, as one of the terms of the loan—can be valid if it prevents the mortgagor from getting back his property on paying off what is due on his security. Any bargain which has that effect is invalid, and is inconsistent with the transaction being a mortgage. The principle is fatal to the appellant's contention if the transaction under consideration is a mortgage transaction, as I am of opinion it clearly is.

Then it was contended that, as the property mortgaged was debenture stock issued by a limited company, the case did not fall within the principle to which I have been referring. I confess my inability to follow the argument on this point. Debenture stock is usually a sum of money charged on the assets of the company issuing it. It may be redeemable or irredeemable, in which case it is not a mortgage at all. But whether redeemable or irredeemable, it is capable of being made a security for money lent upon it. It can be mortgaged as well by the company which issues it as by an ordinary holder. I can discover no reason for treating a mortgage of debenture stock as something so different from other mortgages as to render the principle "once a mortgage always a mortgage" inapplicable to it.

In my opinion the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Dale, Newman, & Hood.

Solicitor for the respondents, H. Percy Becher.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — July 18.

MILLETT v. BALLARD. (a.)

County court—Appeal—Action of ejectment—Action for recovery of tenements—Premises of annual value not exceeding £20—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 59, 120, 138, 139.

An appeal lies from the county court to the High Court in all actions of ejectment on title, as distinguished from actions by landlords against tenants for the recovery of tenements under sections 138 and 139 of the County Courts Act, 1888, even though the annual value of the premises does not exceed £20.

Earl of Shrewsbury v. Garfield, 60 L. J. Q. B. 765, 40 W. R. Dig. 63, overruled.

Appeal from a decision of a Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.), in an appeal from a county court.

The question was whether an appeal lies to the High Court from the judgment of a county court in an action of ejectment where the annual value of the land does not exceed £20.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The action was brought in the Wandsworth County Court for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of a piece of land for a term of years granted by an indenture of lease dated the 22nd of December, 1898. The plaintiff also claimed possession of the piece of land.

By the said indenture the defendant had demised to one Harry Marchant the house and premises called "Dunraven," situate in Oakdale-road, Streatham, in the county of Surrey, having a frontage on the said road of 24 ft., or thereabouts, for the term of ninety-nine years from the 25th of December, 1898.

By virtue of various mesne assignments, and ultimately by an indenture dated the 12th of July, 1903, the term of years became vested in the plaintiff for the residue of the term.

The defendant was owner and occupier of premises adjoining "Dunraven" and also fronting on Oakdale-road. The piece of land in question was a narrow strip of land on the boundary between "Dunraven" and the defendant's premises, having a frontage of three feet, or thereabouts, on Oakdale-road.

The plaintiff alleged that the said piece of land was part of the premises demised by the indenture of the 22nd of December, 1898, and that the defendant had wrongfully taken possession of it and fenced it in.

The annual value of the piece of land did not exceed £20.

The county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff, and no leave to appeal was granted by him.

The defendant appealed to the Divisional Court.

The plaintiff took the preliminary objection that by section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, no appeal lay without the leave of the county court judge.

The Divisional Court, on the authority of Earl of Shrewsbury v. Garfield, 60 L. J. Q. B. 765, 40 W. R. Dig. 63, allowed the objection, and dismissed the appeal, but gave leave to the defendant to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

J. Eldon Bankes, K.C. (S. G. Lushington with him), for the defendant.—The defendant had an absolute right to appeal to the High Court without any leave from the county court judge. The question depends on the true construction of section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888. That section begins by saying that any party to a county court action who is dissatisfied with the determination of the county court judge on any point of law may appeal therefrom to the High Court subject to certain conditions as to giving notice or otherwise. There then follows this proviso: "Provided always, that there shall be no appeal in any action of contract or tort, other than an action of ejectment or an action in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament shall have come in question, where the debt or damage claimed does not exceed twenty pounds, nor in any action of replevin where the amount of rent or the damage or value of the goods seized does not exceed twenty pounds, nor in any action for the recovery of tenements where the yearly rent or value of the premises does not exceed twenty pounds . . . unless the judge shall think it reasonable and proper that such appeal should be allowed, and shall grant leave to appeal." The first part of that proviso is not accurately expressed. It speaks of "any action of contract or tort other than an action of ejectment." An action of ejectment is not an action of either contract or tort. But if the words "other than an action of ejectment or an action in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament shall have come in question" are read as being in a parenthesis, then the meaning seems to be fairly clear, viz., that an appeal shall not lie in an action of contract or tort where the debt or damage claimed does not exceed £20, but that in an action of ejectment an appeal shall lie. The words in the parenthesis are an exception to an exception. The words in the third clause of the proviso, "any action for the recovery of tenements," have a special meaning and do not cover actions of ejectment. They refer to the two classes of cases dealt with by sections 138 and 139 of the Act—viz., actions brought by landlords against tenants to recover possession of small tenements where either the term has expired or been determined by notice, or the rent has been in arrear for half a year. A distinction has been drawn in all the County Courts Acts between actions of ejectment and actions by landlords against tenants to recover possession of small tenements. In the original County Courts Act of 1846, jurisdiction in ejectment was expressly excluded by section 58, while jurisdiction to entertain actions by landlords against tenants to recover possession of small tenements on the expiration of the term was given by section 122. The County Courts Act, 1850, while extending the general jurisdiction from £20 to £50, by section 1 preserved the exclusion of ejectment, and a right of appeal was given for the first time by section 14. The distinction drawn in the original Act between the two classes of actions, viz., actions of ejectment and actions to recover possession of small tenements, was thus preserved, and was further maintained in the County Courts Act, 1856, which, by section 25, gave jurisdiction by consent of the parties in actions involving questions of title, and by sections 50 and 52 gave jurisdiction in actions by landlords against tenants to recover possession of small tenements where the term had expired or been determined by notice, or the rent had been in arrear for half a year, and by section 68 gave an appeal in all actions for the recovery of tenements where the yearly rent or value of the premises exceeded £20. The County Courts Act, 1867, by section 11, for the first time gives jurisdiction in ejectment, and by section 13 allowed an appeal in all actions of ejectment. The County Courts Act, 1888, which has repealed all the earlier Acts and has consolidated the law, continues the distinction which has been drawn throughout the legislation, dealing with actions of ejectment in section 59, and with actions for recovery of possession of small tenements in sections 138-145. The distinction is further emphasised in the County Court Rules, 1903, ord. 5, r. 3. The proper way of construing section 120, therefore, is to read the words "any action for the recovery of tenements" in the narrow sense of any action in which a landlord seeks to recover possession of premises from a tenant where the term has been determined or rent is in arrear, and to read the first clause of the proviso as giving in all actions of ejectment properly so called an absolute right of appeal without any limitation. The case of Earl of Shrewsbury v. Garfield was wrongly decided.

Montague Shearman, K.C., and H. B. D. Woodcock, for the plaintiff.—This is an action for the recovery of a tenement. There is no ground for the distinction attempted to be drawn between an action of ejectment and an action for the recovery of tenements. The word "tenements" is used in section 59 of the Act of 1888, which deals expressly with actions of ejectment. It occurs twice in the collocation "lands, tenements, or hereditaments." Lower down in the section the expression "lands or hereditaments" is used, but the meaning must be the same. The word "tenements" is generally understood as being a word of the widest possible import in real property law, and as being equivalent to lands. Section 120 does not give an absolute right of appeal in any class of action. In actions of contract, tort, and ejectment alike it gives only a qualified right of appeal.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from the decision of a Divisional Court on an appeal from the judgment of a county court in an action of ejectment. The question arose whether an appeal lay as a matter of right from the county court judge to the High Court. The court below felt themselves bound by a previous decision of a Divisional Court in the case of Earl of Shrewsbury v. Garfield. In that case it was decided that "no appeal lies to the High Court, without leave, from the decision of a judge of a county court in actions for the recovery of tenements, whether the parties be landlord and tenant or otherwise, or whether the title to such premises be in question or not, where the yearly rent or value thereof does not exceed £20." The court below, though it appears from their language that they did not altogether assent to the principle of that case, nevertheless felt themselves bound by its authority. They accordingly dismissed the defendant's appeal on the preliminary objection taken by the plaintiff that no appeal lay, and gave the defendant leave to appeal on that point to this court. The contention on the part of the defendant is that throughout the whole course of county court legislation a distinction has always been observed between, on the one hand, actions of ejectment on title or actions in which the title to hereditaments is concerned, and, on the other hand, actions for recovery of small tenements involving disputes between landlord and tenant in cases where either the term has expired, or a half year's rent has become in arrear. The County Courts Act, 1888, repeals all the earlier County Courts Acts, and consolidates the law on the subject. Section 120 is in these terms:—"If any party in any action or matter shall be dissatisfied with the determination or direction of the judge in point of law or equity, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence, the party aggrieved by the judgment, direction, decision, or order of the judge may appeal from the same to the High Court, in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be for the time being provided by the rules of the Supreme Court regulating the procedure on appeals from inferior courts to the High Court. Provided always that there shall be no appeal in any action of contract or tort, other than an action of ejectment or an action in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament shall have come in question, where the debt or damage claimed does not exceed £20, nor in any action of replevin, where the amount of rent or the damage or value of the goods seized does not exceed £20, nor in any action for the recovery of tenements, where the yearly rent or value of the premises does not exceed £20, nor in proceedings in interpleader where the money claimed or the value of the goods or chattels claimed, or of the proceeds thereof, does not exceed £20, unless the judge shall think it reasonable and proper that such appeal should be allowed, and shall grant leave to appeal." If we have regard to that section alone, which now regulates the right of appeal from the county court, it seems to me that, according to the natural construction of that section, actions of ejectment, and actions in which the title to any hereditament is called in question, are excepted out of legislation, which limits the right of appeal to cases in which more than a certain amount of value is involved. If that exception is created by the words "other than an action of ejectment, or an action in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament shall have come in question," what interpretation ought to be put on the subsequent words referring to actions for the recovery of tenements where the yearly rent or value of the premises does not exceed £20? They can only be read as referring to something different from what has been already dealt with as actions of ejectment; for it is obvious that a distinction is intended to be made between the two classes of actions. The statute excepts actions of ejectment from the rule limiting the right of appeal, while with regard to the other class of actions it makes a special provision depending on the amount of the value involved. Primâ facie, then, an action of ejectment such as the present, which is simply an action of ejectment on title, is not covered by the words as to actions for recovery of tenements, and in the case of an action of ejectment properly so called there is a right of appeal which is absolute and unfettered by conditions. But the matter does not stop there. We are entitled to look at the earlier County Courts Acts to see if this primâ facie view is borne out by any provisions to be found in them, and we may also derive assistance from the County Court Rules, which, though not a part of the Act, are a contemporaneous exposition of the law framed by qualified experts and confirmed by the highest authority. Ord. 5, r. 3, of the County Court Rules, 1903, adopts the distinction I have referred to. It is as follows: "Actions brought to recover possession of tenements under the provisions of section 138 or section 139 of the Act shall be distinguished as actions for the recovery of possession, and actions brought under section 59 of the Act shall be distinguished as actions of ejectment. It was pointed out that section 59 uses the word "tenements" twice. That is true, though lower down it speaks of "lands and hereditaments" only. But at any rate, the rule draws a distinction between the two classes of cases, those under section 59 and those under sections 138 and 139. And, further, when we look at the sections in the Act itself, we see that sections 138 and 139 come under the heading "Replevin: Recovery of Tenements," whereas section 59 is in a group of sections headed "Jurisdiction and Law." If we pass to the earlier legislation, for which the present is a substitute, we find what I have stated to be the primâ facie view confirmed. In the County Courts Act of 1846 jurisdiction in ejectment properly so called was excluded altogether, but provision was made for the recovery of possession of small tenements in cases where a tenant held over after the legal determination of his tenancy. The Act of 1856 extended this provision to cases where a landlord had a right by law to re-enter and obtain possession on the ground of non-payment of rent. Ejectment properly so-called was introduced for the first time in the Act of 1867, and the distinction between the two classes of cases was maintained. That Act gave an appeal on a point of law in all actions of ejectment, whereas under the Act of 1856 there was a special provision limiting the right of appeal in actions for the recovery of tenements to cases where the yearly rent or value of the premises exceeded £20. It is not necessary to go in detail through all the provisions of the earlier Acts. But the conclusion seems to me to be clear that, when the Legislature came to enact section 120 of the Act of 1888, they were dealing with what were then two well-known classes of actions—viz., actions of ejectment and actions for recovery of tenements, and that, having at the beginning of the proviso excluded actions of ejectment from the rule limiting the right of appeal, they did not intend by the subsequent words as to recovery of tenements to deal again with the class of actions which they had already excluded. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, James White & Leonard.

Solicitors for the defendant, Bramall & White.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) June 28.

GARBUTT v. STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE, &c., OF DURHAM. (a.)

Police—Pension—"Approved service"—Continuous service—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), s. 1.

By section 1 of the Police Act, 1890, "every constable in a police force (a) if he has completed not less than twenty-five years approved service . . . shall . . . be entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life."

Held (by Collins, M.R., and Stirling, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting), that "approved service" means continuous service, and that, therefore, in computing the period of twenty-five years, separate and broken periods of service cannot be added together.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 527, [1904] 1 K. B. 522) affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a divisional court upon a case stated by the quarter sessions for the County of Durham upon an appeal by the appellant, a retired police constable, against the refusal of the Standing Joint Committee of the County to grant him a pension under the provisions of the Police Act, 1890.

The case is reported ante, p. 527, [1904] 1 K. B. 522, where the facts are set out.

The Divisional Court held that the "approved service" of a police constable within section 1 of the Police Act, 1890, to entitle him to a pension, must be continuous service, and they therefore dismissed the appeal.

June 25, 27.—Pickersgill and J. A. Johnston (Simey with them), for the appellant.—Section 1 (a) of the Police Act, 1890, gives a constable a right to a pension after "twenty-five years approved service." The section does not say that the service must be continuous. The certificate given under section 4 states that the appellant has had approved service for over twenty-five years. The Legislature could easily have said that the service must be continuous if they had intended it to be so. Words ought not to be imported into statutes (per Patteson, J., in King v. Burrell, 12 A. & E. 460, at p. (468 unless, without such introduction, something manifestly absurd or repugnant would follow: per Parke, B., in Williams v. Roberts, 1 Cr. M. & R. 676, at p. 680; Grey v. Pearson, 5 W. R. 454, at p. 460, 6 H. L. 61, at p. 106; Hough v. Windus, 32 W. R. 452, at p. 454, 12 Q. B. D. 224, at p. 229. Here nothing absurd or repugnant will follow by not importing into section 2 words which are not there. It is said that other sections of the Act show that service in section 1 must be construed as meaning continuous service. It would be wrong to go through the Act minutely for the purpose of seeing whether there is not some section which is unnecessary if the view contended for the appellant is correct. Any such sections may have been inserted ex abundanti cautelâ to meet what was felt to be a very common case. For instance, section 4, sub-section 4, deals with the case of a constable moving from one police force to another; and sub-section 5 with the case of a constable who is in the army reserve and is called out for training or service; and section 5, sub-section 5, deals with the case of a constable being incapacitated for duty. In those cases the Legislature made provision ex abundanti cautelâ so as to prevent the right to a pension being affected. Moreover, section 4, sub-section 5, is not merely surplussage, because it says that "on returning to the police force" the constable shall be entitled to reckon his approved service before he was called out, thus giving him a right to return to the force. So also section 5, sub-section 5, is not entirely superfluous, because it entitles a constable to reckon the period of the break as part of his approved service. It would be a dangerous mode of construction to rely upon isolated provisions to control and alter the unambiguous language of the section which confers the right. The decision in Walker v. Simpson, [1903] A. C. 208, 51 W. R. Dig. 115, supports this view. Under the former Acts—3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 11, as to county police, and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 32, s. 9, as to borough police—continuous service was not necessary to entitle a constable to a pension. This latter Act repealed 11 & 12 Vict. c. 14, s. 2, which made continuous service necessary, the Legislature thus showing that continuous service was unnecessary. Further, even if service must be continuous, the appellant was an "existing constable" within section 30, sub-sections 8, 9, of the Police Act, 1890, whose rights were preserved to him by section 36, sub-section 2. Secondly, the respondents, by placing the appellant in the long and faithful service class (which according to the Durham police regulations means twenty years' service) more than five years before he retired, are estopped from saying that his service is not sufficient to entitle him to a pension. Thirdly, the certificate is conclusive evidence that the appellant's service was diligent and faithful service. Section 4, sub-section 2, says that the certificate is to be "sufficient evidence." That means conclusive evidence: Board of Trade v. Sailing Ship Glenpark (Limited), 51 W. R. 554, [1903] 2 K. B. 324. This point was not decided in the Court of Appeal (1904, 1 K. B. 682). The certificate was the certificate of the police authority, as it was given under a general authority conferred by them. Barraclough v. Greenhough, 15 W. R. 934, L. R. 2 Q. B. 612, and Hewitt v. Taylor, 44 W. R. 431, [1896] 1 Q. B. 287, depended upon the special provisions of the Acts there under consideration.

Montague Shearman, K.C., and Meynell, for the respondents.—The word "service" in section 1 of the Act of 1890 is capable of meaning continuous or non-continuous service. That being so, one can look at other sections of the Act to see which meaning is the true one: per Lord Herschell in Colquhoun v. Brooks, 38 W. R. 289, at p. 291; 14 App. Cas. 493, at p. 506. Section 4, sub-section 4, and section 21, allow broken service to count in the case of a police constable removing from one force to another. Section 4, sub-section 5, deals with a meritorious class of constables, namely, those in the army reserve, and makes an exception in their favour. So also section 5, sub-section 5, makes an exception in the case of constables who are incapacitated for duty. The special provisions show that section 1, which is the general enacting action, refers to continuous service. Where the Legislature intended that the service need not be continuous, it said so: see the Political Offices Pension Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 60), s. 4; and the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 50) s. 4. Secondly, the certificate is not conclusive. By section 4, sub-section 1, the police authority—which by section 33 and schedule 3 means, in the case of a county, the standing joint committee of the quarter sessions and the county council—has to certify as to the approved service, and by sub-section 2 the chief officer of the police—that is, the chief constable—has merely to certify as to the period of service. The certificate of the chief constable only gives the period of service after making the requisite deductions. He has only to work out the arithmetical calculation. The police authority are the proper persons to give a certificate of "approved service." If the chief constable's certificate were conclusive, then section 10 would be rendered nugatory. The word "sufficient" means primâ facie sufficient: Barraclough v. Greenhough; Reg. v. Fordham, 22 W. R. 85, L. R. 8 Q. B. 501; Hewitt v. Taylor. The onus of proof is merely shifted. The decision of Bigham, J., in Board of Trade v. Sailing Ship Glenpark (Limited), is the only decision in which the words "sufficient evidence" were held to mean conclusive evidence, and that decision ought not to be followed. When the case was in the Court of Appeal the point was not decided, but the court did not indicate any approval of the decision upon that point. With regard to the former Police Acts, a police constable before the Act of 1890 had no right to a pension. The police authority, if they thought fit, might grant him one. The Police Act, 1890, gave a constable a right to a pension subject to certain conditions. The judgment of the Divisional Court was therefore right.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Pickersgill replied.

June 28.—COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal upon a case stated by quarter sessions, and it raises two questions. The first question raised is whether the service, to entitle a constable to a pension, must be continuous service. The second question is whether the certificate is conclusive so as to debar the police authority who wish to impugn it from giving evidence to the contrary of it. The first question turns upon the construction of the Police Act, 1890. The Divisional Court have held that the appellant is not entitled to a pension, upon the ground that the Act contemplates continuous service as a condition entitling a constable to a pension, and that in the present case the service was not continuous. There were several breaks in the appellant's service, but in the aggregate his period of service did extend to that specified in section 1 (a) of the Act—namely twenty-five years' service. The question turns, in the first instance, upon section 1 (a) of the Act. It was contended before the Divisional Court, and before this court that that section in itself and upon its face means that the twenty-five years' approved service need not be continuous service, inasmuch as it speaks merely of "twenty-five years' approved service." It was said that twenty-five years' service is, on the face of the section, sufficient, and that it is not a mode of construction to spell out of other sections of the Act some conclusion which will contradict that which is contended to be the proper meaning of the section. Now, in the first place, I cannot assent to that interpretation of section 1. In my opinion the section is at the utmost equally consistent with continuous or non-continuous service. But I go further and say that primâ facie continuous service is what is meant. It is, however, not necessary to go so far as that, because it cannot, in my opinion, be properly put higher than this, that the language of the section is consistent with broken service. That being so, I am entitled to look at other provisions in the Act to see if they throw any light upon the section in question. Even without any authority, it is clear that I am so entitled, because the provisions of the Act have to be construed together. But the ingenuity of counsel has found an authority—namely, the opinion of Lord Herschell in Colquhoun v. Brooks—which shows that one is entitled to look at other sections of the Act in order to see what meaning is to be placed upon the substantive section, if there is any doubt about its meaning. There is a series of other sections in the Act which seem to me to throw light upon section 1. It is not necessary to go through them again and to repeat the arguments derived from them, as that was fully done in the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice in the Divisional Court, which was concurred in by the other members of the court. No doubt Kennedy, J., had some misgivings upon the subject, but at the end of his judgment he states that he is not prepared to dissent from the view expressed by the other members of the court. Putting the matter shortly, there are some four or five sections, all of which, in my judgment, as in that of the court below, start from the standpoint that the service, to entitle a constable to a pension, must be unbroken service—a series of provisions dealing with special conditions under which service that is broken may count for a pension. I am quite unable to explain or to account for that series of provisions by what was suggested—namely, that they were inserted ex majora cautelâ, an argument which possibly might be good if there were only one such provision. There are four or five such provisions, all of which start from the standpoint that primâ facie a break in the service is fatal, and all of which are framed with the view of mitigating that hardship in particular circumstances. If the primary enactment had contained a clear statement that twenty-five years' broken service was as effective as twenty-five years' continuous service, not one of those provisions would be needed. The only way in which I can account for those sections is that upon its true construction the primary enactment means that that the service, to entitle a constable to a pension, must be continuous service. The Lord Chief Justice went through those sections, and it would be a waste of public time to do it again. I may add one observation as to the argument based upon the former legislation. It seems to me that that argument does not assist us at all. The Police Act, 1890, was a new departure, and for the first time gave a constable a right to a pension which before was in the nature of a gratuity in the discretion of the police authority. The Act of 1890 was a new departure, and must be construed by itself. In my opinion the appeal fails.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I confess that I share to a considerable degree the doubts and regrets expressed by Kennedy, J., in the Divisional Court. But I, like him, have come to the conclusion that I ought not to differ from the Divisional Court. I think that the language of section 1 (a) of the Police Act, 1890, is consistent with either of the views pressed upon us—that is to say, that the words "not less than twenty-five years' approved service" may mean either continuous or non-continuous service. In that state of things I am entitled, and I think bound, to look at the rest of the Act to see if any light is thrown by the subsequent sections upon the meaning of section 1. That being permissible, section 4, sub-section 5, seems to me to be very important, and it is impossible to explain it except upon the view that the Legislature had in their minds the necessity for the service being continuous. It seems to me that the same is true, though in a less degree, of section 5, sub-section 5, and section 21.

MATHEW, L.J.—I regret that I am unable to agree with the conclusion arrived at both by the Divisional Court and by the Master of the Rolls and my brother Stirling. I am, however, somewhat consoled, if I may use that term, because I gather from the judgment of Stirling, L.J., that he shares the doubts expressed by Kennedy, J., in the Divisional Court. It seems to me that it would be defeating the obvious intention of the Legislature if we were to treat the service specified in section 1 (a) of the Act of 1890 as continuous service. If section 1 (a) had stood alone, I cannot think that the service must be continuous. If it stood alone, could it be said that a man who was absent owing to illness would be debarred from claiming a pension by reason of the break? How can a man serve as a constable day and night without rendering himself subject to the ordinary misfortunes of humanity? The Act was framed to afford additional security to police constables in the matter of pensions. Before the Act a police constable was not entitled to a pension, though the police authority, in their discretion, might have awarded him one. No doubt the police authority did their best to exercise their discretion fairly. But it was felt desirable that the matter should be placed on a proper footing, and that their refusal of a pension should be subject to appeal, and the Act gave such an appeal to quarter sessions. The object of the Act was to secure pensions to police constables when they had served the specified time. Why should such service be continuous? In the present case the first break occurred in 1881, when the constable resigned and was reinstated a few months afterwards. He resigned again in 1889, served until 1902, when he resigned as he was entitled to do. Why should he be punished for it? Why should it be imputed to the Legislature that they intended to deprive him of his deferred pay—because a pension was merely deferred pay—upon the ground that his twenty-five years' service was not continuous? The constable may have been a perfectly efficient officer before he resigned, and he may come back again and be an efficient officer afterwards, and serve efficiently for several years. Why should he lose his pension because of the break in his service? I turn to the Act of Parliament. An argument was based upon the later sections of the Act. It seems to me that a critical examination of sections of that kind would not do justice to the object of the Legislature. Section 1 is the first important section. That seems to me to be clear language, requiring approved service and approved service only. It is said that that section should be construed as if it made it a condition that the service should be both approved and continuous. I cannot gather any such intention from the language. It is, however, said that light is thrown upon the section by subsequent sections. I agree that in construing an Act we must try to construe all the sections together. The first material section is section 4. The first part of sub-section 1 does not seem to contemplate the necessity of the service being continuous. Then comes the definition of "approved service," and by sub-section 2, upon receiving the certificate therein specified, the constable can apply for a pension. Reliance was placed upon sub-sections 4 and 5. It was said that those sub-sections ought to be read as a proviso on section 1, and that they show that it is reasonable to introduce the words "if continuous" into the section. I cannot read them thus. It seems to me that they were introduced alio intuitu without any intention to affect the substantive enactment. Sub-section 4 deals with the removal of a constable from one police force to another, and provides that service of not less than three years in each police force is to count for a pension. As there is a different police force for each county or district, that provision is absolutely necessary when a constable removes from one police force to another. It ought not to be treated as a proviso on section 1. That is made clear by section 15, sub-section 2. Much the same may be said of sub-section 5. That sub-section provides that a constable who is in the army reserve and is called out for training or permanent service, on returning to the police force after the end of such training or service, may reckon any approved service which he was entitled to reckon at the commencement thereof. That sub-section indicates that the constable will, at the end of the training or service, be entitled to resume his place in the police force subject to all his rights. That sub-section does not seem to me to throw any light upon the question whether the service, to entitle a constable to a pension, must be continuous. It does not, to my mind, qualify section 1. Nor does section 10 seem to me to affect the question whether the service specified in section 1 must be continuous. It must be read with section 11, and does not qualify section 1. Section 5 deals with the case of a constable becoming incapable of performing his duty and the grant to him of a pension in consequence. Sub-section 3 of that section provides that in such a case the police authority shall at stated times satisfy themselves that the incapacity continues; and by sub-section 4, in the event of the incapacity ceasing before the time at which the constable would, if he had continued to serve, have been entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life, the police authority may cancel his pension and require him to serve again in the police force. That is an important provision. Looking at that sub-section alone, is the constable, when he becomes entitled to retire, and has served for a period sufficiently long to entitle him to a pension, to lose his pension because of a break in his service? There is no indication in that sub-section of an intention that such a result should follow. Sub-section 5 deals with the same subject-matter. If a constable is called on under sub-section 4 to serve again, it is obvious that his previous period of service ought to count towards a pension, and accordingly sub-section 5 was inserted to meet that special case. Then section 21 was relied upon by the respondents. That section merely provides for the return to the constable of the rateable deductions which have been made from his pay if he leaves a police force without a pension or gratuity, subject to an exception in the case of a constable who can reckon his approved service in the force from which he is removed. That section does not seem to me to affect the natural construction of section 1. Section 36, sub-section 2, seems to support the view which I take of section 1. Looking at all the sections of the Act I do not think that the "approved service" in section 1 need be continuous service. In my opinion the appeal should be allowed. I will only add that to my mind legislation is needed in view of the construction which is now placed on the Act.

COLLINS, M.R.—I ought to have stated that it is not necessary to express any opinion as to the conclusiveness of the certificate, but I may say that I am not at all satisfied that the words "sufficient evidence" means conclusive evidence.

STIRLING, L.J.—I agree.

MATHEW, L.J.—So do I.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for A. Geipel, West Hartlepool.

Solicitors for the respondents, Maude & Tunnicliffe, for L. S. Iliff, Sunderland.

From Chan. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) June 25.

In re ALLEN AND DRISCOLL'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Local government—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257—Expenses incurred by local authority—Charge upon premises—Date of charge—Completion of works—Vendor and purchaser.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Expenses incurred by a local authority for works executed in a street after notice to the owners of adjoining premises only became a charge on the premises within section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on the completion of the works, and not on the date on which the local authority enter into a binding contract for their execution.

Nor do such expenses, by reason of the notice, constitute an incumbrance on the premises so as to prevent a vendor, who conveys the property after the notice but before the completion of the works, making a good title free from incumbrances.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 392), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J. (reported ante p. 392, [1904] 1 Ch. 473) on a vendor and purchaser summons, which raised the question at what date expenses incurred by a local autnority in paving a street adjoining certain houses became "a charge on the premises in respect of which they were incurred" under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The material facts were as follows:

By an order of the 22nd of July, 1903, made in an action, Allen v. Driscoll, the defendants were ordered to pay to the defendants, on or before the 29th of September, 1903, the sum of £4,440 in settlement of the purchase money and interest due in respect of eleven leasehold houses in Rusthall-avenue, Acton, Middlesex, the plaintiffs by their counsel undertaking to make a good title to the said leasehold houses and to assign the same to the defendants, the defendants by their counsel undertaking to accept the leasehold houses so assigned in their present condition; and the plaintiffs were to receive the rents and pay the outgoings in respect up to the said 29th of September, 1903.

In February, 1903, the Urban District Council of Acton had sent notices to the vendors, as owners and occupiers of the said houses in Rusthall-avenue, to sewer, level, and pave the part of the street which adjoined the houses within five weeks of the date thereof.

These notices were not complied with, and on the 13th of July, 1903, the council entered into an agreement with a firm of contractors to execute the paving works in question at a certain sum.

The whole of the work specified in the notices was not completed by the 29th of September, the carriage-way in front of the said eleven houses requiring a further three-inch layer of flints to be laid and rolled, and no apportionment of expenses in respect of the eleven houses had been made at this date or subsequently,

The purchasers took out the present summons asking for a declaration that the vendors were liable to pay and indemnify them against the amount, when apportioned, of the expenses incurred by the local authority.

Byrne, J., held that the expenses were not incurred by the local authority before the completion of the work, and consequently did not become a charge upon the houses under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, till that date. He accordingly dismissed the summons.

The purchasers appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, for the appellants, cited Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, 29 W. R. 36, 15 Ch. D. 378; Mayor of West Ham v. Grant, 40 Ch. D. 331, 37 W. R. Dig. 113; Bettesworth v. Richer's Contract, 36 W. R. 544, 37 Ch. D. 535; Stock v. Meakin, 48 W. R. 420, [1900] 1 Ch. 683; In re Highett and Bird's Contract, 51 W. R. 227, [1903] 1 Ch 287; Tubbs v. Wynne, [1897] 1 Q. B. 74, 45 W. R. Dig. 168; Boor v. Hopkins, 37 W. R. 349, 40 Ch. D. 572.

Norton, K.C., and Ashton Cross, for the respondents, were not called upon to argue.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The question here is at what date the expenses incurred by the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, in the execution of paving and other works required to be done to comply with section 150, first becomes a charge on the premises in respect of which they were incurred within the meaning of section 257. There are other points, but I will deal with these later. This is the first point: Byrne, J., held that this expense first became a charge from the date of the completion of the works, and it has been suggested upon the cases that that judgment of Byrne, J., is wrong.

Now the date which was fixed in this contract for completion was the 29th of September, and in February of the same year notices under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 150, to pave were served upon the vendors by the Acton Urban District Council. Default having been made in complying with this notice, the urban district council, on the 7th of July, 1903, entered into an agreement with a contractor for the execution of the works specified in the notice. The whole of the works specified in the said notice were not completed by the 29th of September. That is, they were not completed by the date fixed for completion, and that date is important also because it was the date up to which the vendors were to receive the rents and to pay the outgoings. Now, it is common ground here that these works comprised in these notices had not been completed when the time for completion of the contract had arrived. If the rule is that the charge under the 257th section of the Act of 1875 does not arise until the completion of those works, then, apart from any question which was raised as to "outgoings" in this case, it is plain that the vendor is not liable to bear the expenses, but the purchaser must bear them.

I do not propose to go into the cases upon this point. I entirely agree with the judgment of Byrne, J., and it is sufficient to say that I agree with him not only that it was laid down in Stock v. Meakin that the date when the charge arises is the date of the completion of the works, but I agree with him, further, that there are a series of cases, beginning with the Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, agreeing with Stock v. Meakin and Surtees v. Woodhouse, 51 W. R. 275, [1903] 1 K. B. 396, in which it is laid down that the date of the arising of the charge is the date of the completion of the works.

Now counsel for the appellants has said, and I think to a certain extent he was right in saying, that the exact point of the date of the arising of the charge did not expressly arise in any one of these cases. It seems to me, in each of the cases, and certainly in Stock v. Meakin, it clearly was essential to that which the court had to determine to ascertain this; then in Stock v. Meakin the suggestion was that the charge did not arise until the issue of what was called under the particular Act of Parliament the notice of the urban authority. It was held that that was not so, and that it arose at an earlier period. What was the earlier period at which the charge did arise? That was as stated in that judgment, which was the judgment of the whole court, that the charge did arise upon the completion of the works. We are bound by that decision, and I think the decision was quite right.

It is suggested to us here that when there has been a notice to pave, and that notice has not been complied with, and the local authority, in the exercise of their powers, have entered into a contract for the doing of those works which they are under the statute entitled to do in case the owner of the property upon whom the notice has been served does not avail himself of the opportunity given to him to do those works, the charge ought to arise from the moment that a contract is entered into by the local authority with the contractor for the execution of the works; now, if for any reason the contractor could not perform the contract, and some one else had been engaged to do it, sometimes it may be at much larger expense, it would be impossible to work out the provisions of the Act of 1875 as to creating a charge if the charge arose at the date when the local authority entered into this contract, or as each portion of the work was done, in other words as each brick was delivered on the ground or put down to make a wall. It seems to me quite impossible that the Legislature could have intended such a thing. I was going on to say that there were two other points. One was a point where it was said that here the vendor had, under this contract, to convey free from incumbrances and could not make a good title unless he had cleared off this incumbrance, because there was an inchoate incumbrance by reason of the notices not having been complied with. I think that the object of the notice is to give the owner an opportunity to do the work himself, and if he does not do it in a limited time, then that the local authority can do it. I think that there is no incumbrance.

Then, as to the last point, it is said that there was an inchoate liability from the moment of the service of the notice to do these paving works. I say again there was no liability, inchoate or otherwise, until the local authority had done the works. Therefore I am of opinion that Byrne, J., was quite right, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Romer, L.J.—I agree with all that my Lord has said, and what was said by Byrne, J., in the court below, and they have dealt so fully with every part of this case that I do not want to add myself anything to what they have said.

In the course of the argument In re Highett and Bird's Contract was cited, and as I was a party to the decision of that case in the Court of Appeal, I wish to say two words about it. The vendor in that case, by his counsel, in the arguments before us, did not call our attention to the precise terms of the contract of sale, and certainly did not call the attention of the court to the fact that in that contract itself there was no express agreement by the vendor to show a good title, and as far as the court was concerned—at any rate I can certainly speak for myself so far as I was concerned—in that case the arguments proceeded on the assumption that the vendor was in the same position as if he had expressly agreed to make a good title, and the case was decided on that footing and is not an authority for any other proposition than a case of such a contract as I have indicated, and is not, I think, to be taken as an authority concerning a contract to sell where there was in the circumstances of that case in other respects an absence of an express contract by the vendor to make a good title.

Cozens-Hardy, L.J.—I agree. It seems to me that it is what Stock v. Meakin does decide really, for although it is true that the case there was under the Act of 1892, the Private Streets Act, the judgment proceeded upon the footing that there was a charge created like a charge under the Act of 1875. The Court of Appeal, in giving judgment there, said it became necessary to consider from what date the charge took effect, and the decision there was that the charge became effective only as from the completion of the works.

I think the principle is this, that under section 150 of the Public Health Act an option is given to the owner or occupier—either you do it yourself, or the local authority will do it.

I have no difficulty in coming to the same conclusion.

Solicitors, T. Blanco White; Taylor, Willcocks, & Leman.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Farwell, J. } July 13.

In re Phillimore.
Phillimore v. Milnes. (a.)

Settled land—Tenant for life—Compound settlement—Trusts to pay annuities—Remainder in trust for settlor—Will of settlor—Confirmation of trusts—Residue in trust for sale—Settlement of proceeds—Settled Land Acts, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 20, 63; and 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 18), s. 7.

P. conveyed and assigned his freeholds and leaseholds to himself and M. in trust, reserving a power of appointment, and by a subsequent deed he appointed that after his death the trustees should hold the same in trust out of the rents and profits to pay certain annuities, and that the surplus—and after the determination of the annuities, the whole—of the rents and profits should be in trust for and belong to himself, his heirs, and executors. By his will P. confirmed the said trusts, and, subject thereto, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to other trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, with power to postpone, and directed the proceeds to be held on trusts under which X. was tenant for life in possession.

Held, that the case was undistinguishable from In re The Marquis of Ailesbury and Lord Iveagh, 41 W. R. 644, [1893] 2 Ch. 345, and that on the principle of that case, as approved in In re Mundy and Roper's Contract, 47 W. R. 226, [1899] 1 Ch. 275, the two deeds and the will must be regarded as a compound settlement, and that X., as tenant for life thereunder, must be granted leave, under section 7 of the Act of 1884, to exercise the powers of the Settled Land Acts, and must be let into possession on his undertaking to keep down the annuities.

Adjourned summons, by the tenant for life under a will, asking for a declaration that a certain indenture and deed-poll, and the said will constituted a settlement, within the meaning of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, of the estates comprised in the said indenture, and that the applicant was tenant for life thereof under such settlement; and asking that he might be at liberty to exercise the powers of sale and leasing conferred on tenants for life by the Acts, and that trustees of the said settlement for the purposes of the Acts might be appointed, or that the trustees of the will might be declared to be such trustees. He also asked that he might be let into possession and receipt of the rents, on such terms as might be deemed proper, and that the trustees of the said deeds might be ordered to deliver the title deeds to him.

Captain William Brough Phillimore, by an indenture dated the 3rd of August, 1886, revoked all former appointments made by him, and appointed that the freehold and leasehold hereditaments named therein should thenceforth vest in himself and Robert Milnes, their heirs, &c., as joint tenants, to be held in trust for such person or persons as Captain Phillimore should by deed appoint, and in default of appointment, in trust for himself, his heirs, &c.; and the trust premises were by the said indenture conveyed and assigned to Captain Phillimore and R. Milnes accordingly.

(a.) Reported by R. Hill, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By deed-poll, dated the 4th of August, 1886, Captain Phillimore, in execution of the said power, appointed that the trustees of the said indenture should stand possessed of and interested in the trust premises upon trust to permit him to receive the rents and profits during his life, or until a certain event which did not happen, and after his death, or the happening of such event, upon trust, to pay certain annuities to the persons therein named, and also to raise, in a certain event which did not happen, a sum of £5,000 by mortgage or sale of the trust premises, and apply that sum as therein mentioned; and that as to the residue or surplus of the said rents and profits, after paying the said annuities and all succession and other duties payable thereon, and all charges and expenses thereof, the same residue and surplus, and also the whole of the said rents and profits after the determination and satisfaction of the said annuities and all such duties and expenses as aforesaid, should be held in trust for and belong to Captain Phillimore, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively.

By his will, dated the 29th of May, 1886, Captain Phillimore devised, bequeathed, and appointed all the real and personal estate to which at his death he should be beneficially entitled, or as to which he should have any general power to appoint by will, and not thereby otherwise disposed of, and which he called his residuary estate (subject, as to any such parts of the said residuary estate as were comprised in any appointment or charge executed by him, to the trusts and charges thereby created, all of which he thereby confirmed and directed his trustees to satisfy), to Montague Bertie Herbert, the said Robert Milnes, and Willie Sheldrake, upon trust for sale and conversion (with full power to postpone) and investment, and the testator directed them, after the death of his wife, and in the events which happened, to stand possessed of his said residuary estate and the net produce and investments thereof (subject and without prejudice to the trusts aforesaid) upon such trusts as his said residuary estate, and the produce thereof, would be held upon if the same were directed to be laid out in the purchase of real estate to be settled upon the trusts thereinafter declared, under which the applicant was the present tenant for life.

Captain Phillimore died in 1887, and R. Milnes duly appointed his son, the defendant, W. H. Milnes, to be a trustee of the indenture of the 3rd of August, 1886, and the latter, on the death of R. Milnes in 1898, duly appointed the defendant Mackenzie to be a trustee of the same indenture. These two defendants were afterwards duly appointed to be trustees of the deed poll by the legal personal representative of R. Milnes. The other defendants were the two surviving trustees of the will and the infant son of the applicant, entitled as for an estate tail in remainder under the trusts of the will.

All the annuitants, with one exception, were still alive.

Upjohn, K.C., and John Gent, for the applicant, relied on In re Marquis of Ailesbury and Lord Iveagh, 41 W. R. 644, [1893] 2 Ch. 345, and In re Mundy and Roper's Contracts, 47 W. R. 226, [1899] 1 Ch. 275, and the Revenue cases founded thereon—namely, Attorney-General v. Owen and Attorney-General v. Coulson, [1899] 2 Q. B. 253, and In re Campbell, [1902] 1 K. B. 113, 50 W. R. Dig. 72.

Jenkins, K.C., and A. à B. Terrell, for the trustees of the deeds of August, 1886, submitted that in granting the annuities Captain Phillimore had created, not a settlement, but a charge or mortgage or incumbrance, which he had secured, not by a term, but by vesting the fee in trustees with a direction to apply the rents and profits in payment of the annuities. They referred to In re Du Cane and Nettlefold's Contract, 46 W. R. 523, [1898] 2 Ch. 96.

Kirby, for the trustees of the will.

Marcy, for the infant remainderman.

FARWELL, J.—In my opinion the points raised here have been already considered in the Ailesbury case, and the decision there has been approved and confirmed by the Court of Appeal, and I think it would be exceedingly undesirable that I should attempt to whittle away by subtle distinctions an authority which Chitty, L.J., has pointed out as taking a broad view of the Act. That was a beneficial decision, and I think I should be wrong to try to find out an omission in the Act which might have a disastrous effect.

In my opinion this case in principle is absolutely undistinguishable from the Ailesbury case. It stands thus: The late Captain Phillimore, being the owner in fee of certain freeholds, and absolutely entitled to certain leaseholds, declares trusts under which he makes himself tenant for life, with trusts in remainder to pay certain annuities, and with the remainder to himself absolutely. To begin with, that is obviously a settlement within the meaning of the Act. He then proceeds to make a will, by which he disposes of his ultimate interests, subject to those annuities which he has voluntarily created by the settlement which he has already made. He deals with property which is left in him under that same settlement, and he proceeds to dispose of that by the will under which he constitutes the present applicant the tenant for life. Inasmuch as in the Ailesbury case, Stirling, J., with the approval of the Court of Appeal in a subsequent case—notwithstanding the comments of conveyancers in the meantime—held that the then tenant for life of the Ailesbury estates, whose title was subsequent to two disentailings and resettlements in 1863 and 1885, could dispose of the land freed from a jointure created under the powers of the deeds of 1796 and 1826, it seems to me that it follows very much more in a case like the present that there is that connection between the deeds which is sufficient. As Chitty, L.J. (In re Mundy and Roper's Contract, [1899] 1 Ch. 295), in referring to the judgment of Stirling, J., in the Ailesbury case, put it: "He held that the Savernake estate stood limited to uses in favour of various persons by way of succession under or by virtue of the series of deeds, and that the Marchioness Maria was one of the persons taking under the series of deeds, although she did not take by way of succession to the vendor. This was a broad view of the Act; but I repeat that, in my opinion, it was the right view." In my opinion the present case is very much less strong than that, but is necessarily, in my view, governed by the principle of it, and I am certainly not disposed to attempt to explain it away.

His lordship made the declaration asked by the summons, and an order under section 7 of the Settled Land Act, 1884, allowing the exercise of powers by the applicant, and directed that the trustees of the will should be appointed trustees of the compound settlement on production of a proper affidavit of fitness, that the applicant should be let into possession on his giving an undertaking to the court in respect of the annuities and otherwise, in the form in In re Wythes, [1893] 2 Ch. 369, and that the title deeds should be handed over to him on payment of the costs, charges, and expenses of the trustees of the deeds of 1886, those trustees to have liberty to apply to re-enter in case the annuities should not be paid, and the costs of all parties to come out of the corpus of the residuary estate.

Upjohn, K.C., asked that the applicant's costs should be as between solicitor and client. He had been invested with fiduciary power.

FARWELL, J.—He is not a trustee yet. I cannot grant the application. If I do it now I must do it always, and I should not like to lay down such a rule as that.

Solicitors, Burgoynes & Greatbach; J. R. Hall; Nicholson, Patterson, & Freeland.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) April 27.

WEARDALE AND CONSETT WATER CO. v. CHESTER-LE-STREET CO-OPERATIVE CO. (a.)

Waterworks company—Gratuitous use of water for extinguishing fire—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 42.

By section 42 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the undertakers shall at all times keep charged with water all their pipes to which fire-plugs shall be fixed, and shall allow all persons at all times to take and use such water for the purpose of extinguishing fire without making compensation for same.

Held, that this power was confined to take water from the undertakers, pipes to which fire-plugs were fixed, and did not apply to a fire-plug affixed to a private pipe which took water (by agreement) from the defendants' main for agricultural purposes.

Appeal from the county court at Durham.

The plaintiffs in the year 1886, at the request of the defendants, laid a pipe from their main running along a road called Picktree-lane through a field of the defendants for a distance of 180 yards to a cattle trough of the defendants, and water was supplied to the defendants for agricultural purposes at a rent of 16s. a year.

In 1890 the plaintiffs, at the request and expense of the defendants, fixed a plug in the defendants' pipe near the trough for the purpose of protecting the haystack from fire.

In July, 1904, a haystack of the defendants caught fire, and the defendants by means of the fire-plug procured the plaintiffs' water to extinguish the fire.

The plaintiffs brought an action to recover payment for the water so used.

The defendants relied on section 42 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847.

By section 38 of that Act it is provided as follows: The undertakers, at the request of the town commissioners, shall fix proper fire-plugs in the main and other pipes belonging to them at certain distances.

Section 40.—The cost of such fire-plugs and the cost of fixing them shall be defrayed by the town commissioners.

Section 42.—"The undertakers shall at all times keep charged with water, under such pressure as aforesaid, all their pipes to which fire-plugs shall be fixed . . . and shall allow all persons at all times to take and use such water for extinguishing fire without making compensation.

The county court judge gave judgment for the defendants.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Meynell, for the plaintiffs.—Section 42 only gives power to the public to take water from the company's pipes to which fire-plugs have been attached under section 38, and not a general power to take the company's water at all times gratuitously for the purpose of extinguishing fire.

Simey, for the defendants.—Section 42 is not limited to water taken from pipes specified in the first part of the section, and no good reason has been suggested why it should be. Secondly, the water was taken from the main, and it must be presumed the main was fitted with plugs. Thirdly, the water was used for an agricultural purpose, and was, therefore, covered by the agreement of 16s.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In my opinion no one reading section 42 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, could fairly come to the conclusion that it was intended to give a general right to the public under all circumstances to take the undertakers' water for the purpose of extinguishing fire without payment. Section 42 is one of a group of sections relating to fire-plugs, the first of which (33) provides that the "undertakers," at the request of the town commissioners, shall fix proper fire-plugs in the mains of the pipes belonging to them. Section 42 provides that "the commissioners shall at all times keep charged with water, under such pressure as aforesaid, all their pipes to which fire-plugs shall be fixed, and shall allow all persons at all times to take and use such water for extinguishing fire without making compensation for the same." The language of that section plainly says that only such water, that is, water in their—the undertakers'—"pipes to which fire-plugs shall be fixed," is to be taken without payment for extinguishing fire. It has been contended that that cannot be the meaning of the section, because there is no reason why the Legislature should have so limited the class of water to be taken gratuitously for that purpose. Whether a sufficient reason for that limitation can be suggested or not, I feel bound to give the words their ordinary signification, and to hold that the privilege is so limited. To hold otherwise would be to strain the language of the section. Then it is contended that the defendants, by means of their private pipes took the water directly from the defendant's main in Picktree-lane, but there is no evidence that there were any fire-plugs there, and, as the onus lies on the defendants to prove that the pipes from which they did take it is of the kind specified in section 42, we must assume that there were no such plugs; and, therefore, even assuming the defendants' contention to be correct, yet they have failed to bring themselves within the provisions of section 42.

WILLS, J.—I agree. It is clear that under section 42 the water which may be taken gratuitously to extinguish fire must pass through pipes supplied with fire-plugs. If the contention of the defendants is correct, the words "to which fire-plugs shall be fixed" have no meaning. With regard to the contention that water used for putting out a fire in a haystack is water used for agricultural purposes, it seems to me as extravagant as to say that water used for putting out a fire in a house is water used for domestic purposes.

KENNEDY, J.—I agree.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Cooper & Goodyer, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Dangerfield & Blythe, for J. Turnbull, Durham.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) April 20.

FOSTER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Railway — Carriage of goods — Owner's risk note — Failure to carry goods by route specified.

Fish, in barrels, was consigned by the plaintiff to the defendant railway company to be carried from Brixham to Jersey, viâ Southampton, upon terms that the plaintiff, in consideration of his being charged a reduced rate, relieved the defendants from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention, except upon proof that it arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants. The defendants, by a mistake, carried the fish past Exeter, the station at which they ought to have transferred the barrels to the London and South-Western Railway Co.'s system, and the mistake was not discovered until the fish arrived at Taunton. It was then sent from Taunton, viâ Weymouth, to Jersey, with the object of lessening the damage. In consequence of this mistake the arrival of the fish at its destination was delayed, and the plaintiff suffered damage.

Held, that the defendants were protected by the terms of the contract.

Mallet v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 47 W. R. 334, [1899] 1 Q. B. 309, distinguished.

Appeal from the county court of Devonshire holden at Plymouth.

The action was brought for damages for the breach of a contract to carry certain barrels of fish from Brixham to Jersey, viâ Southampton, consigned to the defendants by the plaintiff on the 18th of August, 1902, on a consignment note, which was signed by the plaintiff and was in the following terms: "To the Great Western Railway Co.—Receive and forward the undermentioned merchandize, to be carried at the reduced rate below the company's ordinary rate; in consideration whereof I agree to relieve the Great Western Railway Co., and all other companies or persons over whose lines the merchandize may pass, or in whose possession the same may be during any portion of the transit, from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention except upon proof that such loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants. . . . This agreement shall be deemed to be separately made with all companies or persons parties to any through rate under which the merchandize is carried."

It was admitted that in the ordinary performance of the contract to carry merchandize by the route mentioned the fish would have been taken out of the waggon of the Great Western Railway Co. train at Exeter and transferred to a London and South-Western Railway truck for carriage by that company's train to Southampton. By an oversight the fish was not transferred at Exeter, and was carried on to Taunton, where the mistake was discovered. It was then too late to send the fish back to Exeter in time for it to catch the boat train for Southampton, and it was thought best, in order to save time, to dispatch to Jersey, viâ Weymouth.

The county court judge thought the present case could not be distinguished from that of Mallet v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 47 W. R. 334, [1899] 1 Q. B. 309, and although he would, but for that authority, have held that the delay in the delivery due to the negligence of the defendants' servants was within the terms of the condition protecting the company, he considered himself bound by that authority to give judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed accordingly.

The defendants appealed.

Schiller (Cripps, K.C., with him).—The decision in Mallet v. Great Eastern Railway Co. does not govern this case. The company were held liable there because it was said that the delay was not a delay in the performance of the contract, and therefore not covered by the special condition in the consignment note. Unless that supposition was justified by the facts, that decision is at variance with the body of authority on this subject, and cannot be supported. However that may be, the detention of the goods here arose from an act of negligence committed by the servants of the company in the performance of the contract, and comes therefore within the exempting proviso. The delay was caused by an act of negligence at Exeter; that is, at a station on the route by which it was agreed that the goods should be sent. The company would clearly have been freed from liability had they sent back the fish to Exeter and consigned it to the South-Western train there. What they did was certainly in the interest of the customer, and with the sole object of lessening the damage consequent on their previous negligent act. They therefore are not liable: Sleat v. Fagg, 5 B. & A. 342; Morrit v. North-Eastern Railway Co., 24 W. R 235; Millen v. Brasch & Co., 31 W. R. 190, 10 Q. B. D. 142.

Duke, K.C., and J. A. Hawke.—The damage to the goods not arising during the time that they were being carried on the agreed route, the company are not protected by the special conditions in the consignment note. Morritt v. North-Eastern Railway Co., and Millen v. Brasch & Co., were cases decided under the Carriers Act, and therefore are not in point here, as the case clearly rests on the construction of the terms of the contract note. Under the contract the exemption from liability was only to apply "during any portion of the transit," and only then if the negligence was less than "wilful." The damage did not occur on the agreed route. Therefore, following Mallet v. Great Eastern Railway Co., the exemption did not apply. The defendants therefore are liable for loss caused by the breach of their contract to carry the goods by the route agreed.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In my opinion the learned county court judge ought to have acted upon what he undoubtedly thought to be the true view of the law; possibly he may have felt more bound by the decision in Mallet v. Great Eastern Railway Co., or by what appeared to him to be the principle involved in that case, than we are. With regard to that case I desire to say, with great respect to my brothers Day and Lawrance, JJ., who decided it—that I think the extent of that authority, if it is supposed to lay down a principle that the condition cannot apply if the damage happens, or the injury to the goods happens, upon some part of the route not contemplated by the parties at the time the condition was signed, may require further consideration. I do not wish to say more than this. Certainly, in so far as it lays down any principle which would involve its application to the case before us, I think that it is at variance with more than one decision of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and particularly with the decisions which have held that misdelivery to a wrong person will not render the company liable in the absence of facts which make the condition inapplicable, as, for instance, wilful misconduct. Here the misdelivery happened upon a route that was contemplated by the parties. The question whether

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Mallet's case can be supported upon the ground that it refers to a particular case of an injury occurring upon a route which never formed the basis of the contract, does not arise in this case. Here the defendants undertook to carry the fish from Brixham to Jersey by way of Southampton, which meant that they were to hand over the goods to the South-Western Railway Co. at Exeter. They, by some mistake, and from causes which do not prevent the condition being applicable, carried the goods on to Taunton, and therefore the breach of contract, in my opinion, occurred on the very route contemplated, namely, at Exeter. What happened afterwards? As I have said, if in any way it could be contended that there was a new route set up as between the parties to which the condition did not apply, I could understand it. But it is agreed that the defendants, finding out their mistake at Taunton, instead of sending the fish back to Exeter, and so on to Southampton, which they could have done, in which case there would have been more delay—and the fish would have been quite spoilt—endeavoured to do the best they could for the plaintiff by sending the fish to Weymouth to be forwarded by the next steamer. It seems to me it would be very dangerous to hold that the defendants are liable in this case, in which they did their best to minimise the damage, if they would have been protected had they adopted a course which would have caused more delay and greater risk of damage. It would prevent a company who had broken the contract from doing the best thing they could to save damage to the goods and possibly to prevent damage altogether. Therefore I think their action in sending the fish to Weymouth when they found they had made a mistake was not sending it by a fresh route in the sense of Mallet's case, but that they had adopted a reasonable course, and endeavoured on finding out their mistake to do their best to get the goods to their destination as speedily as possible. That brings us back to the question whether this condition protects them in the case of an erroneous carrying on from Exeter to Taunton, instead of delivering to the South-Western Railway Co. at Exeter. That question really, I think, cannot be decided against the railway company without over-ruling the cases which have decided that under such conditions as these they are protected from the consequences of misdelivery. I think that the learned county court judge was not bound by Mallet's case to the extent which he thought he was, and ought to have followed the principle which he was disposed to follow. I only wish to say that, while I do not think the Carriers' Act cases are what may be called authorities, because these different considerations apply, the principle of those cases is applicable to show that this condition does protect the defendants. I think, therefore, that the appeal must be allowed.

WILLS, J.—I agree. It seems to me that the facts in the present case are not the same as those upon which Mallet's case was decided, and that we are right in holding that it can be distinguished on that ground. I think that the owner's risk clause in the contract meant that the plaintiff agreed to relieve both the Great Western Railway Co. and the South-Western Railway Co. from liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, and delay or detention during any portion of the transit of goods. It might well be that if the defendant company had sent the goods by the Midland Railway, or any other company, that that company would not be protected by the condition. What happened here was that a mistake was made at Exeter and the goods were over-carried over another portion of the defendant's line and were by reason of being perishable goods spoilt. That, in my opinion, was just such a case as it was intended should be covered by the condition, and a loss which the company, by accepting a lower rate, stipulated they should not be made liable for.

KENNEDY, J.—I agree. I only desire to say that with regard to Mallet's case different considerations appear to have existed in that case and the present. There it was owing to the goods being sent by a different route that damage was done to the goods. Here the damage was done whilst the goods were journeying on the route intended by the parties. The subsequent forwarding of the goods by a different route had nothing to do with their being damaged, indeed they were sent round viâ Weymouth in order to lessen the damage. That fact alone seems to me to distinguish this case from Mallet's case. It is one thing for carriers to plead the protection of the condition given in respect to a particular route when the goods were in fact never carried by that route, which was Mallet's case, and quite another thing, as was the case here, where the goods were sent by the agreed route, but through a mistake miscarried.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitor for the railway company, R. R. Nelson.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Church, Rendell, & Co., for Watts, Ward, & Anthony, Plymouth.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } Feb. 16.

"THE BENMOHR." (a.)

Ship—Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Rules 46 and 49 Thames Regulations.

Those who rely on a plea of compulsory pilotage must establish the fact that the fault of the pilot was the fault of the pilot alone, otherwise the court will not act in finding that the fault was that of the pilot.

The Velasquez, 1 P. 494, approved.

Aspinall, K.C., and Leck for the plaintiffs.

Laing, K.C., and Stephens for the defendants.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

BARNES, J., in giving judgment, said: This is a case of collision between the steamship Banffshire and the steamship Benmohr, which took place at about half-past one in the afternoon of the 5th of February, 1902, in Sea Reach, not very far from Holehaven, in the River Thames. At the time the weather was fine and clear, and the tide was ebb, and about two knots. One of these vessels, The Banffshire, was proceeding up the river, and the other, The Benmohr, was proceeding down. The Banffshire is a large steamer of 5,736 tons gross, and she was bound from Melbourne to London via the Cape, with a general cargo, and a crew of 60 hands, and having on board a Trinity House pilot, who had been taken on board at Dungeness. He was what is termed a 14-feet draught pilot, but he was, at the time he was taken on board, the only available pilot. Shortly before this collision took place The Banffshire was in Sea Reach, coming up river at a speed of about 9 knots, on a course of W. by N. ½ N. The Benmohr is a steamer of about 3,000 tons gross register, and was manned by a crew of 38 hands. She was in course of a voyage from London to ports in the Straits, China, and Japan, with general cargo and some passengers. She was in charge of a duly licensed Trinity House pilot, and was making a course of E. by S., and a speed of about 9 knots. These vessels came into collision at the place I have mentioned, or thereabouts, and very serious damage was done to both vessels. The actual contact took place between the starboard side of The Benmohr, about 60 feet from the stern, and the stem of The Banffshire. One difficulty I have in deciding this case is that the collision took place rather over two years ago, and it was tolerably obvious in the course of the evidence given by the witnesses that some of the details were not given with that precision with which they would have been given if the case had been tried, as is usual, a very short time after the accident. But some of the facts are established beyond all question, which enable me to come to a decision about this case. I think it is the fact that the two rules which principally affect the matter are the 46th and the 49th rules of the Thames for the purpose of navigation. The 46th rule is what may be termed the port hand rule, and the 49th is the rule which requires a steamer, when approaching another vessel, so as to involve risk of collision, to slacken her speed or stop and reverse if necessary. I think there is very little doubt that at first, when these two vessels were made out, the one from the other, they were very nearly end on to each other, and that the port hand rule was that which was applicable to the case. The position at the time of the collision is to my mind almost fairly well established. The plaintiffs say, of course, through the mouths of their witnesses, that their vessel had gone off the up-river course somewhere about four points, and although some of the witnesses for the defendants rather minimise the extent which their vessel had gone off—they make out that the plaintiff vessel went off her course rather more than their's—I find that the helmsman of the defendants' vessel said in his evidence in chief that he did not notice the compass, but she was about four points off right down the river. I think the conclusion to draw is that both these vessels were off their respective courses, at the time of the collision, about the same extent, and that the collision took place to the northward of mid-channel. I think there is no doubt about it, because practically both sides have agreed that it took place at a right angle, which is an obvious consequence if both vessels, having been originally on opposite courses, went off those courses about four points. That is the conclusion I have come to about the position of the vessels at the time of the collision. Of course, it follows from what I have been saying that The Banffshire went off under port helm, and The Benmohr went off under starboard helm. Although the defendants have sought to minimise the extent to which their vessel went off, I should have thought it was more likely that their vessel went off more, if anything, than the other, because the defendants' vessel was at the time going full speed ahead and under hard a-starboard helm. However, I think the general result is that both vessels went off to about the same extent. What is the result from that? Perhaps I ought to mention one further fact. I have already stated that the defendants' ship was going, at the time of the collision, full speed ahead and under hard a-starboard helm. The other vessel was under hard a-port helm, but her engines had been reversed. There is a question as to when they were reversed, but they had undoubtedly been reversed. It follows, almost as a matter of course, from what I have already said, that the defendant vessel must be held to blame for breaking both the rules, unless there is some excuse. There appeared to me to be, from the argument that has been addressed to me, an important question as to whether there was an excuse for the starboarding, but I can find no excuse whatever for the defendants' vessel being kept under hard a-starboard helm, and going at full speed ahead up to the time of the collision, to a vessel which was porting her helm and coming off to the extent which the plaintiffs' vessel did at the time of this collision. Upon that point the Elder Brethren are of the same opinion as myself. I think that latter point would be more a matter for the pilot than for the servants of the ship-owners, because the pilot was in charge; but with regard to the first point, as to the action of the helm of the defendant' ship, it is said by the defendants that that was justified—the starboarding and hard a-starboarding—because a two-blast signal was given on board the plaintiffs' ship. The controversy in the main in the case has been as to whether a two-blast signal was given or not. The plaintiffs' version of the matter is that The Benmohr originally blew a short blast, and that The Banffshire gave one short blast, and ported a little, and that The Banffshire afterwards gave another short blast, after an interval; that is to say, the plaintiffs' case is that they gave two separate port helm signals, the defendants' case is that the plaintiffs' vessel did not give two port helm signals, but did give two short blasts so close together that they really amounted to a starboard helm signal. That has been the main issue of fact in this case, and there is a considerable body of evidence both ways. I have to determine, to put it in the shortest way, whether a port helm signal was given twice over or whether a starboard helm signal was given; because the defendants' case is that they got a starboard helm signal, and, therefore, starboarded, and not until they got a starboard helm signal did they starboard. It is said by the defendants that there could be no reason for acting as they did unless they did get a starboard helm signal, and that, therefore it is a reasonable conclusion to draw that they did have a starboard helm signal given to them. On the other hand, the plaintiffs' countervailing consideration is that as it was a fine clear day, and these vessels were well in sight of each other, and the river was clear to the northward and there was no reason for hurry in blowing signals in the way suggested by Mr. Laing, and as it was undoubtedly the proper thing for both these vessels to port, there was no reason for giving a starboard helm signal. There is, as I say, a good deal of evidence on both sides, and I am left to consider on which side the truth of the matter lies. The conclusion of fact to which I have come, after giving due weight to all the evidence and the probabilities of the matter, is that the two-blast signal relied upon by the defendants was not given on the part of the plaintiffs' vessel; that is to say, I accept the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses about this question of the port helm signals. One matter, apart from my view of the witnesses, which influences me is that it seems to me that the defendants attribute too much to the plaintiffs, because they suggest two very stupid things to the plaintiffs' ship. They suggest, first, that the plaintiffs ported two points off their course, and gave a wrong signal, and, secondly, that they ported after doing it. I come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs did not give a starboard helm signal, and that the defendants cannot justify their action of starboarding and hard-a-starboarding in the way they seek to do. That leaves a question of some little difficulty as to what is the result in connection with the blame to be imputed to the defendants' ship. It is said: "Well, but if that is the position of things, the fault was only the fault of the pilot on board the defendants' ship, and that the defendants, their vessel being under the charge of a compulsory pilot, are not to blame." I have come to the conclusion, on the facts of this case, that that is an argument which I cannot accede to. It appears to me that the defendants are in a difficulty about it. I have said that I have come to the conclusion that the two-blast signal was not given, and therefore it could not have been heard on the defendants' ship, and I do not accept the story which has been told from the defendants' vessel with regard to that matter. Then comes the principle applied in the case of The Velasquez, 1 P. C. 494. A short statement of that principle may be thus put: That the persons—in this case the defendants—who rely on the plea of compulsory pilotage, must prove by trustworthy evidence that the fault was the fault of the pilot alone, otherwise the court cannot act in finding that the fault was that of the pilot. It appears to me here that the defendants have failed to satisfy me, by trustworthy evidence, as to what occurred in fact on board the ship, that the fault was that of the pilot alone. But the matter does not quite rest there, because there is this observation to make, that even, it seems to me, if one were to credit—which for reasons I have given I do not—every word said on the defendants' ship about these blasts, and also find as a fact that there was not a two-blast signal given on the plaintiffs' ship, then one must conclude that the pilot was mistaken, and, in my judgment, especially after having seen the pilot, that was not the fault of the pilot alone. Because what took place? I am now proceeding on the assumption of a case which I do not accept. The master said, in his evidence in chief: "I agreed with the pilot she had given a starboard helm signal. I said 'it is a two-whistle blow,' and he said 'it is a two-whistle blow.'" The pilot put it the other way round. He said in his cross-examination: "I never ordered the helm a-starboard until she sounded two short blasts. I told the captain, and he told me she had given two blasts, and I starboarded and went full speed ahead." On the assumption that the pilot was mistaken, it seems to me—especially after having seen the pilot—that he was helped into that mistake by what was said to him by the captain, and it cannot be said this mistake was his fault alone. So the conclusion to which I have come with regard to this matter of compulsory pilotage is that the plea is not made out. There is one other matter to deal with, and that is the suggestion that the plaintiff's ship did not stop and reverse her engines soon enough. That is based partly upon the amount of damage done, and partly upon the evidence. With regard to the evidence, the pilot said he put the engines full speed astern after the first two blasts were heard from the other ship. The master said: "I heard two short blasts twice and it was after the first that we reversed. It must be remembered that these two vessels were each travelling at the outset nine knots, although one stopped for a short time and one reversed. I think way had been taken off the big ship considerably, but the distance between them when they acted for each other was easily traversed in a short space of time, and when it is remembered that this large vessel was probably weighing something like 8,000 or 9,000 tons, it is not surprising that, even though she reversed as soon as any danger was observed from the other ship, very considerable damage should be done by contact at right angles with that other vessel going at full speed. I cannot find any blame on the part of the plaintiffs in connection with this stopping and reversing. It seems to me that their engines were stopped and reversed as soon as any danger was observable. The conclusion I have come to is that The Benmohr is alone to blame.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Lowless & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Cooper & Co.

[THE END.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE;

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1903, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1904.

VOL. LII.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1904.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1903, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1904,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. LII. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1903-1904;

AND IN

CERTAIN OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the House of Lords; P.C., the Privy Council; C.A., the Court of Appeal; LUN., Lunacy; CH.D., the Chancery Division; K.B.D., the King's Bench Division; BKCY., the King's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy; P.D. & AD.D., the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; C.C.R., the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

 This Digest will contain at the end thereof a Tabular Index of the Names of all Cases Reported up to the end of August, 1904, as well in this Volume (52) of the WEEKLY REPORTER as in certain other Contemporaneous Reports. In this Digest, figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this Volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other Reports are given in this Digest.

ACCUMULATIONS:—

Payment of debts—Debts paid out of capital—Provision for recoupment—Accumulations Act, 1800 (Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), s. 2.—A provision for accumulating income to recoup capital applied in payment of debts is not a provision for payment of debts within section 2 of the Thellusson Act.

Tewart v. Lawson (1874) L. R. 18 Eq. 490, followed. — HEATHCOTE, RE. HEATHCOTE v. TRENCH, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 826; 73 L. J. Ch. 543; 90 L. T. 505.

ADEMPTION:—

Will—Legacy—Subsequent gift—Particular purpose.—A testator by his will gave a sum of £10,000 to the trustees of the endowment fund of a hospital. Subsequent to the date of his will he sent a cheque to the trustees for the sum of £10,000.

Held, that the legacy in the will was for a particular purpose, and was adeemed by the subsequent gift of the same sum in the testator's lifetime.—CORBETT, RE, CORBETT v. COBHAM, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 74; [1903] 2 Ch. 326; 72 L. J. Ch. 775; 88 L. T. 591.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Costs—Priority — Administrator's costs — Res judicata.—Where in an administration action an order made on further consideration has directed the payment of the costs of all parties out of a fund which subsequently proves insufficient to pay the costs in full, the administrators are entitled to have the whole of their costs paid in priority to the other parties.

The order having been silent as to the priorities of the parties inter se must be assumed to have directed payment according to the strict rights of the parties.

Gaunt v. Taylor, (1843) 2 Ha. 413, followed.—

GRIFFITH, RE, JONES v. OWEN, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 807; 73 L. J. Ch. 464; 90 L. T. 639.

2. Costs—Trustee—Neglect to account—Costs of taking and vouching account.—Where owing to the gross neglect and indefensible refusal of trustees to render proper accounts, a summons has been taken out for an account and administration, the trustees can be made liable to bear the costs, including the costs of taking and vouching the accounts.—SKINNER, RE, COOPER v. SKINNER, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 346; [1904] 1 Ch. 289; 73 L. J. Ch. 94; 89 L. T. 663.

3. Insolvent estate—Estate insolvent at date of judgment afterwards found sufficient to pay principal of debts—Interest—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 40, sub-sections 4, 5—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 55, rr. 62, 63.—In the administration of an estate which is insolvent at the date of the judgment, but afterwards realizes enough to pay the principal of all the debts, but not the whole of of the interest allowed by the court, whether on debts which by law carry interest, or on debts which do not, the payment of interest must be governed by the rules of bankruptcy and not those of the Chancery Division.

In re Henley, (1896) 75 L. T. 307, discussed and followed.—WHITTAKER, RE, WHITTAKER v. PALMER, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 299; 73 L. J. Ch. 166; 90 L. T. 277.

4. Practice—Common order for administration against executor—Subsequent action by same plaintiff charging wilful default and fraud—No evidence of fresh information acquired since date of common order—Leave of the court.—A plaintiff who has obtained a common order for administration of an estate against the executor may obtain the leave of the court to bring a fresh action charging (inter alia) wilful default against the executor without proving that he did not acquire the information on which he founds his fresh action in time to utilise it in the former proceeding in which he obtained the common order for administration, proof of which was required in the case of Laming v. Gee, 40 L. T. Rep. 33, 10 Ch. Div. 715, on the plaintiff, who was an undischarged bankrupt, giving security to the satisfaction of the master for the executor's costs of the fresh action.—KURTZ, RE, EMERSON v. HENDERSON, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 90 L. T. 12.

5. Proof—Secured creditor, proof by against the real estate—Lapse of time—Application to prove against personalty—Fund in court.—Where in an administration suit there is a fund in court, a creditor for a debt at law, though the appointed time for coming in has long elapsed, is by well-established practice allowed to prove against the general estate, subject to terms as to costs and as to payments already made.

The decision of the Irish Court of Appeal, reported as Beattie v. Cordner, [1903] 1 I. R. 1, affirmed.—HARRISON v. KIRK, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 1; 73 L. J. P. C. 35; 89 L. T. 566.

6. Retainer—Real representative—Proceeds of sale of real estate—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), ss. 1, 2, sub-section 3.—The Land Transfer Act, 1897, does not give an administratrix a right of retainer out of the proceeds of sale of the intestate's real estate for a debt due to her from the intestate.—WILLIAMS, RE, HOLDER v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 318; [1904] 1 Ch. 52; 73 L. J. Ch. 82; 89 L. T. 663.

See also Executor, 1; Lunatic, 2; Probate, 1; Receiver, 1; Vendor and Purchaser, 8.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Food—Milk—Warranty—Addition of preservative by purchaser—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 25.—A purchaser of milk with a written warranty, who has added a preservative to such milk, cannot rely upon section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, even although the addition of such preservative is not complained of as an adulteration.—HENNEN v. LONG, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 387.

2. Food and drugs—Institution of prosecution—Laying of information—Service of summons—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 19 (1).—A prosecution is instituted within section 19 (1) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, at the date on which the information is laid, and the summons is issued, and not on the date when such summons is served.—BEARDSLEY v. GIDDINGS, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 847; 73 L. J. K. B. 378; 90 L. T. 651.

3. Food and drugs—Warranty—Notice—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 25—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 20.—An information having been laid by the respondent against the appellant under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the appellant's solicitors sent on the 2nd of November to the respondent the following notice: "We beg to give you formal notice that our client purchased the same butter with a written warranty from G. L. (Limited), of 84, C.-st., M. The following is a copy of the warranty in question: 'We guarantee all butters sold by us to be absolutely pure; guaranteed pure butter within the 3rd and 7th sections of the Margarine Act, 1877.' . . . The defendant intends to rely on the foregoing as a defence to this summons."

On the 4th of August the appellant had purchased the butter of the wholesale house, and on the invoice was stated: "We guarantee all butters sold by us to be absolutely pure." The appellant was dissatisfied with this, and, when going to the wholesale house the following week, and after the butter was delivered, took the invoice to the wholesale house, who put on it: "Guaranteed pure butter in accordance with the 3rd and 7th sections of the Margarine Act, 1887. In case of samples being taken for analysis, show this warranty to the inspector."

Held, that the notice of the 2nd of November was a good notice of a defence under section 20 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899.—FARTHING v. PARKINSON, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 783.

ADVOWSON:—

Charity—Will—Trust to present fit and pious person.—The devise of an advowson on trust to present "such fit and pious person of godly life and conversation, being in holy orders, capable of accepting and holding the same, as the trustees" shall think fit, does not constitute a charitable trust, the trust being only to do that which every owner of an advowson is in all events bound to do.—CHURCH PATRONAGE TRUST, RE, LAURIE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 106; [1904] 1 Ch. 41; 73 L. J. Ch. 77; 89 L. T. 505.

APPEAL:—

1. Practice—Appeal on question of fact—Concurrent findings of two courts below.—There is no rule of practice in the House of Lords that the House will not entertain an appeal on a question of fact where there have been concurrent findings in the courts below.

Dictum of Lord Herschell, in The P. Caland, 68 L. T. Rep. 469, [1893] A. C. 207, explained by Lord Davey.

Judgment of the court below reversed on the facts and evidence.—MONTGOMERY & Co. v. WALLACE-JAMES, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 73; 73 L. J. P. C. 25; 90 L. T. 1.

2. Reference of action to master—Practice—R. S. C., ord. 14, r. 7.—Where an action is referred to a master under ord. 14, r. 7, he is in the position of an arbitrator, and no appeal lies from his decision.—FRASER v. FRASER (No. 2), K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 245; 90 L. T. 709.

See also Practice, 1-4.

APPORTIONMENT:—

1. Mortgage—Deficient security—Tenant for life and remainderman—Capital and income—Apportionment—Settled fund—Authorized investment.—The correct principle of apportionment is that stated in In re Moore, (1885) 54 L. J. Ch. 432, which had since been followed in In re Barker, (1897) W. N 154, Lyon v. Mitchell, (1899) W. N. 27, In re Alston, [1901] 2 Ch. 584, and Stewart v. Kingsale, [1902] 1 I. R. 496.

In re Foster, (1890) 45 Ch. D. 629, and In re Phillimore, [1903] 1 Ch. 942, overruled.—ATKINSON, RE, BARBERS COMPANY v. GROSE-SMITH, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 160; 73 L. J. Ch. 585; 90 L. T. 825.

ARBITRATION:—

1. Costs—Discretion of arbitrator—Award fees—Costs of reference—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 4, 14, 15 (2).—Costs left to the discretion of the arbitrator, but not dealt with by him, only follow the event when the matter is referred by the court under section 14 of the Arbitration Act, and not when the action is stayed and arbitration is directed by the court under the submission of the parties, for to such a reference section 15 (2) does not apply.—WARBURG v. MCKERROW, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 644.

2. Ouster of jurisdiction of the court—Deficiency in pleading—Waiver of right to object—Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. lxxxviii.), s. 88, sub-sections 14, 22; s. 202—Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxii.), s. 43, Schedule.—Where by private Acts of Parliament and a scheduled agreement regulating the rights and duties of the co-plaintiffs (traders and manufacturers at W. and the corporation of W.) and the defendants, it was in fact provided that any difference arising between the parties as to the statutes and agreement should be determined by arbitration, an action brought by the co-plaintiffs against the defendants in respect of a certain dispute between them arising under the statutes was ordered to be dismissed as between the corporation of W. and the defendants, and stayed until the determination by arbitration of the dispute as between the traders and manufacturers at W. and the defendants, the jurisdiction of the court being ousted, and no deficiency in pleading and no waiver by the parties could give such jurisdiction.

So held by Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ. (dissentiente Cozens-Hardy, L.J.), reversing the decision of Byrne, J.—CROSFIELD v. MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO., C.A., 635; [1904] 2 Ch. 123; 73 L. J. Ch. 345; 90 L. T. 557.

ASSIGNMENT:—

Debt—Absolute assignment in writing—Notice—Written request to debtor to pay third party—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover £3 263, which the plaintiffs claimed had been assigned to them by K. & Co. K. & Co. who owed money to the plaintiffs, sold goods to the defendants for £369 and £3,263 respectively. On the 6th of January, 1903, K. & Co. wrote to the plaintiffs enclosing a document which the plaintiffs were to forward to the defendants. This document was written on one sheet of paper which consisted of two detachable parts, and was as follows: "To D. & Co. (the defendants). Dear Sirs,—Kindly sign the attached letter and forward the same to Messrs. B., Sons, & Co. (the plaintiffs).—Yours truly, K. & Co." "To Messrs. B., Sons, & Co. (the plaintiffs). Dear Sirs,—Herewith we beg to confirm that we shall remit, subject to the approval of goods, the amount of invoice—£369 for eight, and £3,263 for seventy-five, packages raw rubber received to-day from K. & Co. When due, direct to your good selves for account of K. & Co." This part was intended to be signed by the defendants. The plaintiffs, on the 7th of January, forwarded this document to the defendants to their local works at Birmingham, and the letter attached was signed by the local manager of the defendants at Birmingham, who returned it to the plaintiffs. The local manager of the defendants had no authority from the defendants to sign the document on their behalf, and he omitted to notify the defendants that he had signed it. The defendants being unaware of the letter so signed, paid the sum of £3,263 to K. & Co. direct, who subsequently became bankrupt. The plaintiffs thereupon brought the present action.

Held, that the document above referred to was not an assignment of the debt due by the defendants to K. & Co., and that the action should be dismissed. Decision of Walton. J. (8 Com. Cas. 174), reversed. —BRANDTS v. DUNLOP RUBBER CO., C.A., 501; [1904] 1 K. B. 387; 73 L. J. K. B. 247; 90 L. T. 106.

See also Contract, 2; Mortgage, 1; Patent, 1.

AUCTIONEER:—

Sale of goods—Exceeding authority—Sale without reserve—Personal liability.—The defendant, an auctioneer, at a public auction held by him, put up a pony for sale, stating that it was to be sold without reserve, and giving the name of the owner. The plaintiff was the highest bidder, and the pony was knocked down to him. There was in fact a reserve price placed upon the pony, but this had escaped the notice of the defendant until after the sale to the plaintiff. The defendant made no note or memorandum of the sale in his book. In an action brought by the plaintiff for the delivery up of the pony, or, alternatively, for damages for breach of warranty of authority by the defendant to sell it without reserve.

Held, first, that, the value of the pony being more than £20, section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, afforded an answer to the first part of the claim; and secondly, that there had been no breach of warranty of authority to sell the pony without reserve, inasmuch as there was—apart from the provisions of that section—a contract of sale which was binding upon the defendant's principal.—RAINBOW v. HOWKINS, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 322; 73 L. J. K. B. 641.

AUSTRALIA, LAW of:—

Customs Act, 1901, ss. 127, 192—Ship's stores in bond—Seals broken beyond limit of jurisdiction—Penalties.—By the Australian Customs Act, 1901 (Act No. 6 of 1901), ships bringing into Australian ports dutiable articles carried as ships' stores are not liable to pay duty on such stores if they are sealed up by a revenue officer on arrival at the first port in Australia, and not used until after the departure of the ship from her last port of departure in Australia. A penalty is imposed for entering any port in Australia with such seal broken. Where the seal had been broken, and the stores used, by order of the master of a ship during a voyage between two ports in Australia, but on the high seas beyond the limit of Australian territorial jurisdiction,

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the master was liable to the penalty imposed by the Act.—PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. KINGSTON, P.C.; [1903] A. C. 471; 72 L. J. P.C. 123; 89 L. T. 222.

BAILMENT:—

Bailor and bailee—Carriage lent to bailee—Negligence of bailee's servant—Scope of employment—Liability of bailee for damage caused to carriage by his servant.—The plaintiff, a coachbuilder, lent the defendant a dog-cart for use while he repaired the defendant's trap. The defendant's coachman without his master's knowledge or permission, took out the dog-cart one night for a drive on his own account and damaged the dog-cart by negligently driving it into a tramcar.

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover damages from the defendant for the damage done to the dog-cart.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Channell, JJ., 51 W. R. 558) reversed.—SAUNDERSON v. COLLINS, C.A., 354; [1904] 1 K. B. 628; 73 L. J. K. B. 358; 90 L. T. 243.

BANKER:—

Stolen cheques—Payment for a customer—Collecting agents — Holders for value — Special crossing — "Holder"—Addition to crossing—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 77, sub-section 3; ss. 78, 82.—An account was opened by N. with stolen cheques at the defendant bank, and stolen cheques were paid in from time to time. N. knew at the time of opening the account that the bank's practice was not to discount bills, and that cheques paid in would not be paid against until cleared. On paying in the counter-clerk entered the amount in a book and handed the cheque and paying-in slip to a clerk, who entered the particulars in the waste-book. The cheque was put in a box, the paying-in slip was then given to the ledger clerk, who posted then and there the amount in the ledger to the credit of N.'s account. The cheque was crossed generally. The bank specially crossed the cheque to W. D. & Co., and impressed on the cheque the words "account Economic (defendant) Bank." From time to time the cheques were forwarded to W. D. & Co. for clearance. If no notice of dishonour from W. D. & Co. was received by 9 a.m. on the day following the defendant bank entered the amount of the prior day's cheques to the credit of N. in his pass-book, but under the date of the paying in of the cheque. The defendant bank had a current account, which was in credit, and a loan account, which was in debit, with W. D. & Co. W. D. & Co. held securities exceeding in value the debit to the loan account, specifically deposited by the defendant bank. There was no negligence or want of good faith on the part of the defendant bank.

Held, that the ledger entries did not constitute the bank holders for value. The bank was an agent to collect, and received payment for their customer. The clearing agents had no lien on the cheques by reason of the debit to the loan account. The impressed words did not amount to an addition to the crossing. The defendant bank could cross specially the cheques crossed generally: section 77 (3). "Holder" does not necessarily mean "holder for value."—AKROKERRI (ASHANTI) MINES (LIMITED) v. ECONOMIC BANK, K.B.D., 670; [1904] 2 K. B. 465.

See also Mistake, 1.

BANKRUPTCY:—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy notice—Stay of execution—Judgment summons—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g)—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 25, rr. 17, 25, 26, 27.—A creditor having obtained judgment in the High Court issued a judgment summons in the county court against the debtor, and also a bankruptcy notice, under which an act of bankruptcy became completed before an order was made on the judgment summons. After the order had been made another creditor presented a bankruptcy petition founded on the above act of bankruptcy.

Held, that as there was a completed act of bankruptcy before the making of an order on the judgment summons, a receiving order ought to be made.—A DEBTOR, RE, ROCK RED BRICK CO., EX PARTE, Bkcy., 302; 90 L. T. 64.

2. Agreement for balance payable by instalments—Default—Garnishee order nisi—Bankruptcy notice—Judgment creditor—Judgment debtor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g).—A debtor entered into an agreement with his creditor that he should pay a certain sum down, and by way of collateral security consent to judgment for the remainder, payable by certain instalments. Judgment having been signed against him for the balance yet due, the creditor obtained a garnishee order nisi to attach all debts due to the debtor from his bankers. Shortly afterwards, two instalments being still owing on the judgment, the creditor issued a bankruptcy notice for these overdue instalments, after deducting the amount which had been garnished. The registrar set aside the bankruptcy notice on the ground that the creditor having issued a garnishee order, the proceedings on which were still pending, was not entitled under section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to issue the notice.

Held, on appeal, that the decision of the registrar was right; and that the notice was bad, as being one which required the debtor to pay in accordance with the provisions of the agreement and not in accordance with the terms of the judgment.

In re Feast, 31 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 286, 4 Morell 37, discussed.—JUDGMENT DEBTOR, A, RE, C.A., 178.

3. Appeals from county courts—Leave to appeal—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 104—Bankruptcy Appeals (County Courts) Act, 1884 (47 Vict. c. 9), s. 2—Bankruptcy Rules, rr. 129 (2), 134 (a).—Except by leave of the county court judge no appeal lies to the Divisional Court from any order relating to property when it is apparent on the face of the proceedings that the money or money's worth involved does not exceed £50 in value. A refusal of leave to appeal is not an "order subject to appeal" within the meaning of section 104 (2) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—EVERSON, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 656.

4. Discharge—Conditional order—Failure to comply with terms—Modification of order—"No reasonable probability" of complying with terms—Bankruptcy

Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8, sub-section 2—Bankruptcy Rules, r. 244.—An application, under the proviso at the end of section 8, sub-section 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, for the modification of the terms of a conditional order of discharge, ought to be made by the bankrupt himself, not by the trustee in the bankruptcy.

Upon such an application, what the court has to consider is whether there is "no reasonable probability" of the bankrupt's being able to comply with the terms of the order of discharge.

The fact that the bankrupt has failed to comply with the requirements of rule 244 of the Bankruptcy Rules is not a bar to his making an application for the modification of the conditions imposed by the order of discharge.—JOHN ROBERTS & Co., RE, BONZOLINE MANUFACTURING Co, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 299; 73 L. J. K. B. 724.

5. Discharge conditional on bankrupt consenting to judgment—Refusal to consent—Re-hearing.—The bankrupt was a captain in the army with no means but his pay, and his insolvency was due to damages given against him in an action for breach of promise, the plaintiff being the only creditor. The registrar made an order for the bankrupt's discharge on condition of his consenting to judgment for £600 being entered against him, to which he refused his consent. On a re-hearing of his application for a discharge the registrar substantially repeated his former order. The bankrupt appealed and asked for an order suspending his discharge for two years only.

Held, that though the bankrupt was not entitled to such an order as of right, it was a proper order to make under the circumstances.—GASKELL RE, GASKELL, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 478; 73 L. J. K. B. 656.

6. Discharge—Misdemeanour of bankrupt—"Special reasons"—Discharge suspended—Application for re-hearing refused—Right of bankrupt to apply—Practice—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c 62), s. 11, sub-sections 9, 10, 12—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8, sub-sections, 1, 2.—Upon an application for a discharge under section 8 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, by a bankrupt who has been convicted of an offence against section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, the court has a discretion, and may take into consideration as "special reasons" for granting the discharge, the circumstances under which the offence was committed.—SOLOMONS, RE, THE BANKRUPT, EX PARTE C.A., 473; [1904] 1 K. B. 106; 73 L. J. K. B. 55; 89 L. T. 637.

7. Execution—Payment to creditor—Withdrawal by sheriff—Bankruptcy of debtor—Completion of execution—Title of trustee—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 45—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11.—On the 22nd of July, 1903, the sheriff levied on the goods of the debtor at the Alexandra and Adelphi Hotels. On the 27th of July he withdrew, on the instructions of the judgment creditor, from the Alexandra Hotel on part payment.

On the 28th of July the debtor sold to the execution creditor goods at the Alexandra Hotel which had been seized, and on the 29th of July he also sold to the execution creditor goods at the same place which had not been seized. On the same day an arrangement was made by which the debtor received credit for the amount in the hands of the sheriff and for the goods sold, and he paid the balance direct to the execution creditor.

The sheriff withdrew, and on the 12th of August he paid over the amount in his hands to the execution creditor, having received no notice of a bankruptcy petition.

On the 20th of August a receiving order was made against the debtor on his own petition.

Held, that the trustee in bankruptcy had no title against the execution creditor to the money or the goods.

In re Pollock and Pendle, 87 L. T. Rep. 238, distinguished.

In re Ford, Ex parte Official Receiver, 81 L. T. Rep. 648, [1900] 1 Q. B. 264, applied.—JENKINS, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 90 L. T. 65.

8.—Jurisdiction—County Court—Claim arising out of the bankruptcy—Lease—Disclaimer—Mortgages by demise—Option to take vesting order or be excluded—Application by landlord—Question of merger—Intention—Evidence—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 102, sub-section 1.—Where a lessee is adjudicated bankrupt in a county court, and his trustee disclaims the lease, an application by the landlord for an order putting mortgagees by demise to their election to take a vesting order of the lease cum onere, or be excluded from all interest, is an application to enforce a claim arising out of the bankruptcy which could not have been enforced by action in the High Court prior to the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and therefore by virtue of s. 102, sub-section 1, the county court has jurisdiction, without any consent of the parties, to decide all questions of law or fact arising on the application, including the question whether the lease is subsisting, or whether it was merged by a temporary coalescence of the freehold and leasehold estates in the lessee.

The lessee's intention to prevent merger may be gathered (inter alia) from his dealings with the property subsequent to the date of coalescence.—LEA v. THURSBY (No. 2), Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 57; 73 L. J. Ch. 518; 90 L. T. 667.

9.—Marriage settlement—Covenant for future settlement of property—Transfer of property to trustees of settlement after act of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47, sub-section 2.—In construing s. 47, sub-section 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "Any covenant or contract made in consideration of marriage for the future settlement on or for the settlor's wife or children of any money or property wherein he had not at the date of his marriage any estate or interest, whether vested or contingent, in possession or remainder, and not being money or property of or in right of his wife, shall on his becoming bankrupt before the property or money has been actually transferred or paid pursuant to the contract or covenant, be void against the trustee in the bankruptcy," the words "on his becoming bankrupt" must be interpreted to mean on his committing an act of bankruptcy within three months of the presentation of a bankruptcy petition on which he is subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt.—REIS, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 302; [1904] 1 K. B. 451; 90 L. T. 62.

10. Notice—Creditor's address for service—Power of the Bankruptcy Court to go behind the judgment—Irregularity—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g); s. 7, sub-section 3; s. 143—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 to 1890, Appendix, Form No. 6—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 2.—The Court of Bankruptcy possesses the power, on the hearing of a bankruptcy petition founded on a judgment debt, to go behind the judgment to inquire into the consideration for the debt. But the judgment is conclusive unless the consideration can be questioned. If a creditor who issues a bankruptcy notice occasionally leaves the address which he has given in the notice, this will not of itself render the notice bad if the address is such either that he can be found, or the debtor is able to pay or compound for the debt, there during the seven days limited by the notice. Nor does it matter if this address is only a temporary address, such as an hotel, if the creditor has no permanent home, or that he left that address on the last of the seven days limited by the notice. But if he abandons such an address this will render the notice inefficient.

In re Stogdon, Ex parte Leigh, [1895] 2 Q. B. 534, 44 W. R. Dig. 13, discussed.

If at the date of the trial of an action for tort a female defendant is unmarried, a judgment can be obtained against her creating a personal debt.—BEAUCHAMP, RE, BEAUCHAMP, EX PARTE, C.A., 545; [1904] 1 K. B. 572; 73 L. J. K. B. 311; 90 L. T. 594.

11. Notice—Notice based on two judgment debts—Irregularity—Right of court to amend—Practice—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g); s. 143.—If a bankruptcy notice is founded on two judgment debts, and objection is taken to it on that account, leave to amend such notice will not be given by the court.

In re Collier, Ex Parte Dan Rylands (Limited), 8 Morr. 80, 40 W. R. Dig. 21, followed.—O. C. S. (A DEBTOR), RE, THE DEBTOR, EX PARTE, C.A., 595; [1904] 2 K. B. 161; 73 L. J. K. B. 585

12. Notice—Procedure—Judgment debt—Agreement to pay judgment debt by instalments—Arrears of instalments—Act of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy notice for overdue instalments—Notice to pay "in accordance with the terms of the judgment"—Validity of notice.—Section 4, sub-section 1, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, specifying acts of bankruptcy, must be strictly interpreted. Therefore, a bankruptcy notice which requires payment of a judgment debt "in accordance with the terms of the judgment" is not a good notice within sub-section 1 (g) if founded, not on the judgment according to its terms, but on the judgment as modified by some collateral agreement.

A creditor and his debtor agreed in writing that the debt should stand at a certain sum, and that the debtor should consent to a judgment against him for that sum, but that the amount should be payable by instalments. Judgment was accordingly signed for the whole sum, but without any reference to payment by instalments. The debtor failing to pay some of the instalments as they fell due, the creditor served him with a bankruptcy notice requiring payment, not of the whole judgment debt, the final instalment of which had not yet become due, but of the total amount of the instalments then in arrear, as being "the amount due on the judgment."

Held, that the notice was bad in that it did not require payment of the debt "in accordance with the terms of the judgment" within the above sub-section.—H. B., RE, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 94; 73 L. J. K. B. 1; 89 L. T. 592.

13. Partnership—Consolidation of proceedings in bankruptcy with administration of the estate of a deceased debtor in bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 106, 112, 125.—The court has power to consolidate proceedings in the bankruptcy of one partner with the administration of the estate of a deceased partner under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. — GREAVES, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE Bkcy., 633; [1904] 2 K. B. 493.

14. Proof—Amendment—Omission to value security—Inadvertence—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule I., r. 10; Schedule II., rr. 13, 14.—A limited company presented a proof against a bankrupt's estate for calls on partly-paid shares, stating that the company held no security for their debt. After the proof had been admitted the company altered its articles of association so as to give itself a lien for calls upon fully-paid shares, a large number of which had been held by the bankrupt and were still held by his trustee. The company applied for leave to amend their proof by inserting such lien upon the fully-paid shares as security for the debt and valuing the same.

Held, that the company had not omitted to value their security through inadvertence and could not be allowed to amend their proof and rely on their security, which they must be deemed to have surrendered to the trustee.—ROWE, RE, WEST COAST GOLD FIELDS, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 608; [1904] 2 K. B. 489.

15. Proof—Gambling debt—Gaming Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9).—The debtor had been sued by a creditor for a gambling debt, and successfully pleaded the Gaming Act of 1892. After the decision against him the creditor wrote to the debtor's club informing them of his conduct. The debtor thereupon agreed to pay the creditor £100 in cash and to give bills for the remainder of the debt, in consideration of the creditor withdrawing those letters, which agreement was carried out. Upon the debtor becoming bankrupt the creditor proved in the bankruptcy for the amount of the bills then due, but his proof was rejected by the trustee.

Held, that the bills had not been given for an illegal consideration, and that the proof was wrongly rejected on that ground.—BROWNE, RE, MARTINGELL, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 384; [1904] 2 K. B. 133; 73 L. J. K. B. 446; 90 L. T. 291.

16. Proof—Withdrawal—Substitution of fresh proof—Voluntary payment by third party for loss incurred—Right of proof for the whole debt.—A creditor who has received a voluntary payment from a stranger in consideration of the fact that the creditor has sustained a loss by the acts of the bankrupt, even although such payment only represents a part of the debt due to the creditor, and the creditor gives the stranger credit for it in proving his debt, nevertheless is entitled to enter an amended proof, claiming the whole amount of the debt, as against the trustee in bankruptcy.

Decision of Buckley, J., (ante, p. 336, W. N. 1904, p. 64), affirmed.—ROWE, RE, DERENBERG, EX PARTE, C.A., 628; [1904] 2 K. B. 483; 73 L. J. K. B. 594.

17. Receiving order—Bankrupt presenting his own petition—Creditors—Right to annul adjudication—Abuse of process of the court—Rescission of receiving order—Adjudication not for benefit of creditors—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 7, 8 (1), 35.—A debtor, having had various committal orders made against him on judgment summonses, presented his own petition in bankruptcy, upon which a receiving order was made. The only creditors were a firm of solicitors, to whom he was indebted for a little over £200. They applied under section 35 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, that the adjudication made on the debtor's petition should be annulled, as being an abuse of the process of the court.

Held, that the presentation of such a petition by the debtor under the circumstances of the case was not an abuse of the process of the court, and did not entitle the court to annul the adjudication.

In re Roberts, 48 W. R. 132, [1900] 1 Q. B. 122, approved.

Ex parte Painter, In re Painter, 43 W. R. 144, [1895] 1 Q. B. 85, and In re Betts, Ex parte Official Receiver, 49 W. R. 447, [1901] 2 K. B. 39, distinguished.—HANCOCK, RE, HILLEARYS, EX PARTE, C.A., 546; [1904] 1 K. B. 585; 73 L. J. K. B. 245; 90 L. T. 389.

18. Right of trustee to books of bankrupt—Books of underwriter at Lloyd's—Underwriting as agent in the names of other persons—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 50—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886-1890, r. 349.—An underwriter at Lloyd's entered into agreements with other persons to act as their agent to carry on the business of an underwriter at Lloyd's in accordance with the custom of Lloyd's, and it was a term of the agreements that he should provide and keep books which the other parties should at all times be allowed to inspect. The agent in fact kept one set of books only in which his accounts with the other persons were entered. On the bankruptcy of the agent the other persons set up a claim to joint property in the books, and refused to hand them over to the trustee in his bankruptcy.

Held, on appeal (reversing the decision of Buckley, J.), that the other persons had a joint property in the books with the bankrupt, and that the trustee in the bankruptcy was not entitled to have the books handed over to him, but had merely the right to inspect them.—BURNAND, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 437; [1904] 2 K. B. 68; 73 L. J. K. B. 413; 90 L. T. 292.

19. Settlement—Avoidance of voluntary settlement—Purchase for valuable consideration—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.—A bankrupt, within two years of his bankruptcy, in consideration of the trustees of a former settlement consenting to the partial revocation of the same, executed a new settlement with the same trustees, settling further property, and giving the trustees power to pay or withhold the income of the settled funds at their discretion.

Held, that the trustees of the settlement were not purchasers or incumbrancers for valuable consideration, and that the new settlement must be declared void as against the trustee in the bankruptcy.—PARRY, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 256; [1904] 1 K. B. 129; 73 L. J. K. B. 83; 89 L. T. 612.

20. Settlement of settlor's own property—Limitation of life interest to settlor determinable on bankruptcy—Second bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.—In 1893 the bankrupt had settled property on trustees who were to pay him the income, but upon bankruptcy his rights to the income were to cease, and the trustees were left with the power to apply the income to his support or accumulate it as they thought fit. In 1900 he became bankrupt; the trustees raised enough out of the settled funds to pay the debts in full, but the bankruptcy was not formally annulled. In 1902 he again became bankrupt, and the trustee in bankruptcy claimed the life income.

Held, that the trustee could not succeed, as the bankrupt's interest in the income had determined upon his bankruptcy in 1900, and passed to the trustees of the settlement.—JOHNSON, RE, MATTHEWS, EX PARTE, K.B.D., 304; [1904] 1 K. B. 134; 73 L. J. K. B. 220; 90 L. T. 61.

21. Transfer by the bankrupt of his own and another business to a limited company—Relation back of trustee's title—Rights of debenture-holders—Bankruptcy Act. 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (b); ss. 43, 44, 49—13 Eliz. c. 5.—The bankrupt transferred all his own assets and a business which he had agreed to purchase from another trader named Melinsky, within three months of his bankruptcy, to a limited company in consideration of shares and debentures, leaving himself saddled with debts amounting to over £13,000 and no means of paying for them.

Held, that the transfer was void as an act of bankruptcy, and that the trustee was entitled to the assets of the company, subject to the rights (if any) of the debenture-holders.

The debentures in the company had, by direction of the bankrupt, been allotted as follows: 18 to the debtor; 30 to one Nevill, who had assisted the bankrupt in transferring his assets to the company; 30 to Melinsky, in payment for his business; 7 to Brodsky, a creditor; and 15 to Zisselman, another creditor of the bankrupt. After the bankruptcy the two last debenture-holders sold their debentures to Bernstein and Levartofsky for sums far below their face value. Bernstein and Levartofsky knew of the bankruptcy, but made no inquiries.

Held, that Melinsky's debentures were a charge upon the property of the company now vested in the trustee, but that Nevill was not entitled to any charge because he had notice of the bankrupt's fraud, nor Bernstein and Levartofsky, because, knowing what they did, they ought not to have purchased their debentures at an undervalue without inquiry.—SLOBODINSKY, RE, MOORE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 156; [1903] 2 K. B. 517; 72 L. J. K. B. 883; 89 L. T. 190.

See also Criminal Law, 1, 2.

BILL OF LADING.—See Ship.

BRITISH COLUMBIA, LAW of:—

Income tax — Income — Fluctuating earnings — Assessment Act (Rev. Stat. of Brit. Col., 1897, c. 179).—The respondent, an engine-driver in the employment of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., was not paid fixed wages, but received pay according to the number of miles which his engine was driven.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that his earnings, though fluctuating and uncertain, were "income" within the meaning of the Assessment Act, and were liable to taxation.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA v. OSTRUM. P.C.; [1904] A. C. 144; 73 L. J. P. C. 11; 89 L. T. 509.

BUILDING AGREEMENT:—

Architect's certificate—Defective work—Damages.—By a building agreement it was provided, inter alia, that the architect, who was appointed by the employer for the purposes of the agreement, should have power (a) to order the removal of any materials which were not in his opinion in accordance with the specification, and the re-erection of any work done with improper materials; (b) to direct the contractor to make good at his own expense, unless the architect should decide that he ought to be paid, any defects appearing within twelve months from the completion of the works, and arising in the opinion of the architect from defective materials or workmanship. The agreement also provided that the contractor should be paid under certificates to be issued by the architect, and that no such certificate should be conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of any work or materials to which it related so as to relieve the contractor from his liability to make good all defects as provided by the agreement.

The plaintiff, the contractor, claimed payment under the architect's certificates for work done. The defendant, the employer, counterclaimed for damages in respect of defective work and materials and the cost of re-executing such defective work.

Held, that, in the absence of any order by the architect, as provided by the agreement, directing the contractor to make good defects, the court had no jurisdiction, and that the counterclaim could not be sustained.—ROBINS v. GODDARD, K.B.D., 587; 73 L. J. K. B. 712; 90 L. T. 772.

BUILDING SCHEME:—

Mutual covenants—Waiver—Highway—Cul de sac—Dedication to the public.—A corporation having acquired land to widen a street sold surplus land by auction under conditions requiring the purchasers to observe the bye-laws as to building.

The corporation reserved the right to waive or alter any stipulations as to any land not sold at the sale or, with the consent of the purchaser, as to any land so sold. The corporation consented to alter the plans of a purchaser so that the air space required by the bye-laws was provided out of a square, and not out of the land sold at the sale. The square was a cul de sac, but not separated by any bar from the highway. It had never been paved or repaired by the local authority.

Held, that there was under the circumstances no building scheme which the corporation was not at liberty to alter, and that, although a cul de sac may be a highway, no dedication of the square to the public had been proved, and that the user proved was only that of private rights of way to the houses in the square.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND LONDON PROPERTY INVESTMENT TRUST v. RICHMOND CORPORATION, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 89 L. T. 700.

See also Covenant.

CANADA, LAW of:—

1. Appeal—Special leave.—Special leave to appeal from a decree of the Supreme Court of Canada will not be granted to a petitioner who has elected to appeal to that conrt and not to his Majesty direct, unless a question of law is raised of sufficient importance to justify it. — CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY v. BLAIN, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 453.

2. Criminal law—Powers of Provincial Legislature.—A Lord's Day Observance Act, which imposes penalties for the infringement of its provisions, is a matter of criminal law reserved by section 91 (27) of the British North America Act, 1867, for the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, and it is therefore ultra vires of a Provincial Legislature to pass such an Act.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR ONTARIO v. HAMILTON STREET RAILWAY CO., P.C.; [1903] A. C. 524; 72 L. J. P. C. 105; 89 L. T. 107.

3. Goods imported into Canada—Ship—Registration.—A foreign-built ship brought to Canada comes under the head of "goods imported into Canada" within the meaning of the Customs Tariff Act, 1897, and the imposition of a duty upon such ship under the Act prior to registration in Canada is not repugnant to the provisions of the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—ALGOMA CENTRAL RAILWAY CO. v. THE KING, P.C.; [1903] A. C. 478; 72 L. J. P. C. 108; 89 L. T. 100.

4. Husband and wife—Wife binding herself for husband—Civil Code, art. 1301.—By article 1301 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada "a wife cannot bind herself with or for her husband otherwise than as being common as to property; any such obligation contracted by her in any other quality is void and of no effect."

Held, that the words "for her husband" meant generally in any way for his purposes, and should not be restricted to the case of a wife becoming surety for her husband; and, if it was proved that she had in fact bound herself for her husband, the ignorance of the obligee as to the real facts did not affect the operation of the article.

Therefore where a wife borrowed money upon the security of real estate which was her separate property, and handed the money to her husband to be applied by him to his own purposes, at his discretion,

Held, that the security was void.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—TRUST AND LOAN CO. OF CANADA v. GAUTHIER, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 94; 73 L. J. P. C. 5; 89 L. T. 453.

5. Law of Yukon Territory—Practice—Right of appeal—Judgment whether final or interlocutory—Jurisdiction—Promissory note—Yukon Territory Act, 1899.—In an acton upon a document alleged by the plaintiffs to be a promissory note the judge at the trial ordered that, "as to the alleged note or paper writing mentioned in paragraph 2 of the plaintiff's statement of claim," the plaintiff's action be dismissed.

Held, that this was a final judgment that the sum of money represented by the alleged note was not due, and, notice of appeal not having been given within the time limited by the Yukon Territory Act, 1899, no appeal lay to the Supreme Court of British Columbia, and consequently a further appeal from that court to the Supreme Court of Canada was incompetent.

Judgment of the court below reversed.—MCDONALD v. BELCHER, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 429; 90 L. T. 735.

6. Mining royalties—"Placer" mining grant—Renewal—Conditions—Publication of regulations.—Under the regulations made under the Dominion Lands Act (Rev. Stat. Can. 1886, c. 54) and in force in the Yukon Territory, a miner who has obtained a "placer" grant has no absolute right to a renewal of his grant, and on renewal holds under an annual grant in substitution for, not in continuation of, his original grant, and subject to all such regulations as may be in force when the renewal grant comes into operation, though they may not have been in force at the date of the original grant.

By section 91 of the Act regulations made by the Governor in Council under the Act have force and effect only after they have been published for four successive weeks in the Gazette.

Held, that the regulations did not take effect till the expiration of a period of four weeks from the date of the first publication.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—CHAPPELLE v. REX, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 127; 73 L. J. P. C. 18; 89 L. T. 513.

7. Practice — Leave to appeal — Multiplication of appeals. — Where an appellant in Canada has appealed from the Court of Appeal for the province to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Judicial Committee will not give leave for a further appeal except in a very strong case.

More latitude will be given to a respondent wishing to appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court.

Rule laid down in Prince v. Gagnon, 8 App. Cas. 103, followed.—CLERGUE v. MURRAY, P.C.; [1903] A. C. 521; 72 L. J. P. C. 99; 89 L. T. 373.

CAPE of GOOD HOPE, LAW of:—

Martial law regulations—Review of martial law—Convictions by Supreme Court—Jurisdiction.—The Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope has no jurisdiction to review judgments of martial law courts.

Where a deputy administrator of martial law was also a resident magistrate, and by mistake used in proceedings relating to acts contravening martial law regulations the printed forms of his magistrate's court with headings appropriate thereto,

Held, that his convictions could not on that account be quashed as irregular; it appearing that they were in fact made in the administration of martial law.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE v. VAN REENAN, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 114; 73 L. J. P. C. 13; 89 L. T. 591.

CARRIER:—

1. Contract—Exemption—Negligence of servants—"Loss of goods which can be covered by insurance."—Goods were shipped at a jetty on the River Thames in the defendants' barge for carriage by them to a place higher up the river. The carriage was subject to the following clause: "The rates charged by us are for conveyance only, and we will not be liable for any loss of or damage to goods which can be covered by insurance. The terms of the marine or other policy should stipulate that insurance is effected without recourse to lighterman." After shipment the goods were lost, owing to the negligence of the defendants' servants.

Held, that, though the loss was one which would be covered by an ordinary marine policy on goods, the clause did not in sufficiently clear and unambiguous terms exempt the defendants from liability for loss arising from the negligence of their servants.

Judgment of Walton, J. (51 W. R. 477, [1903] 1 K. B. 750), affirmed.—PRICE v. UNION LIGHTERAGE Co., C.A., 325; [1904] 1 K. B. 412; 73 L. J. K. B. 222; 89 L. T. 731.

2. Railway company—Liability—Inherent unfitness of thing carried.—A railway company contracted with the plaintiff to carry an engine from the plaintiff's premises to a station on their line. The engine was on wheels and fitted with shafts, but one of the shafts contained a latent flaw. The railway company had it carried by horses, that being the mode of carriage contemptated by both parties. While the engine was on the road the shaft which contained the flaw broke, the horses bolted, and the engine was upset and damaged.

Held, that the railway were not liable for the damage caused, as it arose from an inherent vice in the thing contracted to be carried.—LISTER v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY Co., K.B.D., 12; [1903] 1 K. B. 878; 72 L. J. K. B. 385; 88 L. T. 561.

CHARGING ORDER:—

Debentures—"Stock or shares"—Ord. 46, r. 1—Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 14.—The court has no power, under section 14 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to make an order charging debentures in a company with the payment of a judgment debt.—SELLAR v. CHARLES BRIGHT & Co., C.A., 563; [1904] 2 K. B. 446; 73 L. J. K. B. 643.

See also Receiver, 2.

CHARITY:—

1. Charitable gift—Ambiguity—Uncertainty of object—Erroneous recital in codicil.—A testatrix by will made in 1897, among other legacies to charitable institutions, bequeathed to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., mentioning accurately the name of its secretary and address of its office, £250. By codicil made in 1902, after reciting twice incorrectly that she had given by will £500 to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W. . . . and amongst others, to St. M.'s Orphanage, Bayswater, £100, she revoked all the legacies, "and instead thereof" bequeathed £500 each to the Royal Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., and to St. M.'s Orphanage.

The legacy of £500 was claimed by the Royal Hospital for Incurables and by the plaintiff institution, founded in 1861 by the name of the British Home for Incurables, and in 1899 incorporated by Royal Charter by its present name.

Held, that, having regard to entries in a book kept by the testatrix containing particulars of her charitable contributions, she distinguished the two institutions as the "Royal" and the "British," and, therefore, on the true construction of the codicil, the Royal Hospital for Incurables was entitled to the legacy.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (89 L. T. Rep. 495) reversed.—BRITISH HOME AND HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES v. ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES, C.A.; 90 L. T. 601.

2. Charitable gift—Bequest for "Home of Rest for Lady Teachers"—Validity.—A testator bequeathed money and two leasehold houses to establish a Home of Rest for Lady Teachers.

Held, that the bequest was a valid charitable gift as being beneficial to the community.—ESTLIN, RE, PRITCHARD v. THOMAS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 72 L. J. Ch. 687; 89 L. T. 88.

See also Advowson, 1.

CHARTER-PARTY.—See Ship.

COMPANY:—

1. Articles of association—Construction—Transfer—"Usual common form"—Address of transferor—Number of share—Immaterial details.—A provision in the articles of association of a limited company that transfers of shares shall be in writing and in the usual common form, means that the transfer shall be in that form in all material respects; and a transfer which omits details usually inserted, such as the address of the transferor or the number of the share, but which details are, under the circumstances of the case, immaterial, may, nevertheless, comply with the provision. — LETHEBY & CHRISTOPHER, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 460; [1904] 1 Ch. 815; 73 L. J. Ch. 509; 90 L. T. 774.

2. Articles of association—Contract by company not to alter articles of association—Shares issued not bonâ fide—Control of voting—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 50.—A company cannot validly by contract deprive itself of its statutory right under section 50 of the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), to alter its articles of association.

Where directors issue shares not bonâ fide for the advantage of the company, but for the purpose of altering the voting power of the company and of controlling the holders of the greater number of shares, an injunction will be granted for the purpose of restraining them from employing the votes of the shareholders so created for such purpose.

The principle in Fraser v. Whalley, 2 H. & M. 10, 13 W. R. Ch. Dig. 42, applied. — PUNT v. SYMONS & Co., Ch.D. Byrne, J., 41; [1903] 2 Ch. 506; 72 L. J. Ch. 768; 89 L. T. 525.

3. Contract—Specific performance—Contract made before existence of company.—A company cannot by adoption or ratification obtain the benefit of a contract purporting to have been made on its behalf before the company came into existence.

Kelner v. Baxter, 15 L. T. Rep. 213, L. R. 2 C. P. 174, approved.

But the facts may show that a new contract was made with the company after its incorporation on the terms of the old contract.

Judgment of the court below reversed, on the ground that no such facts were proved in this case. —NATAL LAND AND COLONIZATION CO. v. PAULINE COLLIERY SYNDICATE, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 120; 73 L. J. P. C. 22; 87 L. T. 678.

4. Debentures—Covering deed before 1900—Specifically mortgaged property—Leasehold acquired after 1900 upon trusts of covering deed—Assignment to company—Sub-demise to trustees of covering deed—Registration of sub-demise—"Charge"—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 68), s. 14.—Trustees for the debenture-holders of a limited company were empowered by their trust deed, which was executed in 1897, to sell certain property thereby specifically mortgaged and to hold the proceeds upon trust (amongst other things) at the request of the company to purchase or acquire leasehold hereditaments, which were to be held upon the trusts of the specifically mortgaged property. In 1902 a portion of the proceeds of sale of the specifically mortgaged property was, at the request of the company, employed in the purchase of a leasehold public-house. The company took an assignment of the house and then sub-demised the property to the trustees for the whole term except the last day.

Held, that the sub-demise was a specific mortgage or charge upon the property within section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900, and must be registered under its provisions.

Decision of Byrne, J. (51 W. R. 508, [1903] 2 Ch. 527), affirmed.—CORNBROOK BREWERY CO. v. LAW DEBENTURE CORPORATION, C.A., 242; [1904] 1 Ch. 103; 73 L. J. Ch. 121; 89 L. T. 680.

5. Debentures—Deficient security—Principal or interest—Appropriation—Income tax.—By a debenture trust deed it was provided that the trustees should appropriate the proceeds of realization of the securities in the first place towards payment of all arrears of interest on the debentures; and, secondly, towards payment of the principal. The company made default; a debenture-holder's action was brought, and the trusts of the deed were ordered to be carried into execution. The securities were gradually realized. Orders were from time to time made under which certain sums were also paid on account of interest after deducting income tax, and under other orders payments were made on account generally of what was due for principal and interest. The securities had now all been realized, and the trustees had in their hands a sum of money which they proposed to pay to the debenture-holders. It was admitted that if the whole of the payments were attributed to principal they would be insufficient to discharge the full amount due. The Inland Revenue authorities claimed that all the payments on account generally ought to be attributed to interest in the first place, and that income tax should be deducted from them.

Held, that the provision in the trust deed for payment of interest in the first place was inserted for the benefit of the debenture-holders, and could be waived by them in the absence of opposition by the debtors; that, as between themselves and the trustees, the debenture-holders must elect whether they would take the money as principal or interest, without prejudice to the question whether in their hands it would afterwards be treated differently; and that income tax would be payable only out of such part of the funds as the debenture-holders elected to take as interest.—SMITH v. LAW GUARANTEE AND TRUST SOCIETY, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 500; 73 L. J. Ch. 233; 90 L. T. 659.

6. Debentures—Deposit of deeds—Priority—Constructive notice.—A company issued debentures, one of the conditions of which prohibited the creation of any mortgage or charge having priority over the debentures.

The company deposited title deeds to secure an overdraft with a bank. The bank manager knew that the company had issued debentures, but was not aware of the conditions. Subsequently a second debenture specifically referring to the first debentures was deposited with the bank to secure a further overdraft.

Held, that the bank was not affected with constructive notice of the conditions indorsed on the debentures, and was entitled to priority over the debentures. — VALLETORT SANITARY STEAM LAUNDRY CO., RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1903] 2 Ch. 654; 72 L. J. Ch. 674; 89 L. T. 60.

7. Debentures — Floating security — Execution—Agreement by company with sheriff to pay off judgment debt by instalments to avoid sale—Right to money.—Under a writ of fi. fa. the goods of a limited company were seized in execution of a judgment debt. In order to avoid a sale the company agreed with the sheriff, with the assent of the judgment creditor, that in consideration of his not selling the goods they would pay the sheriff out of the daily takings £3 5s. a day—£3 to go towards the paying off of the debt and 5s. for sheriff's charges. A receiver was subsequently appointed in a debenture-holders' action, and he claimed the sum of £75, the net amount in the hands of the sheriff.

Held, that the judgment creditor was entitled to retain the moneys.

Robson v. Smith, 43 W. R. 632, [1895] 2 Ch. 118, discussed.—ROBINSON v. BURNELL'S VIENNA BAKERY CO., K.B.D., 526.

8. Debentures—"Floating charge"—Mortgage—Assignment of present and future book debts—Debenture-holders—Priority—Registration of mortgages—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 14, sub-section 1 (d).—In October, 1902, a company, having to give security to certain guarantors, by deed assigned all its present and future book and other debts, with the benefit of all securities for the same, to a trustee, subject to redemption, in trust for the guarantors. The deed contained no express provision against possession being taken by the trustee, but contained a declaration that the trustee should at any time, if required by the guarantors, give notice of this assignment to the debtors of the company, with a proviso that it should not be incumbent on the trustee to give notice; there were also provisions that the trustee might at any time give notice, appoint a receiver, and exercise the statutory power of sale, but meantime he was not to be answerable for allowing the company to receive the book debts. A receiver having been subsequently appointed in a debenture-holder's action, the trustee now applied by motion in that action to enforce his security.

Held, that upon the true construction of the deed it was clearly intended that the company should carry on its business in the ordinary way and that the deed was a floating charge and void for want of registration in a question between the trustee and a creditor of the company.—ILLINGWORTH v. HOULDSWORTH, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 355.

9. Debentures—Floating security—Set-off—Second debenture-holders, right of—Liberty of company to carry on business.—A debenture issued by a trading company to their bankers and payable on the 1st of August, 1900, provided that the debenture should be a first charge upon all the company's undertaking and property present and future; that such charge was to be a floating security, but so that the company were not to be at liberty to create any mortgage or charge in priority to, or upon an equality with, that debenture; that the company should be at liberty to carry on their business until default should be made in payment of the principal sum secured, or until a receiver should be appointed, and that from and after such default, or the appointment of a receiver, the liberty of the company to carry on their business should forthwith cease and determine, and the charge created by the debenture should be immediately enforceable. The company subsequently issued to the defendants, with whom they had been and were trading, a debenture payable on the 1st of October, 1900, and expressed to be subject to the debenture held by the bankers. The company made default in payment both of the debenture issued to the bankers and of that issued to the defendants. The bankers took no steps to stop the company carrying on their business until the 2nd of October, 1901, when they appointed a receiver. In an action brought by the company and the bankers to recover from the defendants the balance of the price of goods sold and delivered by the company to the defendants between the 1st of July, 1900, and the 1st of October, 1901,

Held, that the defendants were entitled to set off the sum which on the 1st of October, 1900, became due under their debenture against the sum due to the plaintiffs for the goods.—NELSON & Co. v. FABER & Co., K.B.D.; [1903] 2 K. B. 367; 72 L. J. K. B. 771; 89 L. T. 21.

10. Debentures—Registration—Prior agreement—Date of creation of security—Limit of time for registration—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 14.—The fact of an agreement having been entered into by a limited company to issue debentures and to give them to one who advances money to the company as security for his advance, does not prevent debentures subsequently issued for the purpose being duly registered under section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900, more than twenty-one days after the date of the agreement, so long as they are registered within twenty-one days after the time of their being sealed and issued.

A limited company on the 1st of March, 1903, resolved to issue certain debentures, and in order to obtain an advance from the plaintiff, the company at the same time agreed to give him debentures of £1,000 as a security for the advance. These debentures were sealed but not registered, and were, on the 6th of April, cancelled and fresh ones were, on the 7th of April, sealed, and to the amount of £1,000 issued to the plaintiff. These latter debentures were registered on the 11th of April.

Held, that these debentures were duly registered within the twenty-one days limited by section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900.—DEFRIES & Co., RE, BOWEN v. DEFRIES & Co., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 253; [1904] 1 Ch. 37; 73 L. J. Ch. 1.

11. Debenture-holders' action—Debentures held by a trustee for creditors of lenders—Debt owed by lenders to company—Right of participation in fund available for debenture-holders.—P. was general assignee of the property of a firm, S., for the benefit of its creditors. As such assignee P. was entitled to certain debentures issued by a company, and was registered as holder thereof. The firm S. was indebted to the company in a sum which formed part of the property secured by the debentures. The debentures were indorsed with a condition that the moneys secured should be paid without regard to any equities between the company and the original or any intermediate holder. A debenture-holders' action having been brought against the company, and the usual judgment given, there was a fund in court in the action available for distribution among the debenture-holders.

Held, that P., not being a bonâ fide purchaser for value of the debentures, could not claim to share in the fund until the debt due from the firm to the company had been paid or brought into account, notwithstanding that he was the registered holder.

In re Goy & Co. (Limited), 48 W. R. 425, [1900] 2 Ch. 149, distinguished.—BROWN & GREGORY (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 412; [1904] 1 Ch. 627; 73 L. J. Ch. 430.

12. Debenture-holders' action—Insufficient assets—Cost of second mortgage debenture-holders made defendants.—In an action by first mortgage debenture-holders of a limited company, in which the company and the second mortgage debenture-holders were made defendants, the assets proved insufficient to satisfy the claims of the first mortgage debenture-holders.

On the further consideration of the action the question was raised whether the second mortgage debenture-holders made defendants ought to be allowed their costs.

Held, that the second mortgage debenture-holders made defendants were not entitled to costs.—CLAYTON ENGINEERING, &c., Co., RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 90 L. T. 283.

13. Directors—Payment of interim dividend out of capital—Ultrà vires—Mistake—Acquiescence by shareholders—Shareholder's action—Form—Proceeds of ultrà vires act in plaintiff's possession—Right to maintain action.—A shareholder in a limited company, who has received an unearned interim dividend paid by the directors out of capital under a bonâ fide mistake, knowing full well that it was an ultrà vires payment, and that the directors would eventually repay the amount, cannot afterwards, suing either individually or on behalf of all the other shareholders, maintain an action against the directors for the repayment of this dividend into the coffers of the company, if at the time of bringing the action he had the proceeds of the ultrà vires act in his pocket.

Decision of Byrne, J. (reported 20 Times L. R. 28), reversed.

Dictum of Brett, L.J., in Flitcroft's case, 31 W. R. 174, on p. 176, 21 Ch. D. 519, on pp. 534, 535, approved.—TOWERS v. AFRICAN TUG Co., C.A., 530; [1904] 1 Ch. 558; 73 L. J. Ch. 395; 90 L. T. 298.

14. Directors—Quorum of directors—Resolution—Interested director—Validity of resolution—Articles.—The articles of a company provided that any director might enter into a contract or be interested in any business with the company; that no director should vote on any matter relating to the contract or business with the company in which he was interested; and that two directors should be a quorum for the transaction of business.

Held, that a quorum of directors meant a quorum competent to transact and vote on the business before the board; and, therefore, that a resolution passed at a meeting of three directors, two of whom were interested in the subject-matter of the resolution, was invalid.—GREYMOUTH POINT ELIZABETH RAILWAY AND COAL CO., RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 32; 73 L. J. Ch. 92.

15. Life assurance—Deed of settlement—Participating policy-holders—Terms in prospectus—Bye-laws by company—Profits divisible among policy-holders—Power reserved to company to alter bye-laws—Part of profits to form a reserve fund—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62) —Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 50, 51, 196, and 209.—A life and fire insurance company, constituted under a deed of settlement, and afterwards registered under the Companies Acts, 1862, cannot—after issuing prospectuses to the public pointing out its advantages over other mutual societies, chief among which was the distribution of the entire profits in the mutual department without any deduction for a reserve fund, and on the strength of which prospectus a person took out a policy in the mutual department—afterwards, even though purporting to act in pursuance of section 1 of the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, by substituting a memorandum and articles of association for the deed of settlement, deprive the participating policy-holders of the profits which they previously enjoyed, by setting aside a certain amount, until a fixed sum should be reached, to form a reserve fund.

A company was constituted by a deed of settlement of 1854 to carry on, amongst other matters, that of life and fire assurance. It was afterwards registered under section 209 of the Companies Act, 1862, as an unlimited company. By their deed of settlement it was provided that the profits of the company should be ascertained as directed by the bye-laws, and it was further provided that any provisions of the deed and even bye-laws might be altered by a bye-law or bye-laws. In the mutual life insurance department, by virtue of a bye-law, the policy-holders were entitled to a division of any profits made in that department of the company's business. The plaintiff took out a policy in that department on his own life on the faith of certain statements contained in the company's prospectuses, that no profits should be set aside to form a reserve fund. Afterwards it was proposed, with the object of substituting a memorandum and articles for their deed of settlement, to register the company under the provisions of the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890. The proposed articles set aside out of the profits a certain percentage until a fixed sum should be reached to form a reserve fund. The plaintiff's policy was taken subject to the indorsed conditions, which referred to the deed of settlement and the bye-laws and to any documents deposited with the company in relation to the assurance.

Held, that the company could not, either by altering its bye-laws or by altering its articles, justify a breach of contract; that there was a contract for value between them and the plaintiff relating to the future profits of a particular branch of the company's business, and that the company could not therefore, by special resolution or otherwise, alter the contractual right of the plaintiff.—BAILY v. BRITISH EQUITABLE ASSURANCE CO., C.A., 549; [1904] 1 Ch. 374; 73 L. J. Ch. 240; 90 L. T. 335.

16. Memorandum of association — Alteration—Jurisdiction—Company under Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 47; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14)—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 175, 176—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-section 1; s. 3, sub-section 2.—The Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, applies to a company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, so that the court has jurisdiction to confirm an alteration of its memorandum.

In re Nitrophosphate and Odams Chemical Manure Co. (Limited), (1893) W. N. 141, In re Hong Kong and China Gas Co. (Limited), (1898) W. N. 158, and In re Copiapo Mining Co., (1899) W. N. 25, followed.

In re General Credit Co., (1891) W. N. 153, not followed. — EUPHRATES AND TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 360; 73 L. J. Ch. 175; 90 L. T. 56.

17. Memorandum of association—Different classes of shareholders—Rights of shareholders defined by memorandum—Power in memorandum to modify rights—Validity of power.—A provision in a memorandum of association of a limited company, which memorandum provides for the division of the capital into different classes of shares and prescribes for the rights and privileges of the different classes of shareholders inter se, that the rights thus attached to the different classes of shares may from time to time be modified as provided by the articles of association, is valid; and consequently a scheme for the reduction of the capital of the company, which involves such a modification, will be sanctioned by the court, provided that it involves no unfairness to the shareholders whose rights are thereby affected.—WELSBACH INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHT CO., RE, C.A., 327; [1904] 1 Ch. 87; 73 L. J. Ch. 104; 89 L. T. 645.

18. Mortgage security—Dissolution of company—Purchaser of assets—Vesting order—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 26, sub-section (ii.); s. 36, sub-section 1, clause (ii.) (c); and s. 36.—Where a company entitled to a mortgage debt and to leasehold premises comprised in the mortgage has been dissolved under section 143 of the Companies Act, 1862, a purchaser from the company can, under the Trustee Act, 1893, obtain an order vesting in him the right to sue and recover the mortgage debt, and vesting in him the leasehold premises comprised in the mortgage.—GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE CORPORATION, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 332; [1904] 1 Ch. 147; 73 L. J. Ch. 84; 89 L. T. 699.

19. Prospectus—Material contract—Omission from prospectus—Damages, measure of—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3, sub-section 1.—The House affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal (reported as Broome v. Speak, [1903] 1 Ch. 586), holding that while the appellant was certainly not in fact fraudulent he was liable for the omission of the documents from the prospectus.—SHEPHEARD v. BROOME, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 342.

20. Prospectus—Untrue statements—Omission of contracts—Liability of directors—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38.—Upon the faith of the statements contained in a prospectus issued by the defendants and their co-directors, the plaintiffs became shareholders in a company.

The prospectus contained certain untrue statements, and also omitted to specify the dates and names of the parties to a certain contract that had been entered into by or on behalf of the company.

Held, as regards the untrue statements, that even though they constituted material misrepresentation and remained untrue to the date of the notice of allotment, yet, the defendants having reasonable ground to believe that the statements were true, the plaintiffs were not entitled to compensation from the defendants under section 3 of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890; and, as regards the omission to specify the dates and names of the parties to the contracts, that, the contracts being material to be known, the prospectus was to be deemed to be fraudulent on the part of the defendants within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages accordingly.—DE LA COUR v. CLINTON, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 90 L. T. 615.

21. "Reconstruction"—"Amalgamation"—Bonus to preference shareholders—Bonus to debenture-holders—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161.—Neither the word "reconstruction" nor the word "amalgamation" with reference to limited companies bear any definite legal meaning. These words are commercial expressions having no exact meaning.

The reconstruction of a limited company involves the desire to preserve the undertaking of the company otherwise than by selling it; that in some altered form the undertaking will be continued so that the persons carrying it on shall substantially continue to carry it on, and that substantially the same business shall be continued, although all the assets of the company may not pass to the new or resuscitated company, and all the shareholders of the old company may not become the shareholders of the new company. It does not necessarily involve that the new or reconstituted company should take over the liabilities of the old company. It is not vital, either, that the whole assets or that the liabilities should be taken over.

Amalgamation of two companies involves the blending of the two undertakings instead of the continuance of either one. It is not necessary that the whole of the two undertakings should become blended or that all the corporators should be parties to the transaction so long as that is what substantially takes place. It may take place either by a transference of undertakings A. and B. to a new corporation C., or by the continuance of undertakings A. and B. by B. upon the terms that the shareholders of A. shall become shareholders of B. It is not necessary that there should be a new company. There may be a continuance of one of the two companies upon the terms that the undertakings of the corporators of both companies shall be substantially merged in one.

S. company, by its memorandum of association, declared that its preference shareholders should, in the event of a winding up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, have a bonus of 15 per cent. It issued debentures upon the terms that in the event of a winding up for the same purpose the debentures should be redeemed at a percentage over the par value. The memorandum of association of A. company and the terms of its debentures contained similar provisions. S. company sold its business and most of its assets to A. company for shares in A. company. A. company subsequently sold the business and assets it had bought of S. company to I. company for a sum equivalent to its share capital and debenture issue and a further sum. Subsequently S. company sold to a new company C. S. T. its shares in A. company and its remaining assets. S. company and A. then went into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of carrying out these agreements and thus enjoying their assets, and not for the purpose of realizing and dividing their assets.

Held, that the companies were being wound up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, and that consequently the events upon which the bonuses to the preference shareholders and the debenture-holders became payable had occurred.—SOUTH AFRICAN SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 649.

22. Security for costs—Liquidator—Misfeasance summons—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 10.—On the principle of Cowell v. Taylor, (1885) 31 Ch. D. 34, it is not the practice of the court to order a liquidator to give security for the costs of a misfeasance summons.—STRAND WOOD CO., RE, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 1; 73 L. J. Ch. 550; 90 L. T. 800.

23. Shares—Call for amount remaining unpaid—Forfeiture—Re-sale by company—Certificate stating that purchaser is discharged from prior calls—Subsequent call—Liability for future calls—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Table A, art. 22.—A limited company, as authorized by its articles of association, declared forfeited a number of partly paid-up shares for non-payment of calls and resold them to the appellants upon terms embodied in the certificate which followed the terms of article 22 of Table A, Schedule I., of the Companies Act, 1862. This provided that the purchasers of the shares should be held discharged from all calls then due. A new call was subsequently made upon the appellants in respect of these shares to the extent of the amount still outstanding and unpaid.

Held, that the appellants were liable, since, as the certificate stated, they were holders of shares not paid up in full.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 391, [1903] 1 K. B. 461) affirmed. — NEW BALKIS EERSTELING v. RANDT GOLD MINING CO., H.L., 561; [1904] A. C. 165; 73 L. J. K. B. 384; 90 L. T. 494.

24. Shares—Forged share certificate—Issue by secretary—Liability of company—Estoppel.—A certificate of shares in a limited company was delivered by the secretary of such company at their offices, such certificate in form being perfectly regular. In fact the certificate was a forgery, and was made and delivered by the secretary acting fraudulently and not for or on behalf of or for the benefit of the company, but solely for himself and for his own private purposes and advantage.

Held, that the company were estopped from denying the title of the transferees of the shares, and that they were liable in damages for refusing to place the names of the transferees on their list of shareholders.

Shaw v. Port Phillip and Colonial Gold Mining Co. (Limited), 50 L. T. Rep. 685, 13 Q. B. D. 103, considered and followed.—RUBEN v. GREAT FINGALL CONSOLIDATED (LIMITED), K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 650; 73 L. J. K. B. 299; 90 L. T. 163.

25. Shares—Indemnity—Forged transfer of stock—Innocent transferee—Loss incurred by company—Liability as between company and transferee to bear loss.—The transferee of a forged transfer of corporation stock innocently and without negligence presented such transfer to the corporation requesting them to register the transfer. The corporation, acting without negligence, accepted and registered the transfer, and in due course issued certificates to the transferee, one of the defendants, as holder and owner of the stock, thereby incurring liability to the real owner of the stock, whose name had been forged, and in an action subsequently brought against them by the latter they were ordered to make good the loss sustained by him.

Held, that the corporation having registered the transfer in pursuance of a statutory obligation, and not voluntarily, at the request of the transferee, no contract by the transferee to indemnify the corporation against any loss sustained in consequence of their acting on his request could be implied.

Decision of Lord Alverstone, L.C.J. (51 W. R. 204, [1903] 1 K. B. 1), reversed.—SHEFFIELD CORPORATION v. BARCLAY, C.A., 54; [1903] 2 K. B. 580; 72 L. J. K. B. 777; 89 L. T. 227.

26. Shares—Issue of shares at a discount—Issue of debentures at a discount—Option to exchange debentures for fully-paid shares.—The defendant company proposed to issue a series of debentures at a discount of 20 per cent. The principal moneys secured by the debentures were to be repaid by the 1st of November, 1909, or such earlier date as the sum might become payable in accordance with the conditions indorsed thereon. Condition 8 made these principal moneys immediately payable in the event (among others) of the registered holder giving to the company a direction in writing under condition 10. Condition 10 provided that the registered holder of any debenture might at any time prior to the 1st of May, 1909, direct the company in writing to allot and issue to him in exchange for and in satisfaction of this debenture fully-paid shares of the company's capital at the rate of one share of £1 for every £1 of the nominal amount of the debenture, and that the company should, after the surrender of this debenture, comply with such direction.

Held, that, in the event of the debentures being exchanged for shares immediately after the issue of the debentures, the practical result would be the issue of shares of the nominal value of £100 in consideration of £80—a transaction which was prohibited by the Legislature; and if in fact the shares were issued at a discount, the honesty or good intentions of the contracting parties would not avail them. Injunction granted restraining the defendants from issuing debentures in pursuance of the scheme.—MOSELEY v. KOFFYFONTEIN MINES (LIMITED), C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 109; 73 L. J. Ch. 569.

27. Shares — Transfer — Registration—Consideration not truly stated—Insufficient stamp—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 14, sub-section 4; s. 17. —Where, in a transfer of shares in a company, the consideration is not truly stated, and the stamp, though sufficient for the consideration as stated, is insufficient for the true consideration, the company are not bound to register the transfer.—MAYNARD v. CONSOLIDATED KENT COLLIERIES CORPORATION, C.A., 117; [1903] 2 K. B. 121; 72 L. J. K. B. 681; 88 L. T. 676.

28. Shares—Transfer—Refusal to register transfer —Lien on shares — Director concerned in contract—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Table A (57)—Vacation of office ipso facto—Re-election—Director's share of total remuneration—Extra sum voted—Ultrà vires—Money had and received—Mistake or failure of consideration—Right to recover.—A company refused to register a transfer of shares executed by W., late a director, alleging that they had a lien on the shares for money owing by him. W., when a director, had become concerned in a contract with the company not disclosed to and authorized by the board, in contravention of an article of association, which was a modified copy of clause 57 in Table A of the Companies Act, 1862. The fact remained unknown for over two years from the date of contract, during which time, according to the custom of the board, W. had twice retired, being on each occasion re-elected for twelve months. The board's remuneration was fixed at a lump sum, divisible among its members at the will of the majority, and the share received by W. was £39 a month. On discovering the facts the company claimed repayment of the said monthly sums received by W. since the date of the contract, and also a sum of £400 voted to W. by the board "for his special and constant services during the past year."

Held, (1) (distinguishing Turnbull v. West Riding Athletic Club, 70 L. T. Rep. 92) that W. vacated his office ipso facto on becoming concerned in the contract, and without any act being necessary to remove him; (2) that he was not necessarily disqualified from re-election, and that the re-elections were in fact good, since before their date the contract was complete and required no exercise of discretion by W. as director; (3) that, consequently, the only fees repayable were those for the period between the date of the contract and the first re-election; (4) that either the company or the board could recover those fees as money had and received, and as paid in mistake or for a consideration which had failed; (5) following In re Geo. Newman & Co., 43 W. R. 483, [1895] 1 Ch. 674, that the payment of £400 to W. was ultrà vires, and that sum with interest must be refunded; (6) that on repayment of the moneys so found due, and not before, the company must register the transfer. —BODEGA CO., RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 249; [1904] 1 Ch. 276; 73 L. J. Ch. 198; 89 L. T. 694.

29. Vesting order—Agreement for sale of letters patent by liquidator—No assignment—Dissolution of company—Bonâ vacantia—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 25, 35 (1) (ii.) (c), 36.—The liquidators of a limited company in process of winding up contracted to sell certain letters patent to a purchaser. The purchase-money was paid, but, by inadvertence, the company was dissolved before the letters patent were assigned. A petition was presented asking for an order under the Trustee Act, 1893, vesting the letters patent in the purchaser for all the estate of the company therein.

Held, that the legal estate in the letters patent having vested in the Crown, the court had no jurisdiction to make such an order.

In re General Accident Assurance Corporation (Limited), ante, p. 332, [1904] 1 Ch. 147, not followed.—TAYLOR'S AGREEMENT TRUSTS, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 602; 73 L. J. Ch. 557.

30. Voluntary liquidation—Extraordinary general meeting—Resolution to distribute sums of money among officers and servants—Validity—Ultrà vires.—A company, having sold its undertaking and property, the directors sent out to the shareholders notices of an extraordinary general meeting to consider a resolution for the voluntary winding up of the company with the directors as liquidators, and another resolution determining what sum should be distributed among the officers and servants of the company. The directors also issued circulars inviting shareholders to send them their proxies.

At the meeting the resolution for voluntary winding up was duly carried, and the chairman and managing director then proposed a resolution that a sum equal to five years' salary should be paid to himself and the secretary and accountant, and a further sum be distributed among the servants. This was lost on a show of hands, but carried on a poll.

The directors then sent out notices of a second meeting to confirm these resolutions, and again issued circulars inviting proxies.

At the second meeting the resolution for the payment to the officers and servants was again lost on a show of hands, but carried at a poll.

A dissentient shareholder then brought an action to restrain the directors from giving effect to the resolution on the grounds that its carrying and confirmation were improperly obtained, and that it was ultrà vires of the company and invalid.

Held, without deciding the first point, that the case fell within the principle of Hutton v. West Cork Railway Co., 49 L. T. Rep. 420, 23 Ch. D. 654, and that the resolution was therefore ultrà vires and invalid.—STROUD v. ROYAL AQUARIUM (LIMITED), Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 89 L. T. 243.

31. Voluntary liquidation—Scheme of arrangement—Assets insufficient—Meeting of members in classes—Dissent of class—No interest in assets—Sanction of court—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161—Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 104), s. 2—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 24.—Where the assets of a company in liquidation would, if distributed, be insufficient to do more than satisfy the creditors and those preference shareholders who are entitled to rank first in respect of capital, the ordinary shareholders have no interest in the assets, even if a scheme of reconstruction gives them a prospective advantage. Therefore their assent to the scheme is not required, the advantage it offers them being in the nature of a gift.—TEA CORPORATION, RE, SORSBIE v. TEA CORPORATION, C.A., 177; [1904] 1 Ch. 12; 73 L. J. Ch. 57; 89 L. T. 516.

32. Voluntary winding up — Debts — Duty of liquidator—Negligence—Liability—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 107, 133 138, 143—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 25.—The liquidator of a company, knowing of a debt due by the company and having sufficient assets in his hands, did not, on the winding up of the company, pay the said debt. The creditor, upon hearing of the dissolution of the company and the distribution of assets, brought an action against the liquidator for breach of his statutory duty in not providing for the claims of the creditors, and, further, claimed damages against him.

Held, that the liquidator was liable.—PULSFORD v. DEVENISH, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 73; [1903] 2 Ch. 625; 73 L. J. Ch. 35.

33. Winding up—Appeal—Order made by registrar—Practice—Application to judge.—When a matter in the winding up of a company has been heard by the registrar and he has made an order either granting or refusing the application, the proper course for those who wish to reverse his decision is to move before the judge and not to appeal to the Court of Appeal.—PRETORIA PIETERSBURG RAILWAY, RE, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 170; 73 L. J. Ch. 551.

34. Winding up—Costs—Order dismissing petition—Costs of contributories opposing—Copies of evidence filed by petitioner—Charges of fraud against contributories—Taxation.—The common order dismissing a winding-up petition and giving to contributories opposing one set of costs does not include the usual charges consequent on taking copies of evidence filed by the petitioner and the company, even though serious charges of fraud are made in the petition against the contributories; if these extra costs are to be allowed, sufficient and special grounds must be shown at the time the petition is dismissed, and a special direction must be given in the order.

Practice as to costs and position of contributories on a winding-up petition discussed.—IBO INVESTMENT TRUST (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 26; 73 L. J. Ch. 71; 90 L. T. 373.

35. Winding up—Damages owed company for misfeasance—Debenture debt owed by company—Cross-claims—Set-off—Proper administration of assets.—T. Co. was promoted by F. Co., and was in liquidation. T. Co. owed F. Co. £5,100 upon a debenture. It was owed by F. Co., which was also in liquidation, £4,323 under the following circumstances: F. Co. had been held liable to pay T. Co. £12,000 as damages for misfeasance, and, having at the time no other creditors, it was ordered to pay, and did pay, all its assets, which amounted to £7,677, to T. Co., without prejudice to its rights to prove in the liquidation of that company. Subsequently other persons established claims against F. Co. The liquidator of T. Co. out of this £7,677 distributed about £3,900 among its creditors other than F. Co. as a dividend of 16s. 8d. in the £, but refused to pay any dividend to F. Co. until that company had paid it the £4,323 still owing of the £12,000.

Held, that until the dividend due to the F. Co. exceeded the £4,323 owing by it, no dividend was payable to it, and that the proper way of administering the assets of the T. Co. was notionally to add the £4,323 to its assets, and, calculating the dividends upon that total sum, only pay the F. Co. the excess (if any) of the dividend thus appearing due to it over the £4,323.—LEEDS AND HANLEY THEATRES OF VARIETIES (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 506; [1904] 2 Ch. 45; 73 L. J. Ch. 553.

36. Winding up—Liquidator—Invalid appointment of liquidator—Claim for remuneration.—A company which had resolved on voluntary winding up by a resolution which was set aside by the court as invalid appointed the appellant to be liquidator. On a compulsory winding up, the appellant sought to prove as a creditor for work done and expenses incurred while purporting to act as liquidator and before he knew of the invalidity of his appointment.

Held, that he was not entitled to be paid anything for services rendered as liquidator, but so far as work done had been useful to the company or had been used by the official receiver with full knowledge of the facts he was entitled to reasonable remuneration.—ALLISON, RE, JOHNSON v. FOSTER (LIMITED), K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 327.

37. Winding up—Liquidator—Official receiver—Duty as to giving information to outside liquidator—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903, rr. 53, 144.—Information obtained by the official receiver from officers of the company under rule 53 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903, is not "property" of the company within rule 144 (1), or "information respecting the estate and affairs of the company . . . necessary or conducive to the due discharge of the duties of the liquidator" within the meaning of rule 144 (3), which it is the duty of the official receiver to produce to a liquidator superseding him as liquidator.

Quære, whether the court on sufficient evidence may not direct the official receiver, as its officer, to disclose the information to an outside liquidator.—LAKE GEORGE MINES (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 803.

38. Winding up—Proof—Solicitor's lien—Sale of company's property—Secured creditor—Amendment or withdrawal of proof—Inadvertence—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8—Companies (Winding- up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), Schedule I., clause 8.—A solicitor to a company in course of being wound up was a creditor of the company to a large amount for costs, for which he proved in the company's winding up, but without disclosing any security held by him against the company. At the time he held a lien for this amount upon certain documents and title deeds belonging to the company. On the sale by the liquidator of a portion of the company's property, the solicitor, who was employed for the purpose, and to whom the purchase-money had been paid, handed over the title deeds to the purchaser without informing the liquidator that he did so without prejudice to his lien, retained the sum due to him from the company and handed over the balance. No arrangement of any kind had ever been made between the parties, but the liquidator was aware that the documents were in the solicitor's possession. On an application by the solicitor to be allowed to withdraw or amend his proof,

Held, that, under the circumstances, he was not entitled to do so, as he had not proved inadvertence, and also had allowed the liquidator to alter his position on the assumption that the solicitor had no lien.—SAFETY EXPLOSIVES (LIMITED), RE C.A., 470; [1904] 1 Ch. 226; 73 L. J. Ch. 184; 90 L. T. 331.

39. Winding up—Shares—Transfer—Registration—Special resolution for reconstruction before registration of transfer—Delay of company—Application for registration nunc pro tunc—Notice of dissent from resolution—Liquidation proceedings—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 35, 98, 131, 161, and 162.—Two transferees of two sets of fully paid-up shares in a company, transferred at different times, repeatedly applied to the secretary that they should be registered. The secretary replied that these transfers would be submitted at the next meeting of the company. Before these shares were registered in the names of the transferee, however, the company was voluntarily wound up, and a special resolution for reconstruction passed. The transferees thereupon sent in notices of dissent to the resolution, under section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862; and as the liquidator refused to register their names, applied to have these transfers registered nunc pro tunc, and the certificates sent them.

Held, that, as unnecessary delay had taken place, the court had power under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, even after liquidation, to make an order nunc pro tunc, if it did not work injustice to anyone, but such order was not ex debito justitiæ, but only at the discretion of the court.

Judgment of Buckley, J., varied.

In re Joint Stock Discount Co., Nation's case, 15 W. R. 143, L. R. 3 Eq. 77, discussed and followed.—SUSSEX BRICK CO., RE. C.A., 371; [1904] 1 Ch. 598; 73 L. J. Ch. 308; 90 L. T. 426.

40. Winding up—Statute of Limitations—Arrears of dividends—Sums due as return of capital in pursuance of reduction of capital — Specialty or simple contract debts.—The right of a shareholder in a limited company to sue for dividends on ordinary shares in arrear for more than six years, but less than twenty years, is not barred by the Statute of Limitations, as such arrears are in the nature of specialty, and not simple contract, debts. The same principle applies to sums due for capital returnable to the shareholders in pursuance of a resolution for reduction of capital sanctioned by the court.—ARTIZANS LAND AND MORTGAGE CORPORATION, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 330; [1904] 1 Ch. 796; 73 L. J. Ch. 581.

41. Winding up—Supervision order—Service of liquidator — Costs — Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, r. 35.—In rule 35 of the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, the words "unless presented by the company" govern the rule throughout, and not merely the first paragraph, and therefore, where a company in course of voluntary winding up presents a petition for a supervision order, it is not necessary to serve the petition upon the liquidator, and the costs of doing so will not be allowed.—CHESTER & CO., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 189.

COMPROMISE:—

Practice—Power to bind absent parties—Time-limit for absent parties to come in—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 9a.—In an action brought by certain bond-holders of a railway company against their trustees and the company claiming the enforcement of the trusts under which the moneys subscribed in respect of the bonds were held, the court in 1894 sanctioned a scheme for compromise under which all the bond-holders were to receive a certain sum in respect of each bond. The scheme was sanctioned by the Court of Appeal, and, under ord. 16, r. 9a, made binding on all the bond-holders of the company. A small minority of bond-holders failed to claim their rights within six years from the sanctioning of the compromise, and the railway company applied for an order limiting the time within which the outstanding bond-holders must accept the scheme or be excluded therefrom.

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make such an order.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (sub nom. Collingham v. Sloper, 49 W. R. 404, [1901] 1 Ch. 769) reversed.—SARAGOSSA AND MEDITERRANEAN RAILWAY v. COLLINGHAM, H.L., 609; [1904] A. C. 159; 73 L. J. Ch. 568; 90 L. T. 212.

See also Executor, 2.

CONFLICT of LAWS:—

1. Contract made and to be performed abroad—Contract obtained by moral coercion—Agreement to stifle prosecution—Validity according to law of foreign country—Enforcement in England.—The defendant's husband having misappropriated money which had been entrusted to him by the plaintiff in France for a specific purpose, the parties being all domiciled in France, the plaintiff induced the defendant, by threats to prosecute her husband and thus to dishonour her name and that of her children, to sign an agreement to pay the money by instalments out of her own property. The agreement was made in France, and was intended to be performed there, and, according to the evidence, was valid according to the law of France. The defendant paid some of the instalments due under the agreement, and having come to reside in England an action was brought against her in England to recover further instalments under the agreement.

Held, that, as the agreement was obtained from the defendant by moral coercion, it was not enforceable in England, even though it might be valid according to the law of France.

Judgment of Wright. J. (51 W. R. 683, [1903] 2 K. B. 114), reversed.—KAUFMAN v. GERSON, C.A., 420; [1904] 1 K. B. 591; 73 L. J. K. B. 320; 90 L. T. 608.

2. *Scotch law—Scotch marriage contract made in Scotland—Lex loci—Intention of parties—Life interest by way of alimentary provision—Inalienable life interest in domiciled Englishman—Fraud upon creditors*

tors—Public policy.—As a general rule the law of the matrimonial domicil is applicable to a contract in consideration of marriage, but this rule yields to the intention of the parties that some other law shall be applied, in which case effect will be given in the courts of the country of the matrimonial domicil to the provisions of the contract in accordance with the foreign law, so long as the provisions are not contrary to public policy.

By a Scotch marriage contract a domiciled Scotchwoman settled property upon trust to pay the income to her intended husband, a domiciled Englishman, for his life, and the contract contained a declaration that all payment to the husband should be "strictly alimentary," and "not assignable nor liable to arrestment nor other legal diligence at the hands of his creditors." The trustees of the settlement were English, and the trusts had been administered in England. The husband purported to charge his life estate.

Held (by Vaughan Williams and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ., Stirling, L.J., dissentiente), that the intention of the parties being that the Scotch law should apply to the marriage contract, the husband could take no greater interest than the Scotch law would allow him, and as the nature of the interest given by the contract ought not to vary with the domicil of the husband, the English courts would give effect to the Scotch law, the gift of an inalienable life interest to a man not being contrary or repugnant to the public policy of English law.

Decision of Joyce, J. (51 W. R. 586), reversed.—FITZGERALD, RE, SURMAN v. FITZGERALD, C.A., 432; [1904] 1 Ch. 573; 73 L. J. Ch. 436; 90 L. T. 266.

CONTEMPT:—

1. Married woman—Right to be heard—Costs—Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—"Proceeding instituted"—Summons in divorce suit—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 2.—If an appellent, who is in contempt of court, alleges that the order from which he is appealing was made without jurisdiction, the court will not refuse to hear him on account of his contempt, although the order appealed from was made after the contempt had been committed.

In a divorce suit, in which the husband was the petitioner, a decree was made for dissolution of the marriage and that the child of the marriage should be delivered up to the custody of the petitioner by the respondent. The respondent (the wife) applied that the decree might be varied by entrusting the custody of the child to herself, and gave an undertaking not to remove the child out of the jurisdiction. On the 10th of March, 1903, the wife's application was dismissed, and it was ordered that the husband's costs of and incident to this application should be payable out of the separate property of the wife, notwithstanding that such property was subject to a restraint on anticipation; and it was further ordered that the child be forthwith delivered up by the wife to the custody of the husband "until further order." The wife, however, in breach of her undertaking, secretly sent the child out of the jurisdiction shortly before the 10th of March, and went out of the jurisdiction herself on that day. On the 12th of March an order was made declaring the wife in contempt for breach of her undertaking. On the 12th of May the wife gave notice of appeal against so much of the order of the 10th of March as directed the payment of the costs of her application (dismissed on that day) out of her separate property, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation. The wife was still in contempt at the time her appeal came on for hearing.

Held, that, notwithstanding her contempt, the appellant was entitled to be heard.

Held, further, that the wife's application to have the decree in the divorce varied—which application was dismissed on the 10th of March—was merely a step in the divorce suit, and not a "proceeding instituted by" the wife within the meaning of section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893; and consequently that so much of the order of the 10th of March as directed payment of the costs out of the separate property restrained from anticipation of the married woman was void for want of jurisdiction, and should be discharged.

Decision of Jeune, P. ([1903] P. 141, 51 W. R. Dig. 63), reversed.—GORDON v. GORDON AND GORDON, C.A., 389; [1904] P. 163; 73 L. J. P. 41; 90 L. T. 597.

2. Practice—Offence triable at assizes only—Power of High Court to commit for contempt—Judicature Act, 1873, ss. 16, 29.—Where preliminary proceedings having been begun in a petty sessions court for an offence which was only triable at assizes, and before the person charged was committed for trial, there was published comment in a newspaper tending to interfere with the fair trial of the charge, it is within the power of the High Court to commit the publisher for a contempt of court, the assize court being by sections 16 and 29 of the Judicature Act, 1873, constituted a part of the High Court.—REX v. PARKE, K.B.D., 215; [1903] 2 K. B. 432; 72 L. J. K. B. 839; 89 L. T. 439.

CONTRACT:—

1. Agreement with a borough council to do scavenging work as might be required—Implied obligation on council to provide employment.—In an agreement between a contractor and a municipal corporation, whereby the contractor agreed to supply horses, carts, &c., as might be required for the scavenging of a certain district for one year at certain agreed rates, the court, upon consideration of all the terms of the contract, held that no term could be implied imposing on the corporation the duty of giving employment to the contractor so as to enable him to earn payment under the contract.

Observations on dicta of Cockburn, C.J., in Churchward v. The Queen, 14 L. T. Rep. 57, L. R. 1 Q. B. 173.—MOON v. CAMBERWELL CORPORATION, C.A.; 89 L. T. 595.

2. Assignability — New company — Action by assignee.—By a contract between T., the owner of a chalk quarry, and a cement manufacturing company, who were owners and occupiers of neighbouring land, it was agreed that T. should supply so much chalk during a period of fifty years (as therein provided) as the company should require for the manufacture of cement on the said land.

Held, that the company were entitled to assign the benefit of this contract to a new company, who could enforce it against T.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 81, [1902] 2 K. B. 660) (Lord Robertson dissenting) affirmed.—TOLHURST v. ASSOCIATED PORTLAND CEMENT MANUFACTURERS, H.L., 143; [1903] A. C. 414; 72 L. J. K. B. 834; 89 L. T. 196.

3. Consideration—Agreement to accept debt by instalments—Subsequent agreement for payment by instalments after death—Right to claim whole debt—Appropriation of payments—Rule in Clayton's case.—A deceased testator had been accustomed for many years to pay moneys to the defendant, who had out of such moneys made all necessary payments for the deceased; and a balance was struck every quarter, and on such balance the defendant allowed interest at 10 per cent. per annum.

By an agreement in February, 1897, in consideration of the defendant making use of certain moneys of the deceased and paying interest for the same at 10 per cent., the deceased agreed to accept £25 every quarter in part payment of the principal that might be due from the defendant to the deceased; and some months afterwards another agreement was made whereby the deceased agreed that in the event of his death all his moneys in the possession of the defendant at the time of his death should be repaid in quarterly payments of £25, to include principal and interest, until the whole should be paid, and that no person should be entitled to enforce payment of any larger sum.

No instalments as such had been paid by the defendant under the first agreement, but the defendant had continued to make payments on the deceased's behalf as requested out of the moneys from time to time paid to him by the deceased.

The deceased died some years afterwards, the defendant then having a considerable sum belonging to the deceased.

In an action brought by the executors of the deceased to recover the whole sum due to the deceased at the time of his death,

Held, giving judgment for the defendant, that there was sufficient consideration to support both agreements, which were therefore good, and that under the second agreement the defendant was not bound on the death of the deceased to pay the whole sum then due; and, further, that as to the instalments alleged to be due under the first agreement, the payment made by the defendant from time to time to the deceased, must, according to rule in Clayton's case, be taken to have been appropriated to and paid in respect of these instalments, which were therefore satisfied.—EGG v. CRAIG, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 41.

4. Duration, fixed period of—Construction—Implied term—Necessary implication.—By a contract made between the plaintiffs, who were wholesale dealers in tobacco, and the defendant, a retail tobacconist, it was agreed that, in consideration of the defendant undertaking to become a customer of the plaintiffs and to purchase goods direct from them, and not to sign any agreement with any other firm in the tobacco trade which should prevent him from dealing with the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs would for the next four years distribute as an annual bonus among their customers, including the defendant, and in proportion to the purchases made by them respectively, a certain fixed annual sum, and also the expected net profits on goods sold by the plaintiffs in the United Kingdom during that period. Before the four years had expired the plaintiffs sold their business to third persons. In an action for the price of goods sold to him the defendant counterclaimed against the plaintiffs for damages for breach of contract.

Held, affirming the judgment of Lord Alverstone, L.C.J. ([1903] 2 K. B. 287), that upon the true construction of the contract there was an absolute undertaking on the part of the plaintiffs to distribute for a period of four years among their customers the fixed annual sum and expected net profits, and that a term must necessarily be implied that the plaintiffs would not during that period do any act which would put it out of their power to carry out their contract to distribute these sums, and that the defendant was entitled to damages.—OGDENS (LIMITED) v. NELSON. THE SAME v. TELFORD, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 410; 90 L. T. 656.

5. Impossibility—Contract to supply refreshments for steamer for Coronation Naval Review—Cheque given in part payment—Review abandoned—Condition in contract that if review was cancelled before caterer incurred expense there should be no liability on charterers.—The plaintiff and the defendants entered into a contract whereby the former was, in consideration of £300, to be paid in advance, to supply refreshments on board a pleasure steamer chartered by the latter for the purpose of taking passengers to see the Coronation Naval Review. In the letter accepting the contract the defendants wrote, "It is, of course, understood that in the event of the cancellation of the review before any expense is incurred by the caterer there shall be no liability on our side." Enclosed in this letter was a cheque for £300 in part payment of the contract. The review was on the next day cancelled before any refreshments were supplied or the cheque presented for payment, and the defendants stopped payment of the cheque.

Held, that upon the true construction of the contract, the parties had agreed that if the review was cancelled there was not merely to be a release of both from any further performance thereunder, but as nearly as possible a restitutio ad integrum, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the value of the cheque.

Semble, the fact that the part payment was made by cheque, which had not been cashed before the review had been officially announced as cancelled, did not alter the rights of the parties.

Chandler v. Webster, ante, p. 290, [1904] 1 K. B. 493, distinguished.—ELLIOTT v. CRUTCHLEY, C.A., 499; [1904] 1 K. B. 565; 73 L. J. K. B. 406; 90 L. T. 497.

6. Impossibility—Coronation procession—Hire of room to view—Abandonment of procession—Money payable before abandonment—Recovery back of money paid.—The plaintiff hired from the defendant a room in a house in Pall Mall to view the Coronation procession on the 26th of June for the sum of £141 15s., payable immediately. The plaintiff paid £100 to the defendant, and subsequently, in consequence of the illness of the King, the procession on the 26th of June was abandoned. The plaintiff sued to recover back the £100 which he had paid to the defendant, on the ground of total failure of consideration, and the defendant counterclaimed for £41 15s., the balance of the £141 15s.

Held, that the further performance of the contract having been rendered impossible by an event which happened without the default of either party, upon the doctrine of Taylor v. Caldwell, 11 W. R. 726, 3 B. & S. 826, the contract was not avoided ab initio, but remained good and valid up to the ascertainment of the impossibility of performance, and anything done and any rights acquired under it up to that time remained good, the parties being merely relieved from the further performance of the contract; that therefore the doctrine as to total failure of consideration was not applicable; and that the plaintiff could not recover back the £100, and that, as the whole sum of £141 15s. accrued due before the abandonment, the defendant was entitled to recover the £41 15s., the unpaid balance of that amount.—CHANDLER v. WEBSTER, C.A., 290; [1904] 1 K. B. 493; 73 L. J. K. B. 401; 90 L. T. 217.

7. Impossibility—Hire of ship—Purpose of hirer—Failure of consideration—Breach of contract—Damages.—The fact that in a contract for hire of a vessel the objects of the hirer are stated does not constitute those objects the basis of the contract so as to discharge the parties in the event of the performance of those objects becoming possible. A ship was hired by agreement in writing "for the purpose of viewing the naval review and for a day's cruise round the fleet." On the postponement of the naval review the hirer declined to proceed with the contract.

Held, that this was not a joint speculation by the hirer and the owners of the ship, but that the risk was the hirer's alone; nor was the taking place of the review the basis for the performance of the contract. Consequently the hirer was not discharged from the contract, and was liable in damages for its breach.—HERNE BAY STEAMBOAT CO. v. HUTTON, C.A., 183; [1903] 2 K. B. 683; 72 L. J. K. B. 879; 89 L. T. 422.

8. Impossibility—Hire of ship for Coronation Naval Review—Money payable and paid before review postponed—Right to recover money so paid—Practice—Costs—Depriving successful defendant of costs—Discretion of judge—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5.—In an action the plaintiffs sued to recover £1,500, the amount paid by them for the hire of a steamer belonging to the defendants for the naval review at Spithead on the occasion of his Majesty's coronation, which was fixed to take place on the 28th of June, 1902, but was postponed.

Held, that, although the money had been paid before it was known that owing to the King's illness the review could not take place, the defendants were entitled to retain the whole of the £1,500 which had been paid to them by the plaintiffs.

Held, also, that there were no materials before the judge at the trial upon which he could exercise any discretion with regard to depriving the defendants of their costs merely because, in his opinion, it was a case for compromise, and his offer to act as arbitrator had been declined by the defendants, and the order on that point was accordingly reversed.

Blakeley v. Muller, 19 Times L. R. 186, 88 L. T. 90, 51 W. R. Dig. 40, approved.—CIVIL SERVICE CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY v. GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO., C.A., 181; [1903] 2 K. B. 756; 72 L. J. K. B. 933; 89 L. T. 429.

9. Impossibility—Implied term—Substance of contract—Surrounding circumstances.—By a contract in writing the defendant agreed to hire from the plaintiff a flat in Pall Mall for the 26th and 27th of June, 1902, on which days it had been announced that the Coronation processions would pass along Pall Mall. The defendant paid a deposit at the time of the contract. The contract contained no reference to the processions or to any particular purpose for which the flat was hired. The processions not having taken place, the defendant declined to pay the balance of the agreed rent.

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover the balance of the rent, inasmuch as the taking place of the processions must in the circumstances be held to have been the foundation of the contract, and the parties had not at all in their contemplation the risk that the processions might not take place on the dates fixed.—KRELL v. HENRY, C.A., 246; [1903] 2 K. B. 740; 72 L. J. K. B. 794; 89 L. T. 328.

10. Option for six months—Lunar or calendar months—Expiry of period—Agreement for extension implied from conduct and correspondence—Option duly exercised by dispatch of telegram or letter within extended period.—M., an inventor, granted to B. an option to purchase prospective patents during "six months" from the 29th of September, 1902. The option had not been exercised on the 16th of March, 1903, when six lunar months expired, but later correspondence contained casual mention of the 1st of April as the date of its expiry. M., who was travelling about, informed B., who was in London, that he would be at Genoa on the 27th of March and in Paris on the 30th. On the 28th B. exercised his option by a telegram to Genoa and a letter to Paris—the latter due in course of post to arrive on the 29th—but through a misunderstanding neither of these reached M. till the 30th.

Held, that the option was for six lunar months; but that an agreement to extend it to the end of March was to be implied from the correspondence and conduct of the parties; and that even if the option expired on the 29th it was duly exercised by the posting of the letter and sending of the telegram before that date.—BRUNER v. MOORE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 295; [1904] 1 Ch. 305; 73 L. J. Ch. 377; 89 L. T. 738.

11. Restraint of trade — Covenant — Validity—Reasonableness—Province of judge—Province of jury.—The old rule that the question of the reasonableness of a covenant in restraint of trade is for the judge and not for the jury has not been altered by recent decisions.

A contract whereby the plaintiffs agreed to employ the defendant as the manager of their cider business contained a covenant by the defendant not to carry on the business of a cider merchant for the term of five years after leaving the plaintiffs' service. The capital invested in the plaintiffs' business was not more than £9,000. Most of their customers resided in the South of England, though there were also some in Scotland and Ireland. The plaintiffs intended to extend their business, and had opened agencies in various places. In an action to enforce the covenant,

Held, that, having regard to the nature and condition of the plaintiffs' business, the covenant, being unlimited as to space, was unreasonable, and therefore void as being in restraint of trade.—DOWDEN v. POOK, C.A., 97; [1904] 1 K. B. 45; 73 L. J. K. B. 38; 89 L. T. 698.

12. Written agreement—Land—Parol variation—Specific performance—Defence.—Although a parol waiver of a written agreement concerning land, amounting to a complete rescission of the original contract, may be a good defence to an action for specific performance, yet variations verbally agreed upon cannot be relied upon by way of defence, and the original agreement may, notwithstanding, be ordered to be specifically performed.—VEZEY v. RASHLEIGH, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 442; [1904] 1 Ch. 634; 73 L. J. Ch. 422; 90 L. T. 663.

See also Conflict of Laws, 1; Frauds, Statute of, 1.

COPYHOLD:—

Fine on admittance—Colourable purchase—Amount of reasonable fine.—A. having to purchase a copyhold property in the Manor of Richmond, in order to avoid payment of the fine on admittance subsequently purchased a smaller copyhold property. The agreement for purchase provided that the vendor should retain the rents and remain liable for the repairs. A. was admitted in respect of this property, and paid the fine on admission. Subsequently he was also admitted in respect of the larger property, paying (by the custom of the manor) a nominal fine only.

Held, that the Crown, as lord of the manor, was entitled to the fine on the larger property, as the sale of the smaller property was a colourable sale, and the Crown was entitled to be placed in the same position as if the admission had never taken place.

*

Held, also, that the rule that an arbitrary fine ought not to exceed two years' improved value does not apply when the admission exempts from fines in cases of future purchases.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. SANDOVER, K.B.D., 573; [1904] 1 K. B. 689; 73 L. J. K. B. 478; 90 L. T. 480.

See also Vendor and Purchaser, 8.

COPYRIGHT:—

1. Fine arts—Pictures—United Kingdom—Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68).—The Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, confers on British subjects and persons resident in the British dominions copyright in pictures, drawings, and photographs in the United Kingdom, but not beyond that area. Nor is this altered by the Canada Copyright Act, 1875.

Printing such copyright pictures in Canada is, therefore, in no way prohibited by the Fine Arts Copyright Act; to obtain protection the pictures must be registered under the Canadian laws.—GRAVES v. GORRIE, P.C., 113; [1903] A. C. 496; 72 L. J. P. C. 95; 89 L. T. 111.

2. Literary copyright—Encyclopædia—Separate articles—Writer and publisher—Ownership of copyright—Separate publication—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 18.—Where an author agrees with publishers to write for payment certain articles for an encyclopædia to be published and paid for by them, and the articles are published and paid for, then, there being no express agreement as to copyright, or evidence to the contrary, the natural and true inference of fact is that the copyright in the contributed articles belongs to the publishers.

Sweet v. Benning, 3 W. R. 519, 16 C. B. 459; Lamb v. Evans, 41 W. R. 405, [1893] 1 Ch. 218, approved.

Decision of Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 360, [1903] 1 Ch. 318) reversed.—LAWRENCE & BULLEN v. AFLALO, H.L., 369; [1903] A. C. 17; 73 L. J. Ch. 85; 89 L. T. 569.

3. Narrative contributed to newspaper—Publication of paragraph containing the facts in abbreviated form—Reprinting of paragraph by another newspaper—Authorship of paragraph—Copyright Act, 1845 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), s. 3.—S., a journalist, contributed to a London morning newspaper an article containing an account of the escape from drowning of a distinguished ophthalmologist. The newspaper did not publish the article as written by S., but from the information contained in it the sub-editors of the newspaper compiled a paragraph containing the facts in an abbreviated form, and this paragraph was published in the newspaper. It was reprinted with slight alterations in an evening newspaper of the same day. S. having demanded payment from the publisher of the evening newspaper, which was refused, commenced an action against him claiming an injunction restraining him from selling copies of S.'s article, or substantial parts of it, and a declaration that S. was the owner of the copyright. S. had meanwhile registered himself as the owner of the copyright in the paragraph.

Held, that the paragraph was in substance a different statement of the facts in the plaintiff's article or some of them; that the true authors of the paragraph were the sub-editors of the morning newspaper; and that the action therefore failed.—SPRINGFIELD v. THAME, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 89 L. T. 242.

4. Photograph—Made "for or on behalf of" another—"Good or valuable consideration"—Photograph taken at request of sitter—Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), s. 1.—Where a photographer takes a photograph of a person at the latter's request in circumstances which raise an implied promise on the part of the sitter to pay for the photograph, the negative of the photograph is "made or executed for or on behalf of" the sitter "for a good or valuable consideration" within the meaning of section 1 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, and the copyright in the photograph belongs to the sitter, though he may not have bought the negative from the photographer.

Pollard v. Photographic Co., 37 W. R. 266, 40 Ch. D. 345, approved.

Melville v. Mirror of Life Co., [1895] 2 Ch. 531, 44 W. R. Dig. 45, commented on.—BOUCAS v. COOKE, C.A., 99; [1903] 2 K. B. 227; 72 L. J. K. B. 741; 88 L. T. 760.

CORPORATION:—

Municipal corporation—Borough councillor—Election of bankrupt—Disqualification—Quo warranto—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 87—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 32—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 9.—Section 32 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, provides that "Where a debtor is adjudicated a bankrupt he shall . . . be disqualified for . . . (d) being elected to or holding or exercising the office of mayor, alderman, or councillor," and by section 9 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, such disqualification shall not exceed five years from the date of discharge.

B., the defendant, was elected a borough councillor, and subsequently to the time prescribed for presenting a petition against his election it was discovered that prior to the date of his election he had been adjudicated a bankrupt, and that he had received his discharge less than five years previous to the election.

Held, that in order to oust the defendant from his office as councillor he must be proceeded against by an information in the nature of a quo warranto, calling upon him to show by what authority he claimed to hold and exercise the office, and not by way of mandamus.

The remedy by way of quo warranto is not taken away by section 87 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, where a disqualified person is de facto "holding" the office.—REX v. BEER, K.B.D., 221; [1903] 2 K. B. 693; 72 L. J. K. B. 608; 89 L. T. 412.

See also Election Law, 1, 2.

COSTS.—See Practice, 5-21.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Appeal—Action of ejectment—Action for recovery of tenements—Premises of annual value not exceeding £20—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 59, 120, 138, 139.—An appeal lies from the county court to the High Court in all actions of ejectment on title, as distinguished from actions by landlords against tenants for the recovery of tenements under sections 135 and 139 of the County Courts Act, 1888, even though the annual value of the premises does not exceed £20.

Earl of Shrewsbury v. Garfield, 60 L. J. Q. B. 765, 40 W. R. Dig. 63, overruled.—MILLETT v. BALLARD, C.A., 675.

2. Costs—Money paid into court—Cross judgments in separate actions—Right of set-off—Solicitor's lien for costs—County Court Acts, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c.

43), ss. 113, 150.—Section 150 of the County Courts Act, 1888, provides that "if there shall be cross judgments between the parties and the execution has been taken by that party only who shall have obtained judgment for the larger sum, and for so much only as shall remain after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the remainder shall be entered, as well as satisfaction on the judgment for the smaller sum; and if both sums shall be equal, satisfaction shall be entered upon both judgments."

Held, that this section applied to judgments in separate actions as well as to judgments upon a claim and a counterclaim in the same action, and that a defendant who had obtained judgment in an action was entitled to set off the amount of the taxed costs in that action against the amount for which judgment had been given against him in another action, and which amount he had paid into court, and that the plaintiff's solicitor had no lien for his costs on the amount paid into court as against this right of set-off.—WARD v. HADDRILL, K.B.D., 398; [1904] 1 K. B. 399; 73 L. J. K. B. 277; 90 L. T. 232.

3. Costs—Money paid into court—Remitted action—Defendant successful as to remainder of claim—Scale of costs applicable—Power of county court judge to give defendant costs—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65—County Court Rules, ord. 14, r. 12; ord. 53, r. 18.—The plaintiffs brought the action to recover the sum of £71 for goods sold and delivered. An order was made under order 14 that, as regards £23 18s. 10d. of that amount, judgment should be entered for the plaintiffs unless that sum was paid into court, and the action was then remitted to the county court. The defendants gave notice that they consented to judgment being entered for the plaintiffs as regards the sum paid into court. At the trial the defendants succeeded as regards the rest of the claim with costs, and their bill was taxed by the registrar on Scale C, "when the subject-matter or sum recovered exceeds £50." The county court judge reversed this decision, and taxed defendants' costs on Scale B, "when the subject-matter or sum recovered exceeds £20 and does not exceed £50."

Held, that the action was an action for over £50, and that the defendants were therefore entitled to have their costs taxed on Scale C.—ASTON TUBE WORKS v. DUMBELL, K.B.D., 444; [1904] 1 K. B. 535; 73 L. J. K. B. 208; 90 L. T. 315.

4. Distress—Sale—Power of bailiff to give title to goods—County Courts Act, 1888, s. 156.—A piano, the property of A., was seized by the bailiff of the county court in execution of a judgment against B., and was sold at auction to C. A. had no notice of, and made no claim to the goods prior to, the sale.

Held, that A. was entitled to recover the piano from C., as the bailiff of the county court could only give to C. by a sale made without any claim on the part of A., a title to the goods of the judgment debtor.

Goodlock v. Cousens, 45 W. R. 367, [1897] 1 Q. B. 508, distinguished.—CRANE v. ORMEROD, K.B.D., 11; [1903] 2 K. B. 37; 72 L. J. K. B. 507; 89 L. T. 45.

5. Equitable jurisdiction—Agreement to purchase house property worth more than £500 subject to a mortgage—Price for equity of redemption agreed at £75—Specific performance—Jurisdiction—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 67, 126.

Held, that the county court had jurisdiction under section 67, sub-section 4, of the County Courts Act, 1888, to hear an action brought on a contract for the sale of an equity of redemption agreed at the value of £75 although the value of the property would, but for the charge upon it, have exceeded £500.—REX v. BIRMINGHAM COUNTY COURT JUDGE, K.B.D., 524; [1904] 1 K. B. 827; 73 L. J. K. B. 344; 90 L. T. 514.

6. Execution—High bailiff's fees—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11, sub-section 1—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 146—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 25, r. 120—Order as to County Court Fees, 1901, Schedule B, Part I., r. 35.—Where the high bailiff of a county court seizes separate sets of goods of the same debtor, and in the same house, under separate warrants of execution, he is entitled to a separate possession fee on each set of goods so seized.—MORGAN, RE, BOARD OF TRADE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 79; [1904] 1 K. B. 68; 72 L. J. K. B. 948; 89 L. T. 452.

7. Remitted action—Claim in contract exceeding £100—Amendment of writ by claiming a sum not exceeding £100—Jurisdicton to remit—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.—In an action of contract in the High Court for the amount indorsed on the writ exceeded £100. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained leave to amend the writ by claiming a sum not exceeding £100.

Held, that the amended writ must be taken as the writ originating an action in which a sum not exceeding £100 was claimed, and that there was therefore jurisdiction to remit the action to the county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888.—SNEADE v. WOTHERTON BARYTES AND LEAD MINING CO., C.A., 225; [1904] 1 K. B. 295; 73 L. J. K. B. 170; 90 L. T. 53.

See also Bankruptcy, 3, 8; Practice, 18; Ship, 23.

COVENANT:—

1. Restrictive covenant—Assignment of lease—Covenant by assignees to observe covenants of lease—Action by assignees—Injunction—Indemnity—Negative or positive covenant—Construction.—The usual covenant in an assignment of leaseholds on the part of the assignees to observe and perform the covenants and conditions of the lease, and keep the lessees, their assignors, indemnified against all claims and demands on account of the same, is to be construed as one of indemnity only, and the lessees are not entitled as of right to have the negative covenants specifically enforced against the assignees by injunction. And, if the lessor had not sued them or threatened them with proceedings in respect of the breaches of the covenants in the lease by the assignees, the lessee cannot obtain either an injunction against or damages from the assignees.

Semble, that the covenant by the assignees being affirmative in form, although to perform other covenants of a negative kind, is not a covenant which the court is bound to enforce by injunction.

A. let premises to B. for thirty years at a rent, B. covenanting (among other things) not, during the term, to make any alteration or addition to the premises. B. assigned the premises to C. (a company), which covenanted with him during the residue of the term "to observe and perform the covenants and conditions contained in the lease, and which henceforth on the lessees' part ought to be observed and performed, and keep indemnified" B. against claims and demands on account of the same. C., without B.'s leave, made certain alterations in the premises which were required for the convenience of the business carried on there. B. thereupon sued C. for an injunction to restrain it from altering, and for a mandatory injunction to restore the premises to their former condition. The lessor had not objected to the alteration or threatened B. with legal proceedings.

Held, that the covenant by C. was one of indemnity only, and that B. could not enforce it as of right against C. by injunction; and that, as B. was not threatened by his lessor, and had himself suffered no damage, he had no cause of action.—HARRIS v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (LIMITED), Ch.D. Warrington, J., 668.

2. Restrictive covenant—Building restrictions—One house—Double-tenement house.—A building structurally divided into two tenements on different floors, with no internal communication, common staircase, or common front door, constitutes two houses within the meaning of a covenant not to erect more than one house on the site.

Grant v. Langston, [1900] A. C. 383, 399, followed.

Kimber v. Admans, [1900] 1 Ch. 412, distinguished.—ILFORD PARK ESTATES (LIMITED) v. JACOBS, Swinfen Eady, J.; [1903] 2 Ch. 522; 72 L. J. Ch. 699; 89 L. T. 295.

3. Restrictive covenants—Loss of deeds—Defective copy—Indemnity—Deed found—Breach of covenant contained in lost deed—Action—Costs—Liability under indemnity—Natural and proximate result of difference in deeds.—Certain lands were subject to a building scheme, the provisions of which were contained in a deed of 1854. The purchaser of a plot was informed by the vendor in good faith that the original deed was lost or destroyed, and what purported to be a true copy was produced. This copy subsequently proved to be defective. An action was brought by an adjoining owner to restrain the purchaser from erecting or allowing to remain upon his land certain buildings which contravened the provision as to a building line in the deed of 1854. The property in respect of which he was entitled to sue had certain erections upon it contravening another building stipulation, which provided that no erection should be built within four feet of a boundary fence.

At the trial of the action it was held that the defendant was affected with notice of the building stipulations, and that the plaintiff had only committed a trivial breach of a trivial covenant, and that such a breach did not disentitle the plaintiff from having the building stipulations strictly enforced, and judgment was given for the plaintiff, with costs, the defendant being directed to remove certain buildings erected by him on the land.

The third party to the action had sold the property to the defendant, and upon such sale had written a letter agreeing to indemnify the defendant, as purchaser, against all "costs, damages, and expenses" which the defendant might suffer or incur "by reason of the building stipulations and conditions being other than those set out in the copy."

Held, that the third party was liable to pay the defendant the difference in the value of the plot in consequence of the amount of land available for building under the provisions of the deed of 1854 being less than under the supposed copy; and also of the defence that the plaintiff was disentitled to sue in consequence of his having broken one of the covenants.

Held, also, that the defendant, having had actual notice of the provisions of the deed of 1854 before he commenced to build, the third party was not liable for the cost of building or removing the buildings.

Held, also, that the defendant was not entitled to recover from the third party the costs of the plaintiff incurred in the action and paid by the defendant, or the defendant's own costs so far as they related to the following defences set up by the defendant—viz., a denial that the provisions of the deed of 1854 applied to the plot purchased by him or that he had notice of such provisions; that the liquidator of the company formerly owning the land to which the deed of 1854 applied, had, under a power given by that deed to the "vendors, their heirs or assigns," by an agreement in writing, approved of by the court, released or waived the covenant which it was alleged had been broken; that no building scheme was contained in the deed of 1854, and if there was it had come to an end by mutual consent of the various purchasers of the land comprised in it.

Decision of Farwell, J. (89 L. T. Rep. 37), varied as to the costs payable by the third party under the indemnity.—HOOPER v. BROMET, C.A.; 90 L. T. 234.

4. Restrictive covenant—Object of covenant—Building scheme—Implied covenants with other purchasers—Alteration of character of neighbourhood—Acquiescence in breaches—Injunction.—Alteration in the character of a neighbourhood is no defence to an action on a covenant restricting user unless it is proved, by the existence of a building scheme or otherwise, that the covenant was entered into with the object either of securing the common advantage of a number of purchases, or of protecting other property of the covenantee, and that the covenantee has, by his own acts or acquiescence, made it impossible to attain that object.

The court will not imply mutual covenants between a number of purchasers unless the persons and the plots of land which are to be bound are in some way defined.

O. sold a plot of land to B., and took from B. a covenant, among others, that houses erected thereon should be used as private residences only. The covenants were contained in a printed form of agreement which O. used in the sale of many plots; it contained a power for the vendor to waive or vary the covenants with regard to unsold lots. There had been no sale or attempted sale by auction. No plan was produced to B. showing what plots were affected by the restrictions. O. afterwards himself built, or allowed to be built, a number of shops on the adjoining plots, and acquiesced in some slight breaches of covenant in respect of B.'s land. The defendant, who purchased from B. and had notice of the covenant, began to alter two houses erected on the plot into shops. O. brought an action to restrain him.

Held, that no building sheme had been proved to exist, and, in the absence of such a scheme and of proof that the covenant was entered into merely for the protection of O.'s property, the change in the character of the neighbourhood, though caused by his own acts, did not, nor did his acquiescence in minor breaches, disentitle him to an injunction.—OSBORNE v. BRADLEY, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1903] 2 Ch. 446; 73 L. J. Ch. 49; 89 L T. 11.

5. Sale of medical practice—Covenant not to set up in practice within certain distance—Residence beyond distance—Attending former patients within distance.—Where on the sale of a medical practice the vendor covenants not to "set up in practice" within the distance of two miles from the house at which he carried on the practice sold, he does not commit a breach of that covenant by attending at their request for remuneration two or three of his former patients within that distance, though it is not essential to the breach of such a covenant that the vendor should reside within the prohibited area; he may reside beyond the distance and yet commit a breach of the covenant by acts done within it.

Decision of Joyce, J. affirmed.—ROBERTSON v. BUCHANAN, C.A.; 90 L. T. 390.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 1-6, 10, 11; Restraint of Trade, 1, 2; Vendor and Purchaser, 1, 3.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Bankruptcy—Property divisible amongst creditors—Execution of deed of arrangement—Debtor absconding with property—Whether property of trustee or debtor—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 12.—The prisoner being in difficulties, on the 24th of April, 1903, voluntarily assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors. The assignment was expressed to be as between the debtor, the trustee, and the creditors, but was not communicated to his creditors, and it was executed by the trustee and the prisoner only. The trustee took possession of the business on the 25th of April. On the 28th of April the prisoner left England with £120, which he ought to have handed over to the trustee. On the 13th of May a receiving order was made against him, and on the 30th of May he was declared a bankrupt.

Held, that he was rightly convicted under section 12 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for having within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him quitted England and taken with him a part of "his" property—viz., £120, which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors, as no irrevocable trust of that sum had been created, the trustee never having got possession of the money.

Reg. v. Creese, 22 W. R. 375, 2 C. C. R. 105, distinguished.—REX v. HUMPHRIS, C.C.R., 591; [1904] 2 K. B. 89; 73 L. J. K. B. 464; 90 L. T. 555.

2. Bankruptcy—Undischarged bankrupt—Obtaining credit to extent of £20 or upwards—Misdemeanour—Maximum punishment—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), ss. 11, 13, 14—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 31.—By the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 31, it is provided that "Where an undischarged bankrupt, who has been adjudged bankrupt under this Act, obtains credit to the extent of £20 or upwards from any person without informing such person that he is an undischarged bankrupt, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be dealt with and punished as if he had been guilty of a misdemeanour under the Debtors Act, 1869, and the provisions of that Act shall apply to proceedings under this section."

Held, that the maximum punishment for an offence under the above section is imprisonment with hard labour for one year, as the section refers to the class of misdemeanours mentioned in section 13 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and not to the class mentioned in section 11 of that Act.—REX v. TURNER, C.C.R., 214; [1904] 1 K. B. 181; 73 L. J. K. B. 46; 89 L. T. 676.

3. Evidence—Obtaining credit by fraud—Evidence of criminal acts other than those charged—Evidence tending to show system—Admissibility.—Upon the trial of a prisoner who was indicted for unlawfully obtaining credit by false pretences and fraud from a person who let apartments, evidence was admitted showing that the prisoner had shortly before obtained apartments at other houses and had left without payment.

Held, that the evidence was relevant and admissible, as tending to show a system of fraud and negativing accident or mistake or any honest motive on the part of the prisoner.—REX v. WYATT, C.C.R., 285; [1904] 1 K. B. 188; 73 L. J. K. B. 15.

4. Evidence—Statement by prisoner that prosecutor is a liar—"Imputations on the character of the prosecutor"—Cross-examination of prisoner as to character—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (f) (ii.).—At the trial of a prisoner upon an indictment he was called as a witness, and in his cross-examination counsel for the prosecution asked him whether a statement made by the prosecutor was the truth or an invention. In reply, the prisoner said: "No; it is a lie, and he is a liar."

Held, that the answer of the prisoner was not such as to "involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor" within the meaning of section 1 (f) (ii.) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, so as to render the prisoner liable to be asked in cross-examination, and be required to answer, questions as to any previous convictions or as to his bad character.—REX v. ROUSE, C.C.R., 236; [1904] 1 K. B. 184; 73 L. J. K. B. 60; 89 L. T. 677.

5. Intoxicating liquor, sale of, to child under fourteen—Delivery in vessel not corked and sealed—Sale by servant without master's knowledge and in disobedience to his orders—"Knowingly allows any person to sell"—Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1904 (1 Ed. 7, c. 27), s. 2.—Section 2 of the Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1901, provides that "every holder of a licence who knowingly sells or delivers, or allows any person to sell or deliver, save at the residence or working place of the purchaser, any description of intoxicating liquor to any person under the age of fourteen years for consumption by any person on or off the premises, excepting such intoxicating liquors as are sold or delivered in cork and sealed vessels in quantities not less than one reputed pint for consumption off the premises only," shall be liable to certain penalties.

B., acting within the general scope of his employment as a barman to a person licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, in breach of his master's express orders and without his knowledge, knowingly sold to a child under fourteen years of age a pint of porter in a bottle neither corked nor sealed. The licence-holder had not delegated the charge or control of his licensed premises to B.

Held, that the licence-holder could not be convicted under the above section of "knowingly allowing" the sale.—EMARY v. NOLLOTH, K.B.D., 107; [1903] 2 K. B. 264; 72 L. J. K. B. 620; 89 L. T. 100.

6. Shooting at dog—Malicious intention—Bonâ fide belief that act was necessary—Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 41.—The test of whether a person is liable to conviction, against whom an information under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 41, has been laid, is whether he acted under a bonâ fide belief, right or wrong, that it was necessary for him to do the act complained of in order to protect his own or his master's property.

Daniel v. Janes, (1877) L. R. 2 C. P. 351, 25 W. R. Dig. 91, considered.—MILES v. HUTCHINGS, K.B.D., 284; [1903] 2 K. B. 714; 72 L. J. K. B. 775; 89 L. T. 420.

CROWN:—

1. Prerogative—Exemption—Prison Commissioners—Local board—Bye-laws—Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 5.—The questions were whether there was evidence that the part of the plot in question and the buildings thereon formed part of the prison as defined by the Prison Act, 1865, s. 4, and the Prison Act, 1877, s. 60, and whether the land and buildings being vested in the Prison Commissioners for the use of the Secretary of State for public prison purposes, the bye-laws were applicable thereto, and whether, under the circumstances, penalties for breach of the bye-laws could be enforced against the Prison Commissioners.

Held, on the facts, that the buildings were not part of the prison and were not exempt from the bye-laws on that ground, but that the plot of ground was State property, and property therefore over which the local authority had no control whatever.—GORTON LOCAL BOARD v. PRISON COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 165, n.

2. Prerogative—Highways—Locomotives—Speed of—Locomotives Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), s. 4.—The Crown is not bound by an Act of Parliament, unless it is expressly or by necessary implication named therein.

Held, that a driver of a locomotive belonging to the Crown, and acting under the orders of the Crown, was not subject to the Locomotives Act, 1865, and was not liable to a penalty for exceeding the rate of speed fixed by section 4.—COOPER v. HAWKINS. K.B.D., 233; [1904] 2 K. B. 164; 73 L. J. K. B. 113; 89 L. T. 476.

CY-PRES:—

Power—Testamentary power—Excessive execution.—A cy-près estate cannot be implied in lieu of excessive limitations of real estate under a testamentary power, unless it will include all persons intended to take under those limitations, and no others.

Monypenny v. Dering, (1852) 2 D. M. & G. 145, and Hampton v. Holman, (1877) 5 Ch. D. 183, followed.—RISING, RE, RISING v. RISING, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 533; 73 L. J. Ch. 455; 90 L. T. 504.

See also Will, 8.

DAMAGES:—

Measure of—Sale of goods—Disclaimer of responsibility for bad workmanship—Costs of action by sub-vendee against purchaser reasonably defended.—The plaintiffs having undertaken the repairs of a steamship for the owners, employed the defendants, an engineering company, to construct a new crank shaft. The defendants agreed to do so, upon the terms of their not being responsible for failure of material or workmanship beyond the replacement of faulty work supplied by them.

In an action by the plaintiffs against the shipowners to recover the price of the shaft which had been supplied by the defendants, the shipowners counterclaimed for damages for breach of contract in consequence of the shaft having broken down on a voyage.

The plaintiffs, after communicating with the defendants, who thereupon repudiated all responsibility, defended the counterclaim.

The shipowners succeeded on their counterclaim, the shaft being found to have been of faulty workmanship.

In an action by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the cost of the shipowners' counterclaim, as damages resulting from the defendants' breach of contract,

Held, that the terms on which the defendants had supplied the shaft did not relieve them from paying these costs; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the costs of the counterclaim except so far as they were increased by any issue other than the faultiness of the material or workmanship of the shaft.—PRINCE OF WALES DOCK CO. v. FOWNES CO., C.A.; 90 L. T. 527.

DEED:—

Construction—Use of garden—Grant to lessees, sub-lessees, and tenants, being occupiers of houses, and their friends—User by members of residential club.—A. granted by deed to B., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and his and their lessees and sub-lessees or tenants, being occupiers of certain houses, and their families and friends, the right to enter and use an adjacent ornamental garden. A limited company which was the owner of some and the lessee of another of these houses, established in them a proprietary residential club for ladies. Under the rules of the club bedrooms might be allotted to the members at a weekly rent, payable in advance, but subject to many restrictions as to user.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the resident members, though occupiers of the houses, were occupiers as licensees of the company, and not as lessees, sub-lessees, or tenants, and that they were not, therefore, entitled as of right to enter into and use the garden.

Held, further, that the members of the club were not "friends" whose entry on to and user of the garden the company could authorize.—KEITH v. TWENTIETH CENTURY CLUB (LIMITED), Ch.D. Buckley, J., 554; 73 L. J. Ch. 545; 90 L. T. 775.

DEFAMATION:—

Slander—Special damage—Remoteness—Damage not reasonable and probable consequence of words.—The plaintiff, who was a barman, claimed damages from the defendant for slander, the words complained of, which were alleged to have been spoken to the plaintiff's employer, being: "You have a barman in your employ named S., who has removed from his landlord's house leaving £2 owing for a month's rent, and I cannot get the money from him"; and he alleged as special damage that his employer had in consequence dismissed him from his employment.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that the dismissal of the plaintiff could not be the natural and probable consequence of the words complained of, and that, therefore, the alleged special damage could not support the action.—SPEAKE v. HUGHES, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 138; 73 L. J. K. B. 172; 89 L. T. 576.

See also Libel, 1, 2; Slander, 1.

DENTISTRY:—

Unregistered person—Supply of false teeth—Fitting set in patient's mouth—Right to recover fee—"Dental operation, dental attendance or advice"—Dentists Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 33), s. 5.—A person who was carrying on the practice of a dentist, but who was not registered under the Dentists Act, 1878, made for the defendant and fitted to the defendant's mouth a set of false teeth which were taken by the defendant and kept and used by him. The defendant having refused to pay for the same.

Held, that section 5 of the Dentists Act, 1878, which prevented an unregistered person from recovering any fee or charge for "the performance of any dental operation, or for any dental attendance or advice," did not prevent the unregistered person from recovering the price of the set of teeth so supplied, as distinguished from the fitting of the same.—HENNAN v. DUCKWORTH, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 546.

DESIGN:—

Registration—Infringement—Patent and registered design for same invention—Second registered design similar to previous design—Marking goods—Registration of design not known to infringer—Injunction—Damages—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 47, 51, 58, 59, 60, 61. —The plaintiffs registered a design for improvements in motor cycles between the time when they applied for and the time when they obtained letters patent for a similar invention. Subsequently they registered a new design, which in fact was similar to the originally registered design, and sold machines marked with the registration number only. The fact of the registration was unknown to the defendants prior to the issue of the writ in an action against them for infringement, but they sold some machines after the writ was issued, and on an application for an interim injunction they offered to keep an account.

Held, that a patent and a registered design for the same invention might co-exist, the rights conferred did not clash, and the registration was valid; that the first registration was not forfeited; and that want of knowledge was not a reason why an injunction should not be granted, but that it protected the defendants from payment of damages in respect of sales effected by them before writ.—WERNER MOTORS v. GAMAGE, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 264; 73 L. J. Ch. 266; 90 L. T. 342.

DISTRESS:—

1. Poor law—Rating—Recovery—Costs—Charges of taking, keeping, and selling the distress—Distress (Costs) Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 93)—Distress (Costs) Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17)—Distress for Rates Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14), s. 1.—The provisions contained in the Distress (Costs) Acts, 1817 and 1827, limiting the costs and charges of distresses for poor rates and certain other rates, where the amount due does not exceed £20, are impliedly repealed as regards poor rate, by the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, section 1 of which authorizes in connection with the levy of distress for such rates, the levy of the "reasonable charges of the taking, keeping, and selling of the said distress."—HILL v. PANNIFER, K.B.D., 588; [1904] 1 K. B. 811; 73 L. J. K. B. 556; 90 L. T. 511.

2. Sale of goods—Purchase by landlord—2 W. & M., Sess. 1. c. 5, s. 2—Practice—Appeal to Court of Appeal—County court appeal—"Right of appeal to the High Court"—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 120—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 5.—A landlord who has distrained goods for rent in arrear cannot himself purchase them.

King v. England, 12 W. R. 308, 4 B. & S. 782, approved and followed.

Section 1, sub-section 5, of the Judicature Act, 1894, which empowers the Court of Appeal to give leave to appeal from the High Court in all cases "where there is a right of appeal to the High Court from any court," includes cases in which there is an appeal to the High Court with the leave of the county court judge as well as cases where there is an appeal without leave.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (51 W. R. 699, [1903] 2 K. B. 168) affirmed.—MOORE, NETTLEFOLD, & CO. v. SINGER MANUFACTURING CO., C.A., 385; [1904] 1 K. B. 820; 73 L. J. K. B. 457; 90 L. T. 469.

See also County Court, 4.

DIVORCE:—

1. Adultery of petitioner—Discretion of court—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31.—The court has full discretion as to granting a decree nisi in favour of a petitioner who has been found guilty of adultery under section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), where the misconduct of the petitioner is more or less pardonable or can be excused, but in order that it may exercise this discretion the misconduct of the petitioner must have been caused by the misconduct or the offences of the respondent.

Constantinidi v. Constantinidi and Lance, [1903] P. 246, distinguished.—WYKE v. WYKE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 149; 73 L. J. P. 38; 90 L. T. 172.

2. Adultery of petitioner—Statutory discretion—Conduct conducing—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31.—The court held that if a wife leaves her husband because she has transferred her affections to another man, and her husband is aware that that is the cause, and he thereafter commits adultery, such conduct in the wife is conduct conducing to the husband's adultery; and exercising its discretion under section 31 of the Divorce Act, 1857, it further held that, in the circumstances of the case, it was justified in granting the husband a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage. — CONSTANTINIDI v. CONSTANTINIDI, P.D. & Ad.D., 190; [1903] P. 246; 72 L. J. P. 82; 89 L. T. 340.

3. Cruelty—False charge against wife—Injury to health.—A husband left his wife and children without any means of support, and afterwards filed a petition against his wife for dissolution of his marriage on the ground of her adultery, alleging that she had given birth to a child after he had left her, of which he was not the father. Upon proof being given that the allegation had had the effect of injuring the health of the wife, it was held that such conduct on the part of the husband constituted legal cruelty so as to entitle the wife to relief.—JEAPES v. JEAPES, P.D. & Ad.D.; 89 L. T. 74.

4. Desertion—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), s. 5—Condonation—Revival.—The Court held that the statutory offence of desertion created by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, may be revived by subsequent adultery.—PAIN v. PAIN, P.D. & Ad.D., 271; [1903] P. 263; 73 L. J. P. 1; 89 L. T. 588.

5. Incest—Condonation—Revival—Desertion.—The husband committed incestuous adultery, which the wife condoned, but he afterwards deserted her.

The Court held that such desertion revived the condoned incestuous adultery, and granted a decree nisi.—HOUGHTON v. HOUGHTON, P.D. & Ad.D., 272; [1903] P. 150; 72 L. J. P. 31; 89 L. T. 76.

6. Rehearing—Application—Practice.—An application for the rehearing of a suit for dissolution of marriage cannot be made except to a Divisional Court.—WATSON v. WATSON, P.D. & Ad.D.; 89 L. T. 78.

7. Scotland, law of—Divorce—Settled property—Divorced spouse surviving—Termination of interest in fund—Substitution of issue—Period of vesting.—By a Scotch statute passed in 1573 desertion, under circumstances set out in the statute, is a sufficient cause for divorce, and the offending party is to lose all interest in the matrimonial property. By a marriage settlement made in 1866 certain property was settled upon trust for the husband and wife for life, and the survivor of them, and after the death of the survivor for the children, if any. There was one child of the marriage, who had attained twenty-one years. In 1885 the wife divorced the husband, under the above-mentioned statute, for desertion. In 1899 the wife died leaving the husband and the child surviving.

Held, that as long as the husband survived the settled property remained part of the wife's estate, and the child could not come into possession of it till after the death of the husband.

Per Lord Davey.—By the law of Scotland a substitution of issue in case of the death of the institute before the period of distribution prevents vesting, so that the interest of the institute is not indefeasible.—DAWSON v. SMART, H.L.; [1903] A. C. 457; 89 L. T. 343.

8. Settlements, variation of—Answer to petition before decree absolute—Lis pendens.—A petitioner who has obtained a decree nisi for divorce cannot proceed with a petition to vary settlements until the decree has been made absolute; and nothing done between the time when the decree is made absolute and the hearing of the petition to vary can affect the power of the court to vary the settlements.—CONSTANTINIDI v. CONSTANTINIDI (No. 2), C.A.; [1904] P. 306.

9. Settlements, variation of—Child—Question of legitimacy—Issue directed.—On a petition for variation of settlements after a decree for dissolution of marriage, where a child was born between the date of the decree nisi and the decree absolute, the paternity of which the petitioner denied, the court directed an issue to be tried to ascertain the status of the child, and postponed the further consideration of the variation of settlements until after the trial of the issue.—EVANS v. EVANS, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 274; 73 L. J. P. 87.

DOMICIL:—

Renunciation of domicil of origin—Evidence—Burden of proof.—The onus of proving that a domicil has been chosen in substitution for the domicil of origin lies upon the party asserting that the domicil of origin has been lost.

W., whose domicil of origin was in America, left America in 1850 and resided in Russia, for business purposes, for twenty years, visiting England in the winter to avoid the Russian climate. In 1870 he came to reside in England, but up to 1883 visited Russia yearly for business purposes. From 1883 up to his death in 1897 he resided in England. He retained a large interest in property in America, and always described himself as an American citizen, and spoke frequently of his intention of returning to America to develop his property in that country. While in England he lived in various houses taken on short leases. His will was proved in England, and the Crown claimed legacy duty on his estate, which was very large.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), Lord Lindley dissenting, that the Crown had failed to discharge the onus, which was upon them, of proving that W. had a fixed and settled purpose of renouncing his domicil of origin, and that the claim for legacy duty failed.—WINANS v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 287; 73 L. J. K. B. 613; 90 L. T. 721.

EASEMENT:—

1. Light—Prescription—Enjoyment for twenty years—Consent or agreement in writing—"Expressly given or made for that purpose"—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3.—R. M., the owner in fee of a house and the adjoining land, in 1816 conveyed the house in fee simple to J. A., the predecessor of the plaintiff. At the same time a stone was built into the wall of the house, upon which was inscribed: "1816. This stone is placed by J. A. to perpetuate R. M.'s right to build within nine inches of this or any other building."

The access of light to the windows of the house over the adjoining land was continuously enjoyed from 1816 to 1901, when the defendant erected a building on the adjoining land which obstructed that access of light.

Held (reversing the judgment of Lawrance, J.), that the inscription could not be construed as a consent or agreement "expressly made or given for the purpose" of the enjoyment of light within the meaning of section 3 of the Prescription Act, 1832; and that the plaintiff had an absolute right to the access of light.—RUSCOE v. GROUNSELL, C.A.; 89 L. T. 426.

2. Light—Prescription—Substantial interference—Nuisance—Damage—Measure of right—Angle of 45 degrees—Mandatory injunction—Inquiry as to damage, refusal of—Ancient lights.—To constitute an actionable obstruction of ancient lights it is not enough that the light is less than before. There must be a substantial privation of light, enough to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable according to the ordinary notions of mankind and (in the case of business premises) to prevent the plaintiff from carrying on his business as beneficially as before.

The nature of the right to light and of an infringement was not altered by the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71).

The decision of the Court of Appeal in Home and Colonial Stores (Limited) v. Colls, [1902] 1 Ch. 302, reversed, and the decision of Joyce, J., restored.

The decision of the Court of Appeal in Warren v. Brown, [1902] 1 K. B. 15, overruled.—COLLS v. HOME AND COLONIAL STORES (LIMITED), H.L.; [1904] A. C. 179; 73 L. J. Ch. 484; 90 L. T. 687.

3. Light and air—Necessity, easement of—Light—Grant of one of two adjoining tenements—Derogation from grant—Implied reservation.—The defendant, being the owner of two adjoining tenements, granted one of them to the plaintiff's predecessor in title, while retaining the other, without expressly reserving to himself any rights over the tenement granted. The plaintiff built a wall on her premises so as to block out the light to two windows in the defendant's premises. One of these windows lighted a pantry which could not be lighted in any other way except by means of borrowed light, and the obstruction rendered the pantry useless as a pantry.

Held, that there was no implied reservation to the defendant of the right to the access of light to the pantry window, inasmuch as it was not an easement of necessity within the exception to the rule in Wheeldon v. Burrows, (1878) 12 Ch. D. 31.

The observations of Stirling, L.J., as to "easement of necessity" in Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co., [1902] 2 Ch. 557, 573, followed and approved.—RAY v. HAZELDINE, C.A.; D. Kekewich, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 17; 73 L. J. Ch. 537; 90 L. T. 703.

4. Way, right of—Annual payment—Uninterrupted enjoyment for forty years—Evidence of user—Lost grant—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 2, 82.—Parol evidence is admissible in answer to an allegation of enjoyment of a way as of right, and a payment of an ambiguous character must be shown by a claimant not to be inconsistent with the claim.

Where, therefore, a right of way has been enjoyed openly for over forty years, but a payment annually made to the owners of the servient tenement, though whether for a licence or for what purpose was not determined by the evidence, the inference will be made that the annual payment was for a yearly licence, and the Prescription Act will consequently not apply.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (49 W. R. 421, [1891] 2 Ch. 198) affirmed.—GARDNER v. HODGSON;

BREWERY CO., H.L., 17; [1903] A. C. 229; 72 L. J. Ch. 558; 88 L. T. 698.

5. Way, right of—Grant—Excessive user—Bona fides—Building extending beyond dominant tenement.—A former owner of plot A bought an adjoining plot, B, together with a right of way thereto over plot C from a public street. The defendant M., the present owner of plot A and plot B, built a factory on both, with the entrance on plot B, the dominant tenement.

The plaintiff, the present owner of plot C, brought this action to restrain the defendant M. and his mortgagees, Flower & Sons (Limited), from using the right of way to the factory, contending that the effect of the building was to extend the user of the way unlawfully to plot A, and as it was practically impossible to separate the lawful from the excessive user the right of way was wholly extinguished. In any case the defendants were not entitled to use the way as a means of approach to the part of the factory built on plot A.

Held, that the right of way was not extinguished, and the defendants could not be restrained from using it as a means of access to the factory merely because having entered by the doorway on plot B, the dominant tenement, they might pass to the portion erected on plot A.—HARRIS v. FLOWER, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 90 L. T. 669.

6. Way, right of—Prescription—Right to use pump—Long user—Dominant and servient tenements held under same landlord—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2.—A right of way or other easement capable of being acquired under section 2 of the Prescription Act, 1832, by long user, cannot be so acquired by a lease of a tenement over an adjoining tenement where both tenements are held under the same landlord.—KILGOUR v. GADDES, C.A., 438; [1904] 1 K. B. 457; 73 L. J. K. B. 233; 90 L. T. 604.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Clergy discipline—Immoral act—Construction—Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s 2.

Held, that the collection of alms on false and fraudulent pretences is an immoral act within the meaning of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892.—FITZMAURICE v. HESKETH, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 266; 73 L. J. P. C. 53.

2. Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32)—Immoral habit of swearing and ribaldry.—The occasional use of objectionable language by a clergyman, under circumstances of great provocation, upon rare occasions extending over a period of three years,

Held, not to amount to an immoral habit "of swearing and ribaldry" within the meaning of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892.

Judgment of the court below reversed.—MOORE v. OXFORD (BISHOP), P.C.; [1904] A. C. 283; 73 L. J. P. C. 43; 90 L. T. 425.

3. Faculty—Jurisdiction—Revocability of faculty.—A faculty granted by the ordinary after citation and unappealed against cannot, in the absence of the consent of all the parties interested, be revoked for any cause other than fraud.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. DUNDAS, Arches Ct.; [1904] P. 1.

EDUCATION:—

United district school board—Transfer to educational authorities—Different "appointed days"—Adjustment of liabilities—Immediate or postponed arbitration—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), s. 27, sub-section 2; Schedule II., clauses 1, 8, 22—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 68—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 2.—The H. Urban District Council is the local educational authority for the H. Urban District. The 1st of June, 1903, was the "appointed day" for the coming into operation of the Education Act, 1902, within the district. The corporation of J. and the county council of D. are respectively the local education authorities for the borough of J. and the rural district of M. At the passing of the Education Act, 1902, the H., M., and J. United District School Board was the school board for the urban district of H., the rural district of M., and the borough of J. The 1st of April, 1904, was the appointed day for the coming into operation of that Act within the county of D. and the borough of J. Matters having arisen requiring adjustment between the council and the united district school board, and clause 1 of the second schedule to the Act providing that the rights and liabilities "of any school board" existing at the appointed day should be transferred to the council exercising the powers of the school board, Held, that an arbitrator should be at once appointed to adjust such matters, and that the appointment should not be delayed until the appointed day for the remainder of the united district school board.—HEBBURN URBAN COUNCIL, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 90 L. T. 145.

See also Will, 7.

ELECTION LAW:—

1. Corporation—Nomination of disqualified person—Right of defeated candidate to claim seat—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 56, sub-section 2.—A candidate who has received a minority of the votes in an election under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, is not entitled to claim the seat when the successful candidate is disqualified for being elected, unless the disqualification was either apparent or such disqualification has been brought to the notice of the electors.—HOBBS v. MOREY, K.B.D., 348; [1904] 1 K. B. 74; 73 L. J. K. B. 47; 89 L. T. 531.

2. Illegal practice—Relief—Presentation of petition—Same grounds as on which relief is sought—Municipal Corporations (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70), s. 20.—The court will grant relief from an illegal practice in a proper case, even although an election petition has been presented, where the sole grounds for such petition are those in respect of which relief is sought, and none of the facts are in dispute.—FORSTER, EX PARTE, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 18.

3. Registration — Parliament — Lodger claim — Objection as to value of lodgings—Evidence—Disallowance of claim—Refusal to state case—Order nisi for mandamus—Statement of revising barrister in answer to order nisi—Statement to be made on affidavit—Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), ss. 42, 65—Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), ss. 22, 23; s. 28, sub-sections 10, 11; ss. 36, 37.—J. claimed to vote as an old lodger; it appeared in the body of his claim that he occupied as lodgings two unfurnished rooms on the top floor of a house, for which rooms he paid 5s. 6d. weekly, and in the declaration annexed to the claim the claimant declared that his lodgings were of the clear yearly value, if let unfurnished, of £10 or upwards. The claim was duly objected to on the ground that the lodgings were not of sufficient value. It was proved that the whole house was only rated at £14, and there were also other circumstances in evidence before the revising barrister which raised a strong doubt in his mind as to whether the lodgings were of sufficient value. The revising barrister adjourned the hearing to an evening sitting of the court, and meanwhile sent a written notice to the claimant that his claim would, or might be, disallowed unless he produced, or caused to be produced, at the evening sitting his rent-book or other sufficient evidence that his lodgings were of the requisite value. The claimant having altogether ignored this notice, the revising barrister disallowed the claim, on the ground that he was not satisfied that the claimant's lodgings were of the requisite value, and refused to state a case. An order nisi for a mandamus having been obtained ex parte,

Held, that the case raised a question as to the true construction of section 29, sub-sections 10, 11, of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878, and that the order nisi should be made absolute.

Held, also, that as a general rule a statement made by a revising barrister in answer to an order nisi should be on affidavit.

The observations of the court on this point in In re Bane, W. N. 1879, p. 200, discussed and distinguished.—REX v. NEPEAN, K.B.D., 264.

4. Registration — Parliament — Lodger claim — Objection as to value—Evidence pro and con—Revising barrister—Jurisdiction—Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), ss. 42, 65—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 4, sub-section 2—Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), ss. 22, 23; s. 28, sub-sections 10, 11; s. 36.—A revising barrister has no jurisdiction to make the allowance of a lodger claimant's vote dependent upon the claimant's compliance with a requirement that he shall attend personally; the only way in which a lodger claimant's personal attendance can be required is by means of a summons under section 36 of the Registration Act, 1878.

Section 28 of the Registration Act, 1878, does not absolutely confine the right of a revising barrister to disallow a lodger claim to the case of such primâ facie proof of the ground of objection being given as is described in sub-section 10 of that section; that sub-section deals only with one special method of establishing a primâ facie case against the claim; and, therefore, even although the objector's case does not satisfy sub-section 10, it may still consist of evidence against the lodger's claim, which the revising barrister is entitled to weigh and ought to give effect to by allowing the objection, if he thinks that the weight of such evidence is sufficient to outweigh the evidence of the lodger's declaration (which by section 23 of the Act of 1878 is constituted primâ facie evidence of the qualification) and any other evidence confirmatory of the declaration which the claimant may think proper to adduce. As to the weight and effect of such evidence pro and con, the revising barrister is the constituted judge, and no appeal lies from his decision.—JENKINS v. GROCOTT, K.B.D., 267; [1904] 1 K. B. 374; 73 L. J. K. B. 215; 90 L. T. 90.

5. Registration—Parliament—Occupation franchise —Husband tenant of wife—Evidence of bonâ fide agreement to pay rent by husband to wife.—The relationship of husband and wife does not in point of law preclude the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant between the wife and husband in respect of the house in which they both reside and which is owned by the wife; and where there is in fact a bonâ fide tenancy of such house by the husband from the wife, the husband is entitled to be registered under the Registration Acts in respect of his occupation as tenant of such house.

Hall v. Michelmore, 50 W. R. 172, explained and distinguished.—PEARCE v. MERRIMAN, K.B.D., 141; [1904] 1 K. B. 80; 73 L. J. K. B. 183; 89 L. T. 745.

6. Registration—Parliament—Ownership qualification—Freehold benefice—Pew-rents—Interest in land —8 Hen. 6, c. 7.—Where the right to receive for his own benefit the pew-rents of a church is vested in the vicar by virtue of his office, even though such right arise merely by implication from the terms of the licence of the bishop when appointing the vicar, the pew-rents may, in such circumstances, constitute an equitable freehold interest in land within the meaning of the Registration Act, 8 Hen. 6, c. 7.

Quære, whether the mere actual receipt of pew-rents by the vicar for his own use would of itself be sufficient to constitute an interest in land.

Ex parte Arrowsmith, 26 W. R. 600, 8 Ch. D. 96, discussed.—VICKERS v. SELWYN, K.B.D., 153; 89 L. T. 747.

7. Registration—Parliamentary and county council franchise—Head master of school—Occupation of dwelling-house adjoining school premises—Character of occupation—Household or service franchise—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 3—Representation of the People Act, 1884 (48 & 49 Vict. c 3), ss. 2, 3—County Electors Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 10). s. 3.—The appellant, a schoolmaster, had resided during the qualifying period in a dwelling-house attached to the school premises, which dwelling-house he held under an agreement from the school managers. No deduction from his annual salary as schoolmaster was made in respect of his occupation of the dwelling-house, nor did the agreement contain any stipulation requiring the appellant as schoolmaster to reside in the dwelling-house. The appellant claimed to have his name inserted in Division I. of the list of occupation electors in respect of his occupation as tenant of the said dwelling-house.

The revising barrister, although not finding as a fact, either that the appellant as schoolmaster was required to reside in the dwelling-house, or that he might, if he chose, reside elsewhere, dismissed the claim, on the ground that the appellant occupied the dwelling-house by virtue only of his office and services as schoolmaster, and, consequently, was not entitled to be placed in Division I.

Upon appeal, the court reversed the revising barrister, and held, upon the facts, that the case was governed by Marsh v. Estcourt, 38 W. R. 495, 24 Q. B. D. 147, and that the appellant was entitled to have his name inserted in Division I.—DOVER v. PROSSER, K.B.D., 140; [1904] 1 K. B. 84; 73 L. J. K. B. 13; 89 L. T. 724.

ESTATE DUTY.—See Inland Revenue.

ESTOPPEL.—See Company, 24; Insurance, 3; Landlord and Tenant, 7; Ship, 27.

EVIDENCE:—

1. Date of birth—Register—Entry—Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86).—A certified copy of an entry in a register of births and made pursuant to the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, is evidence, not merely of the fact of birth before the date of registration, but of the actual date of birth.

In re Wintle, (1870) L. R. 9 Eq. 373, disapproved. —GOODRICH, IN THE ESTATE OF, PAYNE v. BENNETT, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 138; 73 L. J. P. 33; 90 L. T. 170.

2. Expert's reports — Facts not within living memory — Admissibility. — Where an engineer's reports are within the common knowledge of engineers and accepted by them as accurate, they constitute evidence which the court will accept as to facts not within living memory.—EAST LONDON RAILWAY CO. v. CONSERVATORS OF RIVER THAMES, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 90 L. T. 347.

EXECUTION:—

Discovery in aid—Judgment against corporation—Examination of officer—Past officer—Ord. 42, r. 32. —An order may be made, under ord. 42, r. 32, where judgment has been recovered against a corporation, for the examination of a past as well as of a present officer of the corporation.—SOCIÉTÉ GÉNÉRALE DU COMMERCE ET DE L'INDUSTRIE EN FRANCE v. JOHANN MARIA FARINA & CO., C.A., 404; [1904] 1 K. B. 794; 73 L. J. K. B. 355; 90 L. T. 472.

See also Bankruptcy, 7; County Court, 6.

EXECUTOR:—

1. Indemnity—Privity of estate—Distribution—Administration — Leaseholds — Contingent future liabilities—Retention of assets.—On making an order for the distribution of the estate of a testator amongst his residuary legatees the court will not set aside any part of his assets to indemnify his executors against possible liabilities which may arise in respect of leases formerly held by him, unless there is privity of estate between the executors and the lessors.—NIXON, RE, GRAY v. BELL, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 638; 73 L. J. Ch. 446.

2. Power to compromise claim of co-executor—"Compromise"—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) s. 21—Judicial Trustee Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—The power of an executor to compromise claims against his testator's estate extends —in a proper case—to claims made by a co-executor, and where such a claim has been allowed by an executor acting honestly and reasonably the transaction is valid and binding on the residuary legatees.—HOUGHTON, RE, HAWLEY v. BLAKE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 505; [1904] 1 Ch. 622; 73 L. J. Ch. 317; 90 L. T. 252.

See also Mortgage, 9; Practice, 26; Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

FACTORY:—

1. Overtime—Part of factory in which overtime employment allowed—"Warehouse not used for any manufacturing process or handicraft"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), s. 49, Schedule II., clause 4.—By Schedule II., clause 4, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, overtime is allowed in "any part of a factory (whether textile or non-textile) or workshop which is a warehouse not used for any manufacturing process or handicraft, and in which persons are solely employed in polishing, cleaning, wrapping, or packing up goods."

A part of a factory which is used at any time during ordinary hours for a manufacturing process or handicraft is not a "warehouse" in which overtime is allowed within the meaning of the above clause, and persons may not be employed in overtime therein, even though no manufacturing process or handicraft is being carried on therein during such overtime.—SMITH v. SIBRAY, HALL, & CO., K.B.D., 218; [1903] 2 K. B. 707; 72 L. J. K. B. 822; 89 L. T. 358.

2. "Tenement factory"—Fire-escape—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), ss. 14, 149. —By section 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the expression "tenement factory" is defined to mean "a factory where mechanical power is supplied to different parts of the same building occupied by different persons for the purpose of any manufacturing process," &c.

Held, that by the words "is supplied" must be understood "is supplied from the same source," and that a building the parts of which, being occupied as factories by different persons have each their own independent supply of mechanical power, is not within the definition.

Toller v. Spiers & Pond (Limited), [1903] 1 Ch. 362, followed.—BRASS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., [1904] 2 K. B. 336.

See also Master and Servant, 18-20.

FISHERY:—

1. Mussel fishings—Right of Crown to grant.—The House holding that mussel fishings may competently be granted by the Crown, affirmed the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, Scotland, dated the 18th of March, 1902 (4 F. 698).—PARKER v. LORD ADVOCATE, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 364.

2. Validity of bye-law—Salmon Fisheries Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 39, sub-section 3.—Where conservators of a river have power to determine (inter alia) "the length, size, and description of nets . . . for taking of salmon," they are entitled to prohibit the use of a particular kind of net altogether.—CLAYTON v. PEIRSE, K.B.D., 495; [1904] 1 K. B. 424; 73 L. J. K. B. 268; 90 L. T. 119.

FIXTURES:—

1. Tenant's fixtures—Removal—Determination of lease by forfeiture—Mortgage of lease—Right of mortgagee.—A lease to a limited company contained a proviso for the determination of the term in the event of the company going into liquidation. The company having issued debentures which constituted a floating charge on all its property present and future, a receiver was appointed in a debenture-holders' action. The receiver took possession of the leasehold premises and obtained leave from the judge to sell the tenant's fixtures, the lessor being present and not objecting. After the fixtures had been advertised for sale the company went into voluntary liquidation, and the lessor thereupon demanded possession of the leasehold premises including the fixtures in question.

Held, that the voluntary act of the company in going into liquidation ought not in the circumstances to prejudice the right of the debenture-holders to remove the tenant's fixtures, and that they were entitled to a reasonable time after the determination of the lease for removal.

Pugh v. Arton, (1869) L. R. 8 Eq. 626, commented on.—GLASDIR COPPER WORKS (LIMITED), RE, ENGLISH ELECTRO-METALLURGICAL CO. v. GLASDIR COPPER WORKS (LIMITED), Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 819; 73 L. J. Ch. 461; 90 L. T. 412.

FOOD AND DRUGS.—See Adulteration.

FORESHORE:—

1. Land by the sea—Accretion—Parcels in conveyance—"Situate on seashore"—"Bounded by seashore"—Meaning of "seashore"—Measurements and plans inconsistent with description—Falsa demonstratio—Hearsay evidence—Declaration in discharge of professional duty.—A conveyance of land described in the parcels as "situate on the seashore" and "bounded on the west by the seashore" passes all the land down to the foreshore—i.e., to the high-water mark of medium ordinary tides, notwithstanding that the plan on the deed shows a more restricted boundary which satisfies the measurements and contents given in the parcels.

The lord of a manor, of which the foreshore at B. was parcel, granted in 1864 two plots of land there to M. and H. respectively in fee. In each of the deeds the parcels described the plot as "situate on the seashore" and as "bounded on the west by the seashore," the northern, southern, and eastern boundaries being also named. The measurements from east to west and from north to south, and the contents correctly calculated from those measurements, were given, and agreed exactly with a rectangular figure representing the plot in a plan drawn on the deed, three sides of the figure corresponding with the north, south, and east boundaries named. The plan also showed a wavy line marked "sea coast," between which and the fourth or west side of the figure was a strip of land a few yards wide. It was proved that in 1864 the sea had sometimes covered this strip, and occasionally even washed over the plots as they were marked on the plans. Also, that the distance between the lines of high water of ordinary spring tides and ordinary medium tides was about 100 yards, but the position in 1864 of neither of these high-water marks could now be ascertained. Since then the sea had gradually receded, leaving considerable accretion to the land. In an action by successors in title of the grantees against successors in title of the grantor to ascertain the true western boundary of plaintiff's land,

Held, that the word "seashore" was used in the deeds as equivalent to "foreshore," and as meaning that space, primâ facie, vested in the Crown, of which the landward limit was the line of medium high tide between the springs and the neaps; that the deeds thus contained an adequate description of what was intended to pass by them, which was not vitiated by errors in dimensions or quantity nor by inaccuracies in the plans; that the western boundary at the date of the grant was, and still remained, the seashore; and that any accretion belonged to the plaintiffs.

Levels taken by a deceased surveyor under contract with a local board not admitted in evidence. —MELLOR v. WALMESLEY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 665.

2. Public right of bathing—Dedication—Lawful access to the foreshore—Private ownership of foreshore. —Although the public have the right of passage over the sea, including that part of it which is above the foreshore, and have primâ facie the right of fishery therein, yet when the foreshore is uncovered by the sea the public have not a general common law right to go upon it or to cross it for all purposes, and in particular have not the right to do so for the purpose of bathing therefrom in the sea. Nor does the fact of a person having lawful access to the foreshore give him the right of using it or crossing it for the purpose of bathing in the sea. The public cannot acquire by dedication from the owner of the foreshore the right to wander at will over it and down to the brink of the sea.—BRINCKMAN v. MATLEY, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 363; 73 L. J. Ch. 160; 90 L. T. 199.

FRAUD.—See Company, 24; Mortgage, 8; Probate, 8; Settled Land, 5; Solicitor, 7.

FRAUDS, STATUTE of:—

Interest in land—Memorandum in writing—29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4.—A wife verbally agreed with her husband that if he bought a certain house she would make him a present of it. The husband accordingly bought the house, and sued his wife to recover the amount of the purchase-money.

Held, that this was merely an agreement by the wife to pay her husband the amount of the purchase if he bought the house, and was not a contract for or concerning an interest in land within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and that therefore the action was maintainable though there was no memorandum or note of the contract in writing.—BOSTON v. BOSTON, C.A., 65; [1904] 1 K. B. 124; 73 L. J. K. B. 17; 89 L. T. 468.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:—

Unregistered society—Continuance impracticable—Dissolution—Jurisdiction to wind up.—Where there is a fund which belongs to a number or society of persons who have individually certain interests therein regulated either by a trust deed or by a body of rules, and especially where the fund is vested in a trustee upon trust for those persons, if the rules cannot be carried into effect modo et forma and the society continued without giving certain members more than they are entitled to as between themselves and the other members, the court has jurisdiction to interpose and wind up the society for the purpose of administering its funds and distributing them equitably among its members.

A fund was formed for the purpose of providing the workmen and others employed by a company with allowances during sickness or infirmity and pensions during old age. Rules concerning the membership of the society of those entitled to the fund were made, and from time to time altered, under which entrance fees were paid, the sums for allowances and for subscriptions were fixed, and provision was made that when members attained sixty-five years they should cease to contribute to the funds or to have any allowance for sickness, but they should become entitled to have a weekly allowance or pension for the remainder of their lives. Under these rules the society existed for nearly a century. The society was governed by a committee chiefly composed of the officials of the company. The company having ceased to employ workmen, and having practically ceased business, and no new members having for some years joined the society, it became impracticable to carry out the rules, and it was found that if the society continued the funds would become exhausted for the benefit of some members only. At a meeting of the members a majority, both of pensioners and non-pensioners, voted for a dissolution.

Held, that, under such circumstances, although the society was not a partnership, yet the court had jurisdiction to wind it up, and, not being able to do more justice by continuing it, would wind it up for the purpose of distributing its funds equitably among its members according to their respective interests therein under the rules.—LEAD CO.'S WORKMEN'S FUNDS SOCIETY, RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 571; [1904] 2 Ch. 196.

GAMING:—

1. Betting-houses—Advertisement—Reasonable construction — Place used for betting — Must suggest unlawful betting—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c 119), ss. 1, 7.—In order that the publication of an advertisement may be an offence within section 7 of the Betting Act, 1853, it is necessary that the advertisement on a reasonable construction of its words shall make it appear not merely that a place is used for betting, but that it is used for betting of one or other of the two kinds prohibited by section 1 of the Act—that is, betting with persons physically resorting to the place, or betting by receiving there money or some valuable thing as the consideration for a promise by the receiver to pay or transfer money or a valuable thing on the event of a horse-race, &c.—ASHLEY v. HAWKE, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 538.

2. Shop—Automatic machine—Game of chance or skill—Gaming House Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 38). —T., being the occupier of a tobacconist's shop, kept there an automatic machine by which a person, having put a penny in the slot, pulls a nob, and on releasing such nob the penny flies up into one of five compartments. If the penny goes into either of two compartments it is returned to the person using the machine; if it goes into either of the two others it is retained in the machine; but if it goes into the fifth he receives a ticket by which he can have a 3d. cigar or its value at his option.

It was established by evidence that dexterity could be acquired to some extent by the operator by practice, but the magistrate came to the conclusion that it was not proved that the chances were alike favourable to the appellant and the operator.

Held, that T. was properly convicted of permitting the shop to be used for the purpose of unlawful gaming, contrary to the Gaming House Act, 1854.—THOMPSON v. MASON, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 649.

3. Sweepstakes—Illegal lottery—Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 119), s. 2.—A beerhouse keeper arranged a sweepstakes on his premises and offered certain prizes, but the amount of these prizes did not equal the amount subscribed as entrance money.

Held, that this was an illegal lottery within the meaning of section 2 of the Gaming Act, 1802.—HARDWICK v. LANE, K.B.D., 591; [1904] 1 K. B. 204; 73 L. J. K. B. 96; 89 L. T. 630.

See also Bankruptcy, 15; Licensing Law, 6.

GARNISHEE.—See Bankruptcy.

GAS:—

1. Arrears of gas rent due by outgoing tenant—Purchase by incoming tenant of outgoing tenant's business and interest in premises—Right to recover from incoming tenant—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 16—Metropolis Gas Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125), s. 39—Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. xxiii.), s. 18.—Under the 18th section of the Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872, an incoming tenant who has purchased the goodwill of his predecessor and continues to carry on the business on the premises, but does not require a supply of gas, is not liable for arrears of gas rate due by the outgoing tenant. Should he require a supply for the premises himself, then the gas company may insist on payment of these arrears as a condition of such supply.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 565, [1903] 1 K. B. 593) reversed.

Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Mead, 45 L. J. M. C. 71, 24 W. R. Dig. 111, approved. — CANNON BREWERY CO. v. GAS LIGHT AND COKE CO., H.L., 657; [1904] A. C. 331.

2. Statutory maximum dividend—Payment free of income tax—Ashton Gas Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. clxxxvi.), ss. 16, 17—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), ss. 54, 60, Schedule A, Rule No. III. (3). —A gas company, which is precluded by statute from paying dividend in excess of a statutory maximum rate, cannot pay a dividend at that rate free of income tax.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ASHTON GAS CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 347; 73 L. J. Ch. 283; 90 L. T. 204.

3. Testing of gas—"Daily"—Inclusive of Sunday —Practice—Parties—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 181), s. 7—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), s. 34—Metropolis Gas Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125), s. 55—Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7).—By the South Metropolitan Gas Co.'s special Acts of 1869 and 1876, provision was made for the public testing of the quality of the gas supplied by them to consumers. The mode of testing and the locus and number of testing-places which were to be provided by the company, and to be under the control of the Metropolitan Board of Works, were to be prescribed by gas referees appointed by the Board of Trade, and "daily" testings were to be made by gas examiners appointed by the Metropolitan Board. Similar provisions were contained in the special Acts of the other metropolitan gas companies. By the Gas Companies Act of 1880, which was applicable to all the metropolitan gas companies, the provisions as to daily testing were (in effect) re-enacted; and by section 7 of that Act it was enacted that a gas examiner should at each testing-place make "daily" such number of testings as the gas referees should prescribe.

There was also a provision in the special Act of 1869 which was to be read with the Act of 1880 defining "day" as twenty-four hours, beginning at 9 o'clock in the forenoon of one day and ending at 9 o'clock in the forenoon of the next. Under these Acts the practice had been to test on week-days only. In an action brought by the London County Council (the representatives of the Metropolitan Board of Works) against the gas company, claiming a declaration that the gas examiners appointed by the council were entitled to test the gas on Sundays, and an injunction to restrain the defendant gas company from preventing the gas examiners having access to the testing-places on Sundays.

Held, that the true meaning of "daily" in the Act of 1880 read with the Act of 1869, with reference to the South Metropolitan Gas Co., was "every day," including Sundays, taking the day as commencing at 9 o'clock in the forenoon; that the practice of not testing on Sundays prevailing under similar provisions in previous Acts of Parliament from 1869 to 1880 was not sufficient to justify the court to construe the word "daily" in section 7 of the Act of 1880 with reference to that practice; and that the plaintiff council were entitled to the relief claimed by their action.

Held, also, that the London County Council, as the "controlling authority" under the Acts, was entitled to bring the action in its own name as plaintiff.

Held, further, that although section 34 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, imposed a penalty recoverable in a court of summary jurisdiction for a refusal by the gas company to give proper access to the testing stations, yet the jurisdiction of the superior courts to deal with the matter was preserved by virtue of section 55 of the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860.

Decision of Joyce, J. (ante, p. 45, [1903] 2 Ch. 532), affirmed. — LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SOUTH METROPOLITAN GAS CO., C.A., 161; [1904] 1 Ch. 76; 73 L. J. Ch. 136; 89 L. T. 618.

GOODWILL:—

Sale of business with goodwill—Vendor interested in new business—Solicitation of old customers who have also become customers of the new business.—The vendor of an interest in a business which with the goodwill thereof had been sold by him to a company solicited on behalf of a competing business in which he was interested customers of the old business, who were also customers of the competing business.

Held, that, on the rule laid down in Trego v. Hunt, 73 L. T. Rep. 514, [1896] A. C. 7, the vendor must be restrained by injunction from soliciting the customers of the business which he had sold, whether or not such customers were also customers of the competing business.—CURL v. WEBSTER, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 413; [1904] 1 Ch. 685; 73 L. J. Ch. 540; 90 L. T. 479.

See also Partnership, 1.

HABEAS CORPUS:—

Jurisdiction—Person to whom directed out of jurisdiction—Power to issue writ.—The court has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus directed to a person who is at the time out of the jurisdiction.

Ex parte Wyatt, 5 Dowl. 389, explained and distinguished.—REX v. PINCKNEY, C.A., 338; [1904] 2 K. B. 84; 73 L. J. K. B. 475; 90 L. T. 468.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Diversion, proceedings for—Resolution of district council to request justices to view—Period for which notice must be fixed at ends of highway—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 84, 85.—In proceedings for the diversion of a highway under section 85 of the Highway Act, 1835, it is essential to the validity of a certificate of justices under that section that the notice of proposed diversion, which is thereby required to be affixed at each end of the highway proposed to be diverted, should be first so affixed at such a date as to leave a period of twenty-eight days between the date of the affixing and the date of the issue of the certificate.

A resolution of a district council under section 84 of the Highway Act, 1835, directing their surveyor to apply to two justices to view a highway which it is proposed to divert, it is not exhausted by the fact that the first two justices applied to, having viewed, refuse to certify that the proposed new highway is nearer or more commodious; and a second set of justices to whom the surveyor applies have jurisdiction to issue a certificate without any fresh resolution of the council in that behalf.—REX v. KENT JUSTICES, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 349.

2. Local authority—Road not safe for traffic—Misfeasance—Liability.—The appellants, who were both the sanitary and the highway authority, dug a trench along a road under their control for the purpose of laying a sewer. When the work was completed they filled in the trench and opened the road for traffic. About a week afterwards the respondent was driving along the road in a cab at night. The driver found that the part of the road where the trench had been opened was soft, and crossed on to the other side, and ran into a heap of rubbish, with the result that the cab was overturned and the respondent was injured. The rubbish had been wrongfully deposited in the road without the permission of the appellants, but they knew that it was there, and had not lighted or fenced it. The jury found that the part of the road where the trench had been opened had been properly filled in, but had been rendered soft by subsequent rain, and was dangerous to traffic at the time of the accident.

Held, that the appellants were liable for the injury. Judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.—SHOREDITCH CORPORATION v. BULL, H.L.; 90 L. T. 210.

3. Locomotive—Traction engine—Nuisance—Interim injunction—Locomotive Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 13—Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 6.—In an action by the Attorney-General, on the relation of a county council, for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using a traction engine upon a road in such a way as to cause a public nuisance, Held, that nothing in the Locomotives Act, 1898, had effected the prohibition in section 13 of the Locomotive Act, 1861, against causing a nuisance by the user upon a highway of a locomotive engine; and that it was no answer to an application for an interim injunction that the damage to the road would not have happened but for the neglect of the county council to keep it in a proper state of repair.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND MONMOUTHSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. SCOTT, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 404; 73 L. J. K. B. 196; 89 L. T. 726.

4. Repair—Extraordinary traffic—Extraordinary expenses for repairs—Haulage of timber over roads—Timber the natural produce of land—Period of limitation for recovery of expenses—"Particular work extending over long period"—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23—Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 12, sub-section 1 (b).—The defendants for a period extending over two years bought from the owner of an estate a large quantity of timber which was felled on the estate, and the timber was hauled by the defendants to the railway station over two roads for a distance of between two and three miles on each road, the haulage being done partly by horses and partly by a traction engine. The quantity of timber so hauled was about 1,500 tons, and the felling and hauling were done under several separate contracts extending over the two years. During this period the traffic of the defendants over the roads was unusual traffic, did unusual damage to the roads, and caused unusual expenses in repairing the roads, which were constructed to bear ordinary country traffic, usually agricultural traffic.

In an action brought by the highway authority to recover the expenses of repairing the roads, as being "extraordinary expenses" incurred by them in consequence of the "extraordinary traffic" within section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, the defendants alleged that the timber was the natural produce of the land and that the carting of such produce to the railway station was ordinary traffic and an ordinary user of the road.

Held, that, having regard to the total weight carried, the frequency of the loads and the means by which it was carried, the traffic was "extraordinary traffic" within the meaning of section 23, and the fact that the timber was the natural produce of the land did not, under the circumstances, prevent the traffic from being "extraordinary," or the expenses from being "extraordinary expenses," which the highway authority were entitled to recover.

Held, further, that the work was not a "particular work extending over a long period" within the meaning of section 12, sub-section 1 (b), of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and that therefore the sub-section did not give the highway authority the right to bring their action for the recovery of the whole of the expenses within six months after the completion of the work, and consequently that by the sub-section their claim was barred for any expenses incurred more than twelve months before the commencement of the action.—NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. GREEN, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 451.

5. Repair—General district rate—Alleged exemption by reason of liability to repair ratione tenuræ—Evidence not forthcoming that in 1835 predecessor in title was "legally exempt"—Highway Act, 1835 (5 &

6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 33—Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 210, 211, 269.—Where a general district rate is levied and the owner of property assessed thereto claims exemption from so much of the rate as relates to the cost of the repair of a highway, under section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, he must not only prove that he or his predecessors in title had, previous to 1835, been under liability to repair ratione tenuræ, but must also prove the fact of non-payment of rates or other circumstances giving rise to the presumption of the existence of the exemption claimed.—FERRAND v. BINGLEY URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D., 77; [1903] 2 K. B. 445; 72 L. J. K. B. 734; 89 L. T. 333.

6. Road of varying width—Roadside strip—Public right—Disuse no deprivation of right.—Although a highway varies in width as measured between the fences, nevertheless the public right of passage or way, primâ facie, unless there be evidence to the contrary, extends to the whole space between the fences, and is not limited to that portion which may be metalled or kept in order for the more convenient use of carriages and foot passengers.—HARVEY v. TRURO DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 262; [1903] 2 Ch. 638; 72 L. J. Ch. 705; 89 L. T. 90.

7. Wilful obstruction—No obstruction in fact—Truck in street for purpose of cleaning house—Purpose, time, and space reasonable—Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 54.—A truck, 6ft. long by 2ft. 8in. wide, containing an apparatus for removing dust from houses, was placed by D. in a highway 30ft. wide for some hours while the dust was being removed from a certain house. There was no evidence that anyone was incommoded or that anyone was prevented from passing along the highway. It was found as a fact that the business, purpose, and time selected were reasonable, and that neither the time nor the space occupied were excessive, but that the system of cleaning was not necessary to the ordinary comfort or exigency of life and was still in the experimental stage, and that the noise of the apparatus and the collection of sightseers might cause discomfort or inconvenience to the occupiers of houses and people using the street.

Held, that there was no evidence of wilful obstruction within section 54 (6) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839.—DUNN v. HOLT, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 577.

See also Crown, 2.

HOUSE OF LORDS:—

1. Practice—Discharge of judgment by consent.—Where upon an appeal to the House of Lords the respondent petitions that the judgment of the court below should be discharged and the case sent back for trial the consent of both parties to that course must be brought before the House itself.—HANNAH v. HUNTER, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 379.

2. Practice—Reversal—Point not argued.—The defendants in an action relating to a piece of ground, and which involved questions of encroachment, right to the land, title to sue, and possession, appealed to the House of Lords against all the interlocutors of the Courts below. At the hearing in the House ([1904] A. C. 73), one only of these questions was argued by the defendants, and the appeal was allowed.

Held, by the Appeal Committee, that the defendants were not entitled to an order for the reversal generally of the interlocutors appealed from, but only for the reversal of the interlocutors so far as they related to the question raised in the House.—MONTGOMERIE & CO. v. WALLACE-JAMES (No. 2), H.L.; [1904] A. C. 214.

HUSBAND AND WIFE:—

1. Desertion—Condonation—Second separation—Summary jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), ss. 4, 7.—Where an offence has been committed which primâ facie entitles a married woman to an order under section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and the offence has been condoned by the wife, the effect of such condonation depends upon the common law and not upon any section of that Act.

A married woman issued a summons against her husband complaining of his desertion. The hearing of the summons was adjourned by the justices before whom it came, and before the resumed hearing the wife resumed cohabitation with her husband. She subsequently left him—this also before the resumed hearing—and the justices at the hearing granted her an order for separation and an allowance for maintenance.

Held, the order must be discharged since the wife had put an end to the original cause of complaint by the resumption of cohabitation, and that the justices had nothing to adjudicate upon at the date of the adjourned hearing when the order was made.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 145; 73 L. J. P. 31; 90 L. T. 174.

2. "Desertion"—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), ss. 4, 5 (a)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 27, 31—Misconduct, on part of complainant, short of a matrimonial offence—Ground for cessation of cohabitation—Husband and wife.—"Desertion" under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1897, means, and is to be interpreted and dealt with as meaning, the same as desertion under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, save that no period is specified as requisite to constitute the offence.—FROWD v. FROWD, K.B.D.; [1904] P. 177; 73 L. J. P. 60; 90 L. T. 175.

3. Separation deed—Construction—Settlement—Trust for wife and children on separation—Resumption of cohabitation—Continuing validity.—A deed made in contemplation of the separation of a husband and wife which assigns property of the husband to a trustee upon trusts for the benefit of the wife and children is a good voluntary settlement, and though caused by the contemplated separation, is not put an end to by the reconciliation and subsequent resumption of cohabitation of the husband and wife.—SPARK'S TRUST, RE, MASSEY v. SPARK, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 426; [1904] 1 Ch. 451; 73 L. J. Ch. 259; 90 L. T. 54.

4. Separation deed—Construction—Son to remain under "tutelage or care" of wife—Allowance to wife for the son's maintenance—Education of son at Christ's Hospital—Liability of husband to continue the allowance.—By a covenant in a separation deed the husband agreed to pay the wife a weekly sum for her sole and separate use, and also a further weekly sum so long as their son should remain under the age of twenty-one and should reside with or under the tutelage or care of the wife, for and towards the support, maintenance, board, lodging, clothing, and education of the son; and the wife covenanted that out of this further sum, and without any further assistance from the husband, she would support, maintain, board, lodge, clothe, and educate the son in a suitable manner, and would indemnify the husband from all liability on account thereof.

Afterwards the son obtained admission to Christ's Hospital, where he was maintained and educated at very small expense to his mother.

Under an originating summons an order was made by consent that the son should spend half his holidays with his father and half with his mother.

Held, reversing the decision of Wright, J., that the husband was not relieved under those circumstances from continuing to pay to the wife the weekly sum covenanted by him to be paid so long as their son should remain under the age of twenty-one, and should reside with or under the tutelage and care of the wife.—ROWELL v. ROWELL, C.A.; 89 L. T. 288.

See also Legitimacy, 1; Poor Law, 2.

INCOME TAX.—See Inland Revenue.

INJUNCTION:—

Slander of title to goods—Damage direct result and imminent—Damage not accrued—Letters patent—An injunction will lie at the instance of legal or equitable owners of letters patent to restrain the publication of a libel or slander of title, if the defamation is in fact a libel or slander of title, where no damage has actually accrued, provided that damage is imminent and is the natural and direct result likely to follow.—DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. MAISON TALBOT, K.B.D., 254.

See also Easement, 2; Nuisance, 1-3; Partnership, 3, 4; Receiver, 3; Street, 1.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Estate duty—Exemption—Settlement of personal property—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 21, sub-section 1.—By the Finance Act, 1894, s. 21, sub-section 1, "Estate duty shall not be payable on the death of a deceased person in respect of personal property settled by a will or disposition made by a person dying before the commencement of this part of the Act, in respect of which property" probate duty (among other specified duties) "has been paid."

Under the will of a testator who died in 1849, his residuary personal estate became vested in trustees upon trust to invest it in land and to hold the same in trust for two persons in succession for life, with remainder to the defendant in tail male. Probate duty was paid on the testator's personalty. On the death of the second tenant for life in 1900, estate duty was claimed in respect of the land, then subject to the trusts of the will, which represented the residuary personal estate of the testator.

Held, that estate duty was payable; that section 21, sub-section 1, did not apply, because at the date of the death in respect of which estate duty was claimed the settled property was not personal property.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. EARL OF LONDESBOROUGH, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 749; 73 L. J. K. B. 503.

2. Estate duty—Gift inter vivos—Death of donor within twelve months—Release of donor from prior covenant for payment of gift after death—Liability of gift to estate duty—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (c)—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s 38, sub-section 2 (a)—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 7), s. 11, sub-section 1.—In 1892 a person covenanted with trustees that within three months after her death her executors should pay the sum of £5,000, free of all duties and deductions, to the trustees upon trust for a certain charity. Some eight years afterwards the donor, with the object of giving the sum in her lifetime, executed another deed by which she covenanted to pay the £5,000 at once, and by this deed she, her executors, and estate, were relieved from payment of the £5,000 under the former deed. The £5,000 was paid over, and the donor died within twelve months from the execution of the deed and the payment. Upon her death the Crown claimed estate duty upon this sum of £5,000.

Held, that the payment of the £5,000 was "an immediate gift inter vivos," within the meaning of section 38, sub-section 2 (a), of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881; that it was none the less a gift because there was a release of the donor and her estate from the obligation under the prior deed, and that, as the donor died within twelve months from the making of the gift, estate duty was payable under section 2, sub-section 1 (c), of the Finance Act, 1894. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. VISCOUNT COBHAM, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 816.

3. Estate duty—Mortgage by tenant for life and remainderman—Indemnity to tenant for life—Property passing on death of tenant for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2, 7.—The tenant for life of settled lands joined with the remainderman in creating a mortgage on the lands.

The loan secured by the mortgage was entirely for the benefit of the remainderman, and the tenant for life did not covenant to pay either the mortgage debt or the interest on it.

By an indenture of even date with the mortgage, and made between the remainderman and the tenant for life, the former covenanted to indemnify the latter against any loss of profits on the settled lands, and against any expenses or charges in respect of the mortgage, and assigned certain securities and charges on other lands as security for the performance of such covenants. The tenant for life was in fact kept wholly indemnified during her life.

Held, reversing the judgment of the court below, that on the death of the tenant for life the estate duty should be assessed upon the whole value of the settled lands, and not upon the value after deducting the amount of the mortgage debt.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LORD MONTAGU, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 316; 73 L. J. K. B. 707; 90 L. T. 726.

4. Estate duty—Property deemed to pass on death—Interest provided by deceased—Policy of life insurance—Marriage settlement—Policy on life of deceased settled by father of deceased—Insurable interest—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (d).—On the marriage of C. P. a settlement was made of his fortune. By the deed of settlement it was witnessed (inter alia) that the father of C. P., who had some years previously effected a policy of insurance in his own name on the life of C. P., assigned the policy to the trustees of the settlement with the approbation of C. P. On the death of C. P. the insurance company paid the policy-money to the trustees. The Crown claimed estate duty on the policy-money under section 2, sub-section 1 (d), of the Finance Act, 1894, as on an "interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person."

Held, that estate duty was not payable, for the policy was not provided by the deceased within the meaning of sub-section 1 (d).

Held, also, that the want of insurable interest on the part of the father would not have prevented estate duty being payable.

Polices of insurance are within sub-section 1 (d) of section 2 of the Finance Act, 1894, as well as within sub-section 1 (c).

Judgment of Ridley, J. (51 W. R. 572, [1903] 2 2 K. B. 64), reversed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v.

MURRAY, C.A., 258; [1904] 1 K. B. 165; 89 L. T. 710.

5. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Precatory trust—Letter with wishes of testator—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (1) (c), 5 (1).—N. C., by his will, dated the 13th of December, 1901, devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects of every description to his brother, C. T. C., absolutely, and he appointed his said brother, H. J. M., and C. G. executors and trustees of his will.

On the 11th of January, 1902, N. C. signed a document or letter (which has not been admitted to probate) which was headed: "Instructions to my executors Crawford, Morgan, and Gasquet."

A copy of this document was sent to C. T. C., who, on the 14th of January, 1902, wrote to C. G. a letter in which he said: "All I wish to say now is that every wish expressed by my brother shall be carried out to the very fullest extent so far as I am concerned, and as far as all we three executors are concerned, for his wishes are sacred, every word."

The effect of this letter was communicated to N. C.

N. C. died on the 18th of February, 1902, and his will was proved by all the executors, and estate duty and legacy duty was paid on his estate, including sums given or settled by the testator within twelve months of his death.

C. T. C. took possession as beneficial owner of the residuary personal estate and of the freehold and leasehold estate of N. C., and he made on the 13th of May, 1902 (within twelve months next before his death), a settlement of £5,000 on each of his four nephews and neice. C. T. C. also gave and paid other sums to various persons in accordance with the instructions in the letter of the 11th of January, 1902.

C. T. C. died on the 13th of December, 1902.

Held, that no trust was created, and that the settlement of £5,000 so made was a gift made by C. T. C. within twelve months of his death, and so estate duty and settlement estate duty were payable in respect thereof.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CHAMBERLAIN, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 581.

6. Estate duty—Succession duty—Will charging residue with duties payable on testator's death on property of which he was tenant for life—Succession duty on proceeds of sale of timber cut by succeeding tenant for life—Heirlooms of national interest—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 20—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), s. 23.—By his will, dated in 1900, a testator, who died in 1901, directed the trustees to pay out of the residuary proceeds of his estate (1) so much of the estate duty and other death duties which under the Finance Act, 1894, or any amending statute, should become payable upon or by reason of his death in respect of all the estates and property of which he should immediately before his death be tenant for life under a certain will or resettlement as the capital moneys and investments subject thereto should be insufficient to pay; and (2) all such succession duty as should become payable upon his death in respect of the same estates and property.

Held, that, as to the duty in respect of the sale of certain timber, the provision of the will was applicable to duty payable in respect of a succession on the death of the testator, which duty was payable out of his residuary estate.

Held, also, that, as to certain heirlooms of national interest, the duty did not become payable upon the death of the testator, and would not until the happening of the event mentioned in section 20 of the Finance Act, 1896.—LECONFIELD, RE, WYNDHAM v. LECONFIELD, C.A.; 90 L. T. 399.

7. Excise—Carriage—Motor bicycle—Necessity of excise licence for—"Carriage drawn or propelled upon road by any mechanical power"—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 4.—A motor bicycle is, within the meaning of section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, a "carriage" for which a licence is required, as being a carriage drawn or propelled upon a road by mechanical power.—O'DONOGHUE v. MOON, K.B D.; 90 L. T. 843.

7A. Excise—Grogging spirit casks—Extracting spirit from wood of casks—Spirit exuding from the wood—Liability—Finance Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 10), s. 4, sub-section 1 (b).—By the Finance Act, 1898, s. 4, sub-section 1, it is provided that "a person shall not (a) subject any cask to any process for the purpose of extracting any spirits absorbed in the wood thereof; or (b) have on his premises any cask which is being subjected to any such process, or any spirits extracted from the wood of any cask."

Held, the words "process for the purpose of extracting" do not include a natural exudation, and that, therefore, the section does not include, as an offence, the innocent possession of spirits which have exuded without any active or permissive process to lead to such exudation.—ROBINSON v. DIXON, K.B.D., 8; [1903] 2 K. B. 701; 72 L. J. K. B. 717; 78 L. T. 132.

8. Income tax—Business of bank—Purchase by another bank—Succeeding to business—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D, cases 1 and 2, r. 4.—The National Provincial Bank of England, whose head office was in London, acquired by purchase the premises and business of the County of Stafford Bank, which was carried on at Wolverhampton. After the purchase the business of the Stafford Bank was carried on as usual, but for the benefit and the expense of the purchasing bank until a certain date, when the premises were opened as the Wolverhampton branch of the purchasing bank, who had never previously carried on any business at Wolverhampton. The manager and the staff of the Stafford bank were taken over by the purchasing bank, but none of the books of the Stafford bank were taken over except that the ledgers were continued in use until the end of the current year. All new cheque-books and new pass-books were issued in the name of the purchasing bank. From the date of the purchase the profits, if any, of the Wolverhampton branch of the purchasing bank were merged in, and formed part of the general profits of the bank, without any distinction as to source or origin of profit, and there were no means of ascertaining whether there were any profits or the proportion of increase or decrease in the profits, if any, of the bank which had arisen from the business purchased. Assessments to income tax were made on the purchasing bank's returns for the three years following the date of the purchase, based on the average of the profits of the whole business for the three preceding years respectively, and an additional assessment was made upon them, based upon the assumed profits of the the Stafford bank during those three years, under section 100, Schedule D, cases 1 and 2, r. 4, of the Income Tax Act, 1842.

Held, that the purchasing bank had succeeded to the business of the Stafford bank, and that the additional assessment was rightly made.

Judgment of Ridley, J. ([1903] 2 K. B. 249, 51 W. R. Dig. 67), reversed.—BELL v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, C.A., 406; [1904] 1 K. B. 149; 73 L. J. K. B. 142; 90 L. T. 2.

9. Income tax — Company — Residence—"Person residing in the United Kingdom"—Company registered abroad—Head office and directing power in United Kingdom—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—A company registered abroad, but having its head office in London, where the meetings of the directors are held and where the directing and controlling power is exercised, is assessable to income tax on the whole of its profits as "a person residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of section 2, Schedule D, of the Income Tax Act, 1853.—GOERZ & Co. v. BELL, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 136; 73 L. J. K. B. 448; 90 L. T. 675.

10. Income tax—Deductions—Premium on policy of life insurance—Advance by insurance company of half premium—Premium partly paid with money borrowed from insurer at interest and charged on policy—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 54, Schedules D and E.—By the terms of a policy of life assurance it was provided that, if the assured should so desire, a part of the premium—viz., £33, should in each year be advanced by the insurance company, and that the money so advanced should, with interest thereon, be a first charge on the policy. The premium was expressed to be for £66 17*s.* 6d. The assured paid in respect of premium each year £33 17*s.* 6d., and obtained a receipt for £66 17*s.* 6d., the balance of £33 being advanced as provided for by the policy.

Held, that, under section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, the assured was not entitled to deduct from his assessment to income tax the sum of £66 17*s.* 6d., as the amount of the annual premium paid by him for life insurance, but only £33 17*s.* 6d.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (Lord James of Hereford dissenting) (51 W. R. 490, [1903] 1 K. B. 514) affirmed.—HUNTER v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 593; [1904] A. C. 161; 73 L. J. K. B. 381; 90 L. T. 325.

11. Income tax—Master at school—Provident fund scheme—Additional allowance—Allowance to go to fund—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 146, Schedule E.—Under a provident fund scheme at D. College the following increases of salaries came into operation: (a) Assistant masters having not less than five, but less than fifteen years' service, an increase of 5 per cent.; (b) those having fifteen years and over, 7½ per cent.; (c) a further addition equal to those sums subject to certain conditions.

The whole of these increases were not to be paid to the masters, but were to be accumulated at compound interest to form the fund.

The conditions above referred to were that masters of less than ten years' service who resigned or ceased to belong to the college from any other cause than ill-health were to be entitled to increase (a) and the accumulations thereof, but not to increase (c); if the master retired from ill-health, the governors in addition to (a) might grant him (c); and in the event of death both (a) and (c) were to be paid to his legal representative. Masters of over ten years' service were to receive on retirement before the age of sixty the total sum due under (a) or (b) and (c) with accumulations, and in the case of death the same was to be paid to his legal representative. Masters removed for misconduct or, having been guilty of misconduct, allowed to resign were not entitled to (c).

Held, that these increases of salary were sums really added to the salary, and were assessable to income tax under section 146, Schedule E, of the Income Tax Act, 1842.—SMYTH v. STRETTON, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 756.

12. Inhabited house duty—Unoccupied furnished house—House Tax Act, 1803 (43 Geo. 3, c. 161)—House Tax Act, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 55)—House Tax Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 7)—House Tax Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36).—The tenant of a dwelling-house which is kept furnished, although during the year of assessment it has not been used for the purposes of residence and no one has slept or dwelt therein, is liable to inhabited house duty under the House Tax Act, 1851.—SMITH v. DAUNEY, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 186; 73 L. J. K. B. 646; 90 L. T. 760.

13. Land tax—Public underground lavatories provided and maintained by sanitary authority—Land Tax Act, 1797 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5), s. 4—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 44, 45.—Public underground lavatories provided and maintained by a sanitary authority under the powers conferred upon them by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, are not rateable in respect of land tax, as the sanitary authority does not acquire such rights of ownership in the lavatories as to render them liable to be charged, but only such an interest as is necessary to enable them to fulfil their public duties in respect of the lavatories.—WESTMINSTER CORPORATION v. JOHNSON, K.B.D., 350; [1904] 1 K. B. 19; 73 L. J. K. B. 8; 89 L. T. 562.

14. Legacy duty—Incidence.—The assignment of a specified portion of a mortgage debt belonging to the residuary personal estate of a testator, and upon which estate legacy duty is payable, does not free such portion of its proportionate liability for legacy duty. In such a case the legacy duty is not an incumbrance covered by the assignor's covenant for further assurance.—REPINGTON, RE, WODEHOUSE v. SCOBELL, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 522; [1904] 1 Ch. 811; 73 L. J. Ch. 533; 90 L. T. 663.

15. Stamp—Ad valorem duty—Acknowledgment indorsed on instrument that all the debenture stock secured thereby had been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied—Whether such receipt is stampable as a discharge—Things which in themselves operate to end security—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 12, Schedule I., voce Mortgage, sub-head 5.—The following acknowledgment was indorsed on an instrument presented to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue on behalf of the appellants for their opinion as to the stamp duty (if any) with which the instrument was chargeable: "We, the within-named Edward Firth, John Bradley Firth, and Samuel Roberts do hereby acknowledge all the debenture stock secured by the within-written indenture and all interest thereon has been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied." By Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, voce "Mortgage," sub-head 5, a reconveyance, release, discharge, or renunciation of any such security as aforesaid, or of the benefit thereof, or of the money secured, is liable to ad valorem stamp duty. The commissioners held that the instrument was chargeable under the above schedule.

Held, allowing the appeal, that the word "discharge," as well as the other words, pointed to an instrument that put an end to a security, and did not include a receipt indorsed on a deed acknowledging that the capital sum and interest secured by the deed had been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied.—FIRTH v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D., 622; [1904] 2 K. B. 205; 73 L. J. K. B. 632.

16. Stamp duty — Company — Consolidation of debenture stock—Issue of loan capital—Finance Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), s. 8.—By a local and private Act passed in 1900, the debenture stocks which had been issued by the defendant company, bearing interest at 3 per cent., 4 per cent., and 4½ per cent., were extinguished, and there was created in lieu thereof a new debenture stock bearing interest at 3 per cent. Each stockholder received such an amount of the new stock as would yield him the same amount of interest as had been payable in respect of the stock previously held by him. The total amount of the debenture stocks existing before the Act was £411,852. The amount of the new debenture stock was £529,136.

Held, that the defendant company were liable to pay the stamp duty imposed by section 8 of the Finance Act, 1899, on any company who "propose to issue any loan capital."—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. REGENT'S CANAL AND DOCK CO., C.A., 211; [1904] 1 K. B. 263; 73 L. J. K. B. 50.

17. Stamp duty—Company—English debenture—Colonial debenture—Substituted security—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule, "Marketable security" (3) (4); s. 82.—A colonial company was formed for the purpose of taking over the assets and liabilities of an English company, and by agreement the holders of debentures in the English company delivered them up, and accepted in lieu thereof debentures of an equivalent amount in the colonial company.

Held, that these debentures in the colonial company were not "given in substitution for a like security" within the Stamp Act, 1891, Schedule, "Marketable security" (4). — MOUNT LYELL MINING CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 757; 73 L. J. K. B. 371; 90 L. T. 579.

18. Stamp duty — Conveyance on sale — Person authorized by statute to purchase property—Purchase of realty and chattels—Finance Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 16), s. 12.—By section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, where "any property" is purchased under statutory authority, a duly stamped instrument of conveyance of the property must be produced to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

Held, that the ad valorem duty was payable on personal as well as real property purchased under the special statutory powers.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (50 W. R. 161, [1902] 1 K. B. 403) affirmed.—EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 577; [1904] A. C. 155; 73 L. J. K. B. 259; 90 L. T. 99.

19. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Sale to company—Consideration—Annual payments out of profits —Amount varying with paid-up capital—Conveyance "subject contingently to the payment of money"— "Money payable periodically"—Double contingency. —By a conveyance on sale a company sold its undertaking to another company. Part of the consideration for the sale consisted of annual sums payable by the purchasing company out of its annual profits. These annual sums were to be equal to 3 per cent. on the amount for the time being paid up on so much of the ordinary share capital of the purchasing company as should be for the time being issued, and were only payable after a dividend of 5 per cent. upon the same amount had been paid to the shareholders of the purchasing company.

Held, that the conveyance was not "subject contingently to the payment of money" within the meaning of section 57 of the Stamp Act, 1891; and that the amount of the consideration—being dependent upon a double contingency in that it varied, first, with the amount paid up on the capital issued, and, secondly, with the amount of profits earned—was too uncertain to make the conveyance chargeable with ad valorem duty. — UNDERGROUND ELECTRIC RAILWAYS CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 198; 73 L. J. K. B. 549.

20. Succession duty—Alienation of succession—Disentailing deed—Devise by alienee—Liability of devisee to duty on original succession—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2, 15.—A tenant for life of settled real estate and the tenant in tail in remainder, having executed a disentailing deed, joined in conveying a parcel of land, part of the estate, in fee to a purchaser. The purchaser devised the parcel of land to his wife, who devised it to their daughter, who paid succession duty in respect thereof on her mother's death. Subsequently the tenant for life died.

Held, that succession duty was payable by the daughter on the death of the tenant for life also.

Judgment of Ridley, J. ([1903] 2 K. B. 71, 51 W. R. Dig. 71), affirmed.

In re Cooper and Allen to Harlech, 25 W. R. 301, 4 Ch. D. 802, overruled.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NORTHUMBERLAND (DUKE), C.A. 518; [1904] 1 K. B. 762; 73 L. J. K. B. 418; 90 L. T. 630.

21. Tax on "male servant"—Apprentice—Lad apprenticed to be trained as riding groom—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 14), s. 19 (3).—By an indenture of apprenticeship the respondent agreed to teach B. to be a riding groom. The term of the contract was seven years. The respondent undertook to find B. in clothing, food and lodging, and to pay him certain wages, and B. undertook to obey all lawful orders given him by the respondent. B. was engaged for the greater portion of each day in the performance of duties which would, if he were merely engaged otherwise than under the said contract, render a licence necessary for him as a male servant. An information under section 19, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869, was preferred by the appellant against the respondent for employing B. as a male servant without taking out a licence. The magistrates dismissed the information, being of opinion that the contract was one of apprenticeship, and that B. was an apprentice and not a male servant within the Act.

Held, that the decision of the magistrates was right, and that the words of the Act were not sufficient to bring the case within it.—HORAN v. HAYHOE, K.B.D., 231; [1904] 1 K. B. 288; 73 L. J. K. B. 133; 90 L. T. 12.

INSURANCE:—

1. Fire—Lloyd's policy—"Subject to average"— No average clause attached—Other policies on zones— Applying policies rateably—9 Geo. 4, c. 13, s. 3.—A timber yard, as a whole, was insured by a Lloyd's policy for £11,450 and in three zones by various fire insurance companies for £25,500. On zone B there was only one company's policy for £3,000. The value in the three zones was £36,500—viz., £1,940 in zone A, £13,260 in B, and £21,300 in C; and £12,850—viz., £1,900 in zone A, £9,400 in B, and £1,550 in C—was the value of the timber burnt.

The Lloyd's policy was expressed to be "subject to average," but had no average clause attached.

Held, that the system of marshalling the policies, so as to apply the Lloyd's policy and the company's policy for £3,000 rateably to the loss in zone B, and the then unexhausted portion of the Lloyd's rateably with the other policies on zones C and A respectively, could not be introduced by the words "subject to average" in a Lloyd's policy. On this policy the plaintiffs, being insured on only a portion of the goods at risk, must be considered as being their own insurers for the difference, and must bear a rateable share of the loss accordingly.

The underwriters were liable for $\frac{11150}{21150}$ of £12,850.

Whether the average clause is attached to a Lloyd's policy or not, if the policy is expressed to be "subject to average," it is according to the usage of Lloyd's the same as if the clause were attached.—ACME WOOD FLOORING CO. v. MARTEN, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 313.

2. Life—Illegal contract—Want of insurable interest—Action to recover premiums paid—Life Assurance Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 48), ss. 1, 2.—The agent of an insurance company, acting in good faith and believing what he said to be true, induced the plaintiff to effect an insurance on his mother's life, and assured him that the insurance would be valid. The plaintiff in consequence of the agent's representation, effected such an insurance, and for some considerable time paid the premiums in respect of the policy. Subsequently, on hearing that the insurance was invalid, the plaintiff bought an action against the insurance company to recover back the premiums.

Held, assuming the illegality of the policy, that the parties were in pari delicto, and that the plaintiff could not recover back the premiums he had paid.

Decision of Divisional Court ([1903] 2 K. B. 92, 51 W. R. Dig. 73) reversed.—HARSE v. PEARL LIFE ASSURANCE CO., C.A., 457; [1904] 1 K. B. 558; 73 L. J. K. B. 273; 90 L. T. 245.

3. Life—Lapse of policy on failure of payment of premium—Subsequent payment—Conditional receipt by insurance company—Neglect of assured to read conditions of receipt—Duty of insurance company—Estoppel.—A policy of life insurance effected with an insurance company was expressed to be conditional upon the payment of the premiums each year within thirty days of their becoming due. The holder of the policy failed to pay a certain premium within thirty days of its becoming due. On his afterwards sending the money to the company they sent back to him a receipt upon a printed form which stated that the policy had lapsed and that the payment was accepted subject to certain conditions printed on the back of the receipt. He received this receipt but did not read it.

One of these conditions was that the person whose life was insured had been during the past twelve months in continuous good health and free from all disease; and he was in fact, and to his knowledge, suffering at that time from a disease of which he afterwards died. Until he died the subsequent premiums were punctually paid. On his death the company refused to pay the sum for which his life had been insured on the ground that the policy had lapsed, and the conditions of the receipt above-mentioned had not been complied with. In an action to recover the amount of the insurance money,

Held, that, as the policy had lapsed on account of the breach of its conditions, and the plaintiff had given no evidence of any conduct on the part of the company which would justify him in thinking that the policy had not lapsed, and would estop them from relying on the lapsing of the policy, he was not entitled to succeed in the action.—HANDLER v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION, C.A.; 90 L. T. 192.

4. Life—Undertaking not to commit suicide—Insurance for benefit of creditor—Executor suing as trustee for creditor.—An application for a policy was expressed to be "the basis and a part of a proposed" insurance contract, and the policy commenced by stating that "in consideration of the application . . . which is hereby made part of this contract," the company would insure the life subject to certain conditions. The application contained the following clause: "I also warrant and agree that I will not commit suicide whether sane or insane, during the period of one year from the date of the said contract," which was signed by the person proposing to have his life insured. During the period of one year the assured committed suicide during a fit of temporary insanity.

Held, that the breach of the undertaking not to commit suicide rendered the policy void. The undertaking was a limitation of the defendant's liability, and not a personal undertaking the breach of which might give the defendant a claim against the estate of the deceased person.—ELLINGER v. MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. OF NEW YORK, K.B.D., 366; [1904] 1 K. B. 832; 73 L. J. K B. 546; 90 L. T. 484.

5. Marine—Constructive total loss only—Sue and labour clause—Claim by underwriters for work and labour done, or as salvors—Common law—Maritime law.—A vessel was insured against total and/or constructive total loss only, and the policy contained the sue and labour clause. During the continuance of the policy the vessel was stranded and the crew left her. Before the insurers' representatives arrived to take charge of the vessel considerable damage was done by looting. The insurers, through a contractor on the no cure no pay system, raised the vessel and brought her into port. The insurers claimed for an award as salvors or for an amount for work and labour done.

Held, that there was no constructive total loss, and that the underwriters were not entitled to an award as salvors, and that there was no common law right to recover.

The Pickwick, 16 Jurist 669, distinguished.—CRONIN v. STANIER, K.B.D., 75; [1904] 1 K. B. 87; 73 L. J. K. B. 102.

6. Marine—Deck cargo—River and canal—Rhine steamers—Dutch code—Liability of underwriters.—The rule which exempts underwriters from liability for loss of deck cargo does not apply to an inland voyage by canal or river plainly contemplated by a policy, on which voyage it is and has been the practice and usage to carry cargoes on deck.—APOLLINARIS CO. v. NORDDEUTSCHE INSURANCE CO., K.B D., 174; [1904] 1 K. B. 252; 73 L. J. K. B. 62; 89 L. T. 670.

7. Marine—Discovery—Discovery of ship's papers—Action by underwriters to recover money paid on fraudulent claim.—In an action brought by underwriters claiming repayment of sums obtained from them by the defendants by false and fraudulent claims under policies of marine insurance, and alleging a conspiracy to defraud,

Held, that the underwriters were entitled to the same full discovery as if they had been defendants being sued on the policies.—BOULTON v. HOULDER BROTHERS, C.A., 388; [1904] 1 K. B. 784; 73 L. J. K. B. 493; 90 L. T. 621.

8. Marine—Policy on machinery of torpedo-boat destroyer—"Trials."—A policy of marine insurance upon the machinery of a torpedo-boat destroyer, which was being built for the Admiralty, was expressed to cover the following perils: "Fire in shops and on board on stocks trials and all marine risks to completion and acceptance by the Admiralty," and also "of the seas men-of-war fire . . . and of all other perils losses and misfortunes." Attached to the policy was a clause which contained the following words: "With leave to go on trial trips." During a trial the connecting-rod of the starboard engine broke, causing great damage.

Held, that "trials" did not denote a period during which the assured were to be insured against fire, but specified a particular peril insured against —viz., perils of trials; and that the damage which had occurred was covered by the policy.

Judgment of Kennedy, J. (51 W. R. 91), affirmed. —JACKSON v. MUMFORD, C.A., 342.

9. Marine—Property of alien enemy—Loss before commencement of war—Warranty free of seizure.—Gold, the property of a company registered under the laws of the South African Republic, was insured against "arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people" during transit from the mines to the United Kingdom subject to a warranty "free of capture, seizure, and detention, whether before or after declaration of war." During transit the gold was taken by the Republic on its own territory in anticipation of war with England and in accordance with the laws of the Republic.

Held, that there was a "seizure" of the gold within the meaning of the warranty, and that the insurers were not liable on the policy.—ROBINSON GOLD MINING CO. v. ALLIANCE INSURANCE CO., H.L.; [1904] A. C. 359.

10. Marine—Risk, duration of—"Thirty days in port after arrival"—Days, computation of.—A policy of insurance on ship was expressed to be "from Portland, O., by any route to Algoa Bay and for thirty days in port after arrival." The policy further described the risk as continuing until the ship "hath there moored at anchor in good safety." The ship arrived at Algoa Bay on the 2nd of August, and was moored in good safety at 11.30 a.m. on that day. She remained at Algoa Bay until she was lost by a peril insured against at 4.30 p.m. on the 1st of September.

Held, that the thirty days meant thirty consecutive periods of twenty-four hours each beginning at 11.30 a.m. on the 2nd of August, and that therefore the ship was lost after the insurance had ceased.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (51 W. R. 527, [1903] 2 K. B. 363), affirmed.—CORNFOOT v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CORPORATION, C.A., 49; [1904] 1 K. B. 40; 73 L. J. K. B. 22; 89 L. T. 490.

11. Marine—Subject-matter of insurance—Shipowner's liability to cargo-owner—Suing and labouring clause—Applicability.—A shipowner agreed to convey to South Africa a number of mules, valued at £40,000. There was no clause in the contract exempting him from liability for loss occasioned by the negligence of his servants. He accordingly effected an insurance with an underwriter at Lloyd's to protect himself against "liability of any kind" to the owners of the mules up to £20,000. The policy was in the printed form of an ordinary Lloyd's policy, and contained the usual suing and labouring clause. During the voyage the vessel stranded through the negligence of the shipowner's servants, and expenses were incurred by the shipowner in salving the mules. The shipowner therefore sought to recover the expenses thus incurred under the suing and labouring clause.

Held, that the suing and labouring clause was inapplicable, and was never intended to apply.

Judgment of Walton, J. (reported [1902] 2 K. B. 624), affirmed.—CUNARD STEAMSHIP CO. v. MARTEN, C.A., 39; [1903] 2 K. B. 511; 72 L. J. K. B. 754; 89 L. T. 152.

12. Marine—Time policy—General average—Contract of affreightment—Foreign statement—Belgian law.—A shipowner effected with underwriters a time policy of insurance on his ship containing the following clause: "General average payable according to foreign statement if so made up or York-Antwerp rules if in accordance with contract of affreightment." The shipowner sub-chartered the ship to third parties, and by the terms of that charter-party it was provided that the ship might carry a deck-load of timber, and that "in case of average the same to be settled according to York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, except that jettison of deck cargo (and the freight thereon) for the common safety shall be allowable as general average." The ship sailed for Antwerp, and in the course of the voyage it became necessary for the steamer's safety to jettison part of the deck cargo. The average statement was made up at Antwerp, and included jettisoned deck cargo and freight thereon. The shipowner paid the ship's contribution to general average. In an action by the shipowner to recover from the underwriters the amount of his contribution, Held, applying the principle laid down in Harris v. Scaramanga, 20 W. R. 777, that the parties having agreed that general average should be payable according to the foreign statement if so made up, and the terms of the contract of affreightment not being of a special and unusual character, which could not have been contemplated by the parties to the policy of insurance, the underwriters were liable to pay the shipowner the amount of his contribution, notwithstanding that, apart from the express agreement in the contract of affreightment, the Belgian law would not recognize jettisoned deck cargo and freight thereon as being the subject of a claim for general average.

Decision of Kennedy, J. (51 W. R. 318, [1901] 1 K. B. 109), affirmed.—DE HART v. COMPANIA ANONIMA DE SEGUROS AURORA, C.A., 36; [1903] 2 K. B. 503; 72 L. J. K. B. 818; 89 L. T. 154.

13. Marine—Voyage policy—Round voyage—Implied warranty of seaworthiness—Insufficiency of coal—Sacrifice of cargo and spars—Negligence clause—Breach of warranty covered by insurance.—There are only two kinds of insurance policies, "time policies" and "voyage policies," and a voyage policy does not lose its character because the voyage is of an intermediate nature instead of being between specified ports.

A steamship was insured for a round voyage from the United Kingdom to port or ports on the West Coast of South America and back again, with leave to call at any ports or places on the East Coast of South America. The perils insured against were of the sea, and the clauses annexed provided (inter alia) that the insurance should cover loss through the negligence of master, mariners, engineers, or pilots. The vessel started on one of the stages of the voyage with an insufficient supply of coal to carry her to the next coaling place, in consequence of which it became necessary to sacrifice part of the cargo, spars, and fittings.

Held, that the starting of the vessel on a stage of the voyage with an insufficient quantity of coal was a breach of the implied warranty of seaworthiness on the part of the shipowner.

The principle of The Vortigern, 47 W. R. 437, [1899] P. 140, applied.

Decision of Bigham, J. (51 W. R. 447, [1903] 1 K. B. 367), affirmed.—GREENOCK STEAMSHIP CO. v. MARITIME INSURANCE CO., C.A., 186; [1903] 2 K. B. 657; 72 L. J. K. B. 868; 89 L. T. 200.

See also Company, 15.

INTERPLEADER:—

Practice—Appeal—Summary decision at chambers—Ord. 57, rr. 9, 11—Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 17—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 1 (b); s. 5; Schedule.—Where upon an interpleader summons the judge decides the question under ord. 57, r. 9, without directing an issue or ordering a special case to be stated, there is no appeal from his decision, even with leave, the Judicature Act, 1894, not having modified or in any way altered section 17 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860.—VAN LAUN v. BARING, C.A., 59; [1903] 2 K. B. 277; 72 L. J. K. B. 756; 89 L. T. 120.

JUSTICES:—

1. Habitual drunkard—Proof of previous conviction—Register of convictions in court of summary jurisdiction—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 22—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 14—Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 18—Jurisdiction—Consent of accused to being dealt with summarily—Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60), s. 2, sub-section 1—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 6 (1).—The respondent was convicted at Bow-street police-court of one of the offences mentioned in the first schedule to the Inebriates Act, 1898, and the appellant requested the magistrate to make an order under section 6 (1) of the Licensing Act, 1902. The appellant tendered in evidence the register which was kept at the police-court, and called the gaoler for the purpose of proving that the respondent had been convicted of offences mentioned in the first schedule to the Inebriates Act, 1902, on three occasions within the preceding twelve months at that court.

Held, that the register of the minutes or memorandum of convictions of a court of summary jurisdiction, kept under section 22 of Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, by the clerk of the court, was sufficient evidence to enable the magistrate to to be satisfied of the three previous convictions mentioned in the register.

Held, further, that the consent of the respondent to be tried summarily under section 2 of the Inebriates Act, 1898, was necessary before the magistrate could make an order under section 6 (1) of the Licensing Act, 1902.—POLICE COMMISSIONER v. DONOVAN, K.B.D., 14; [1903] 1 K. B. 895; 72 L. J. K. B. 545; 88 L. T. 555.

2. Jurisdiction—Power of adjournment—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 16.—Where, on the hearing of a criminal information, the justices are equally divided in opinion they have power to adjourn the case for rehearing, and are not bound to dismiss the information.—BAGG v. COLQUHOUN, K.B.D., 494; [1904] 1 K. B. 554; 73 L. J. K. B. 272; 90 L. T. 386.

3. Married woman—Order for maintenance—Act of adultery—Discharge of order—Committal for non-payment of arrears—Appeal to Divisional Court—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), ss. 7, 9, 11.—An order for a weekly payment by a husband towards his wife's maintenance, under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, is ipso facto discharged upon proof before a court of summary jurisdiction that the wife has subsequently committed adultery even if the husband has been guilty of conduct conducing to the adultery, and even if no formal order of discharge be made by the court.

The order of the court of summary jurisdiction committing a husband to prison for non-payment of arrears alleged to be due to the wife is not an order in respect of which an appeal lies to the Probate Court, but an appeal lies by way of case stated to the King's Bench Division.—RUTHER v. RUTHER, K.B.D., 154; [1903] 2 K. B. 270; 72 L. J. K. B. 826.

4. Nuisance on premises—Complaint heard before three justices at petty sessions—Order signed by one justice only—Objection against order—Validity—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 14—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 96, 251.—An order was made by three justices at petty sessions under section 96 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring the appellant to abate a nuisance on his premises. The order as drawn up and served on the appellant was signed by one justice only.

Held (allowing the appeal), that the order as drawn up and served on the appellant ought to have been signed by two justices, as that was the form of the order indicated by section 96 of the Act of 1875, and having been signed by one justice only was bad.—WING v. EPSOM URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D., 461; [1904] 1 K. B. 798; 73 L. J. K. B. 389; 90 L. T. 543.

5. Petty sessions—County business—Borough business—County justices—Jurisdiction—Precedence of mayor.—The county justices for the petty sessional division of Highgate sat at Hornsey in petty sessions. The business of the court included an information against H. for an offence committed within the borough on a summons against H. signed by a county justice. The mayor of Hornsey claimed the right to take the chair.

Held, when a case has once been earmarked as county business or borough business by the issue of a proper summons to appear before the county or the borough tribunal, the county justices or the borough justices, as the case may be, have seisin of it, and the other body of justices, although having concurrent jurisdiction, cannot intercept the case. The business in this case was not borough business for the purpose of founding a claim for the mayor to take the chair. It was, in fact, ab initio and remained throughout, county business.—LAWSON v. REYNOLDS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 375; [1904] 1 Ch. 718; 73 L. J. Ch. 451; 90 L. T. 278.

6. Special petty sessions—Revision of jury list—Power to state a case—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 47), s. 33—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 13, sub-section 11.—Justices sitting in special petty sessions for the purpose of revising jury lists are not a court of summary jurisdiction, and have, therefore, no power to state a special case for the opinion of the court under section 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.—HOGMAIER v. WILLESDEN OVERSEERS, K.B.D., 654; [1904] 2 K. B. 316; 73 L. J. K. B. 638; 90 L. T. 683.

See also Licensing Law, 2-4; Public Authority, 2.

LAND TRANSFER ACTS.—See Administration, 6; Probate, 9; Vendor and Purchaser, 8.

LANDLORD AND TENANT:—

1. Affirmative and negative covenants—Covenant not to assign or sublet without lessor's consent—Proviso for re-entry on breach of any covenant on the lessee's part to be performed.—A lease of a house contained covenants by the lessee to pay rates, taxes, and repairs, and not to assign or underlet the premises without first obtaining the lessor's consent in writing, and it contained a proviso for re-entry that "if the lessee shall commit any breach of the covenants hereinbefore contained, and on his part to be performed, then the said lessor may re-enter upon the premises." The lessee underlet the premises without obtaining the lessor's consent.

Held, that the proviso for re-entry applied to breaches of negative as well as affirmative covenants, and that as there had been a breach of the covenant not to assign or underlet without the landlord's consent, a forfeiture had occurred, and the landlord was entitled to recover the possession of the house.

Decision of Wright, J. ([1903] 2 K. B. 241), reversed.—HARMAN v. AINSLIE, C.A., 615; [1904] 1 K. B. 698; 73 L. J. K. B. 539; 90 L. T. 624.

2. Covenant—Assignment of reversion—Liability of assignor on express covenants in lease—32 Hen. 8, c. 34, ss. 1, 2.—A lessor who has assigned his reversion remains liable upon his express covenants, running with the reversion, in a lease for years under seal.—STUART v. JOY, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 362; 73 L. J. K. B. 97; 90 L. T. 78.

3. Covenant — Restrictive covenant — Trade — Covenant not to let adjoining property for purposes of a particular trade—Meaning of term "artistic and heraldic stationer"—"Picture post-cards."—In 1901 the defendant T. demised to the plaintiff for twenty-one years premises in an arcade by an agreement containing a stipulation on the part of the plaintiff "not to carry on upon the premises any other trade or business than that of a dealer in pictures, prints, engravings, photographs, and articles of vertu, artistic and heraldic stationer, frame-maker, and dealer in photographic frames, artists' colours, and the accessories to said trade or business," and a stipulation on the part of the lessor (the defendant T.) "not to let any other portion of the said arcade for the trade or business hereinbefore mentioned to be carried on by" the plaintiff. In 1902 the defendant T. demised to the defendant G. for one year other premises in the arcade, adjoining the premises demised to the plaintiff, and this agreement contained a stipulation on the part of G. not to carry on, upon the premises demised to him, any other business than that of a "librarian, newsagent, bookseller, or stationer." The defendant G., in the course of the business carried on by him in the arcade, sold and dealt in (inter alia) picture post-cards, Christmas and New Year cards.

The plaintiff claimed an injunction and damages both against T. for letting and permitting the use of, and against G. for using, premises in the arcade for the purpose of carrying on a business similar to that carried on by the plaintiff.

Held, that, having regard to the terms of the plaintiff's agreement, the business contemplated to be carried on by him was of an aggregate description, and included as a substantial portion thereof that of "artistic and heraldic stationer"; that the subsequent letting of other premises in the arcade to the defendant G. for the purpose of carrying on (inter alia) the business of a "stationer" generally, without any limitation, was a breach on the part of the lessor T. of his stipulation in the agreement with the plaintiff "not to let" any other part of the arcade for the purpose of the trade or business carried on by the plaintiff, and that the defendant T. was liable in damages to the plaintiff in respect of such breach.

Held, further, that the plaintiff's claim against G. failed altogether, inasmuch as the express terms of the restrictive covenant only extended to "not letting," and did not restrict "the using of" the premises for the purpose above mentioned.

Kemp v. Bird, 25 W. R. 838, 5 Ch. D. 549, discussed.—BRIGG v. THORNTON, C.A., 276; [1904] 1 Ch. 386; 73 L. J. Ch. 301; 90 L. T. 327.

4. Covenant by lessee—Not to do or suffer to be done any act whereby licence may be lost—Offence against Licensing Acts by sub-lessee of assignee—Action against assignee.—A lease of a licensed public-house contained a covenant by the lessee on behalf of himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, that he or they would not do or suffer to be done on the premises any act whereby the licence might be forfeited or the renewal withheld. The lessee assigned the lease, and the assignee sublet the premises. The sub-lessee was convicted of an offence against the Licensing Acts, and in consequence thereof the licence was not renewed. In an action by the lessor against the assignee for breach of the covenant,

Held, that the assignee could not be said to have "suffered" an act done by his sub-lessee.—WILSON v. TWAMLEY, C.A., 529; [1904] 2 K. B. 99; 73 L. J. K. B. 703; 90 L. T. 751.

5. Covenant to pay all assessments "which now are or during the term shall be imposed or assessed"—Paving expenses under Public Health Act, 1875——Works completed before lease—Apportionment after lease—Liability of lessee.—A covenant by a lessee that he will pay "all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which now are or during the said term shall be imposed or assessed upon the said premises or on the landlord or tenant in respect thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise" does not apply to paving expenses which have become a charge upon the premises under the Public Health Act, 1875, upon the completion of the works before the date of the lease, although such expenses do not become payable until after that date.

Surtees v. Woodhouse, [1903], 1 K. B. 396, followed.—LUMBY v. FAUPEL, C.A.; 90 L. T. 140.

6. Covenant to pay "all taxes, rates, assessments, and outgoings"—Tenancy for three years—Requirement by local authority to relay drainage.—By an agreement in writing the plaintiff let to the defendant a house at a yearly rent of £55, and the defendant agreed to "pay all taxes, rates, assessments, and outgoings of every description," landlord's property tax only excepted, and to "keep and leave the premises (including the fixtures) in as good condition as they are now in (reasonable wear and tear excepted) . . . and keep in repair all sash-lines and internal pipes and taps." During the term the local authority served notice on the plaintiff, under the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring him to abate a nuisance that existed on the premises, and for that purpose to relay the existing drain. The plaintiff executed the work at a cost of £83 10s., and sued to recover this amount from the defendant under his contract.

Held, that the defendant was liable to repay this sum to the plaintiff.

Judgment of Wright, J. (ante, p. 13, [1903] 1 K. B. 873), affirmed.—STOCKDALE v. ASCHERBERG, C.A., 289; [1904] 1 K. B. 447; 73 L. J. K. B. 206; 90 L. T. 111.

7. Estoppel in pais—Mortgage by sub-demise before Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41)—Lease by mortgagor—Foreclosure—Underlease—License—Representation.—A lessee granted a mortgage by way of sub-demise for the residue of the term comprised in his lease except the last three days thereof before the Conveyancing Act, 1881. He subsequently granted a sub-lease of the mortgaged premises to G., without the consent of the mortgagee; and this sub-lease contained a provision for re-entry in case the sub-lessee became bankrupt. The mortgagee foreclosed, and after the foreclosure received the rent from G. G. granted another underlease with the license of the mortgagee. In the license it was stated that the reversion expectant on the determination of G.'s term was vested in the mortgagee. The mortgagee subsequently assigned his interest to the plaintiff. G. having become bankrupt, the plaintiff claimed a right to determine the sub-lease granted to G.

Held, that G. and his underlessee having altered their positions on the faith of representations made by the mortgagee that G.'s lease was subsisting, the plaintiff, who stood in the shoes of the mortgagee, was estopped from disputing its validity.

Decision of Joyce, J., affirmed. — KEITH v. GANCIA, C.A., 532; [1904] 1 Ch. 774; 73 L. J. Ch. 411; 90 L. T. 395.

8. Forfeiture—Relief—Underlessee—Non-payment of rent—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4. —The court has power, under section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, to grant to an underlessee relief against forfeiture of the superior lease incurred by reason of non-payment of rent.—GRAY v. BONSAL, C.A., 387; [1904] 1 K. B. 601; 73 L. J. K. B. 515; 90 L. T. 404.

9. Notice to quit—Tenancy at yearly rent—Three months' notice—Expiration of notice.—By an agreement of tenancy premises were let "at an inclusive rental of £25 per annum from the 1st of October; the tenant to pay rates and taxes in addition; three months' notice on either side to terminate this agreement,"

Held, that this agreement created a yearly tenancy determinable by three months' notice expiring with a year of the tenancy and not at any other time.—DIXON v. BRADFORD AND DISTRICT RAILWAY SERVANTS' COAL SUPPLY SOCIETY, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 444; 73 L. J. K. B. 136; 90 L. T. 122.

10. Outgoings—Lease for three years—Covenant to repair and pay outgoings—Holding over by tenant—Defective drainage—Cost of reconstruction of—"Intimation" notice—Liability of tenant for expenses—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 57 Vict. c. 76), ss. 3, 4.—A tenant having a three years' lease of a house at £70 a year covenanted to pay all outgoings whatsoever in respect of the premises and keep the inside in repair.

At the termination of the lease the tenant held over.

An expense of £70 1s. 6d. having been incurred by the landlord in abating a nuisance that had arisen during such holding over,

Held, that the tenant was not liable for such sum, as such liability could not have been within the contemplation of the parties, as a covenant to pay such outgoings could not be applicable to a yearly tenancy.

A notice served upon the owner of premises under section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, does not create a legal liability to abate a nuisance, and should a person upon whom it is served incur expense thereby, he does so voluntarily and not under compulsion of law.—HARRIS v. HICKMAN, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 13; 73 L. J. K. B. 31; 89 L. T. 722.

11. Paving expenses—Covenant by tenant to pay all charges—Notice to tenant to pay—Payment by tenant—Deduction of amount paid from rent—Landlord's right to distrain for amount deducted—Metropolis Management (Amendment) Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 96.—The lease of a house contained a covenant on the part of the tenant to pay the rent free of all deductions except landlord's property tax, and to pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever, and all charges imposed by any local authority upon the frontagers in respect of the taking over and the making and repair of the roads abutting on the premises. The local authority, having incurred expenses in paving the road and having apportioned the expenses among the frontagers, gave the tenant notice, under section 96 of the Metropolis Management (Amendment) Act, 1862, not to pay his rent without first deducting the amount of the paving expenses due to the local authority from the landlord as owner of the house. The amount of the expenses so claimed from the tenant exceeded the whole sum which he owed to his landlord as rent, and the tenant paid to the local authority the whole rent then due, in accordance with the notice. The landlord then demanded the rent from the tenant, which the tenant refused to pay, and thereupon the landlord distrained upon the tenant for the rent, the whole amount of which the tenant had paid to the local authority.

Held, that the tenant was not entitled to make the deduction, and that the rent remained due, and the landlord could distrain for it.—SKINNER v. HUNT, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 452; 73 L. J. K. B. 680.

12. Renewal of lease—"At the costs of the lessee"—Costs of arbitration to assess fine payable on renewal. —A lease contained a covenant by the lessor that he would at any time during the term "upon the request and at the costs of the lessee," and on payment of a fine calculated upon the number of years of the term which had expired and the full improved annual value of the premises at the time of the renewal (such value to be determined by the lessor's surveyor or at the option of the lessee by the award of two referees or their umpire), renew the term. The lessee required the lessor to renew the term, and gave notice of his desire to have the full improved annual value of the premises determined by the award of two referees or their umpire.

Held, that the costs of the reference and award must be paid by the lessee.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 257; [1903] 1 K. B. 349) affirmed. — FITZSIMON v. MOSTYN, H.L., 337; [1904] A. C. 46; 73 L. J. K. B. 72; 89 L. T. 616

13. Tenancy—Grant of lease during tenancy—Notice to quit by original landlord—Validity.—A landlord who, during the currency of a yearly tenancy, grants a lease of the premises to a third person, cannot, during the term granted by such lease, give the yearly tenant notice to quit.—WORDSLEY BREWERY CO. v. HALFORD, K.B.D., 90 L. T. 89.

14 Underlease—Forfeiture of lease—Relief to underlessee—Terms—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4.—By a lease dated the 22nd of June, 1896, the plaintiff company demised unto S. T. and C. T. the ground floor and basements of No. 21, R.-approach, for a term of twenty-one years at a rent of £300 for the first three years, and thereafter at a rent of £350.

By an underlease dated the 31st of December, 1896, S. T. and C. T. demised unto T. J. C. a part of the ground floor of No. 21, R.-approach, for the same term of twenty-one years, except the three last days thereof, at a rent of £125.

Forfeiture of the lease of the 22nd of June, 1896, having occurred by reason of the non-payment of rent, on the 9th of September, 1902, the plaintiff company instituted an action to recover possession of the premises demised by them to S. T. and C. T., and for £226, being arrears of rent up to the 24th of June, 1902, and for further proportionate rent from the 24th of June, 1902, until payment.

The action was brought against all persons then interested in the premises, and on the 7th of January and the 15th of January, 1903, judgment was recovered against all the defendants, except T. S. C.

T. S. C., by his defence and counterclaim, delivered the 13th of January, 1903, denied that under the lease of the 22nd of June, 1896, any cause of forfeiture had arisen, and claimed an order under section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, vesting in him the premises comprised in the underlease of the 31st of December, 1896, for the whole of the term thereby created.

It was admitted by T. S. C. at the trial that cause of forfeiture had in fact arisen under the lease of the 22nd of June, 1896.

The court granted the order as claimed by T. S. C., but upon the terms that he should pay all arrears of rent due from S. T. and C. T. to the plaintiff company down to the 15th of January, 1903, and the costs of the present proceedings, and that as from the 15th of January, 1903, he should pay a fair rent to be ascertained.—LONDON BRIDGE BUILDINGS CO. v. THOMSON, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 89 L. T. 50.

15. Tithe—Agreement to pay additional sum by way of tithe—Legality of agreement—Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 1 (1).—An agreement whereby a tenant agrees to pay by way of further rent "so much as the landlord shall pay for tithe rent-charge" comes within the prohibition enacted by section 1 (1) of the Tithe Rent-charge Act, 1891, and is therefore void.—LUDLOW v. PIKE, K.B.D., 475; [1904] 1 K. B. 531; 73 L. J. K. B. 274; 90 L. T. 458.

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS:—

1. Compensation—Assignment of—Right of assignee to sue in own name—Damages for tort—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25.—The defendants constructed under statutory powers a tunnel for the purposes of their railway. The construction of the tunnel caused a subsidence of the soil, whereby certain houses, not taken by the defendants, suffered structural damage; and the owners of the houses thereupon became entitled to compensation for injurious affection under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. After the damage had occurred the owners of the houses assigned their interests in them, together with their rights to compensation, to the plaintiff. At an inquiry held for the purpose a jury assessed the amount of compensation payable in respect of the damage done to the houses. The action was brought by the plaintiff as assignee in her own name upon the verdict and judgment obtained at the said inquiry.

Held, that compensation for injurious affection under section 68 is in the nature of damages for a tort; that a right to sue for damages in tort is not a legal chose in action within the meaning of section 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873; and that consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to sue as assignee in her own name.—DAWSON v. GREAT NORTHERN AND CITY RAILWAY CO., K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 277; 73 L. J. K. B. 174; 90 L. T. 20.

2. Compensation—Interest in land—Right to sell refreshments at theatre—Right to affix advertisements—Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 68.—The lessee of a theatre, by an agreement in writing, granted to the plaintiffs for a term the free and exclusive right to sell refreshments at the theatre, with the necessary use of the refreshment-rooms and bars and cloak-rooms and wine cellars, together with the free right of access to all parts of the house as might be necessary, and also the free and exclusive right during the term of supplying to the visitors and other people attending the theatre wines, spirits, cigars, and refreshments of all kinds, programmes and all other articles, and of providing cloak-rooms and other accommodation, and also the sole and exclusive privilege of advertising and letting spaces for advertisements in the refreshment and cloak-rooms and on programmes. The defendant county council having taken the theatre under their statutory powers, Held, that the plaintiffs had not acquired an interest in land within the meaning of section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and were therefore not entitled to compensation under that section.—WARR & CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 405; [1904] 1 K. B. 713; 73 L. J. K. B. 362; 90 L. T. 368.

3. Compensation—Notice to treat—Colliery owner to leave coal unworked—Subsequent rise in price of coal—Basis of assessment—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 6, 22, and 25.—Where a notice to treat has been given under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for the assessment of compensation payable in respect of certain seams of coal which a waterworks company requires the coal owner to leave unworked, the arbitrator is entitled to take into consideration, in assessing compensation, a rise in the value of coal which has taken place subsequently to the notice to treat.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (50 W. R. 627, [1902] 2 K. B. 135), reversed.—BWLLFA AND MERTHYR DARE STEAM COLLIERIES v. PONTYPRIDD WATERWORKS CO., H.L., 193; [1903] A. C. 426; 72 L. J. K. B. 805; 89 L. T. 280.

4. Compensation—Sealed offer—Allegation that premises to be acquired were unsanitary—Jury discharged after giving verdict as to unsanitary condition of premises, but before they found as to value of the premises—Right of claimant after verdict to accept "sum previously offered"—Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 38, 51—London County Council (Improvement) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. cclxvi.), s. 20.—A "sealed offer" for the purchase price of land to be acquired, made under section 38 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is a continuing offer, which may be accepted at any time before the verdict of the jury assessing the amount of compensation has been given.—REX v. WESTMINSTER HIGH BAILIFF, K.B.D., 10; [1903] 2 K. B. 189; 72 L. J. K. B. 600; 88 L. T. 834.

5. Payment out of court—Railway company—Entry on land before determination of purchase-money—Deposit of estimated value—Bond—Payment out of deposit to company—Evidence—Delivery up of bond—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 85, 86, 87, 124.—When under section 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, a railway company have entered into possession of land which they are authorized to take, giving a bond to the person who claims to be entitled to the land and depositing money in court as provided by that section, the company, having satisfied the conditions of the bond and showing that it has been delivered up to them, are entitled, upon a petition by themselves and the obligee of the bond, to have the money deposited repaid to them, without proving that the purchase-money of the land has been paid to the persons really entitled to it.

The rights of any person, other than the obligee of the bond, having an interest in the land are protected by section 124 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.—MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., EX PARTE, C.A.; [1904] 1 Ch. 61; 73 L. J. Ch. 64; 89 L. T. 545.

LEGITIMACY:—

Perpetuating testimony—Paternity of child born in wedlock—Husband and wife, Statements by as to paternity—Access or non-access before marriage—Evidence—Admissibility.—Less than six months after the late Earl Poulett's first marriage a son was born, a full-grown child. In a suit to perpetuate testimony, Earl Poulett deposed that he had never had sexual intercourse with his wife before the marriage; that soon after the marriage she confessed to him that she was at the time of the marriage enceinte by another man, the father of the child; that he then separated from his wife for ever and never acknowledged the child as his. Upon a question of the legitimacy of the child in a claim to the peerage,

Held, that the deposition of Earl Poulett was admissible as evidence that the child was a bastard.

Anon. v. Anon., (1856) 22 Beav. 481, 23 Beav. 273, overruled.—POULETT PEERAGE, THE, H.L.; [1903] A. C. 395.

LIBEL:—

1. Fair comment—Matter of public interest—Personal imputations—New trial.—If in criticizing the conduct of a man in relation to a matter of public interest the writer goes on to impute to him base and sordid motives, there being no facts to warrant the imputation, the defence of "fair comment" cannot be maintained in an action for libel.

Campbell v. Spottiswoode, [1863] 3 B. & S. 769, 32 L. J. 185, followed.

McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., [1903] 2 K. B. 100, commented on and distinguished.—JOYNT v. CYCLE TRADE PUBLISHING CO., C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 292.

2. Libel by officer of corporation—Liability of corporation—Scope of duty of agent—Malice.—A limited company is liable for a libel published by one of its officers acting within the scope and in the course of his employment, on the ordinary principles of agency; and, if there is evidence that it was within the scope of the agent's authority and employment to write the letter which contained the libel complained of, the fact that he went further than the facts warranted, and made charges which he knew to be false, will not relieve the company from liability.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—CITIZENS' LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. BROWN, P.C.; [1904] A C. 423; 90 L. T. 739.

See also Defamation, 1; Slander.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Beerhouse—Privileged beerhouse—Sale of spirits without a licence—Conviction—House closed—Application by owners of beerhouse for grant of licence—Application refused on a ground other than one of those specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 15.—The holder of a licence to sell by retail beer to be consumed on or off the premises was convicted for the first time of selling spirits without a licence. The house had been licensed for the sale of beer and wine prior to the 1st of May, 1869, and the licence had been regularly renewed from time to time, the last renewal having been made to the then tenant at the general annual meeting on the 13th of February, 1903. The tenant having been convicted on the 30th of July following, the owners of the house applied at the next special sessions, under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, for a grant of a provisional licence in respect of the premises. The application was refused on a ground other than one of the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869.

Held, that the case was governed by Ex parte Flinn, 48 W. R. 29. [1899] 2 Q. B. 607, and that the justices could only refuse the application upon one of the four grounds specified in the Act of 1869.

Reg. v. West Riding Justices, 36 W. R. 855, 21 Q. B. D. 258. discussed.—TOWER JUSTICES v. CHAMBERS, K.B.D., 541; 90 L. T. 228.

2. Control of justices over licensed premises—Power to order alterations on renewing licence—"Part of the premises where intoxicating liquor is sold or consumed"—Premises with front and back entrances—Jurisdiction to order back entrance to be closed—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 11, sub-section 4.—Under section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902, where an application is made for the renewal of a licence in respect of premises which have both a front and a back entrance, the justices have power, on renewing the licence, to order the back entrance to be closed, although there is no evidence that intoxicating liquor has ever been sold or consumed at the back entrance or in the passage immediately inside the back entrance.

Judgment of Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Channell, JJ. (51 W. R. 695), affirmed.—BUSHELL v. HAMMOND, C.A., 453.

3. General annual licensing meeting—Statutory adjournment within one month—Further adjourned meeting for undisposed-of business—Jurisdiction of justices at further adjourned meeting to entertain new business—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7. c. 28), s. 14, sub-sections 1, 6.—Section 14, sub-section 1, of the Licensing Act, 1902, provides that every adjournment of the general annual licensing meeting "shall be held within one month of the date of the general annual licensing meeting."

Held, that if licensing justices, who are unable to dispose of the licensing business at the general annual licensing meeting or the statutory adjournment thereof within one month afterwards, hold a further adjourned meeting for the purpose of disposing of the business then before them but remaining undisposed of, they have no jurisdiction at such further adjourned meeting to hear or dispose of new business or new applications which were not made and were not before them at the general annual licensing meeting or the adjournment thereof one month afterwards; and therefore they are not bound to hear an application for the renewal of a licence to a new tenant of a licensed house, whose tenancy began after the date of the statutory adjournment, and whose application consequently was not before them at the general annual licensing meeting or at the statutory adjournment thereof.—REX v. BRISTOL JUSTICES, K.B D.; 89 L. T. 474.

4. Justices—Appeal—Employment of county solicitor—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 29—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 20.—The quarter sessions of West Riding, on the hearing of two appeals against the refusal of the licensing justices to renew a licence, dismissed one appeal and allowed the other appeal, but in both cases made a special order disallowing the profit costs of the solicitor employed by the justices, on the ground that they should have employed the county solicitor.

Held, that the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to do so, and that the justices were not bound to employ the county solicitor.—REX v. WEST RIDING JUSTICES, K.B D., 540; [1904] 1 K. B. 545; 73 L. J. K. B. 224; 90 L. T. 381.

5. Keeping open during prohibited hours—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.—In order to constitute the offence of keeping open licensed premises under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, it is necessary that the premises should be capable of being entered from the outside, or that liquor could be supplied to persons outside.—COMMISSIONERS OF POLICE v. ROBERTS, K.B.D., 560; [1904] 1 K. B. 369; 73 L. J. K. B. 231.

6. Offences—"Gaming"—Game of skill played with cards for prizes given by persons not competitors—"Whist drive"—Suffering gaming on licensed premises—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 17, sub-section 1.—The appellant, a licensed victualler, suffered a game of skill, called a "whist drive," to be played by members of a club in a room on his licensed premises, for prizes only given by their friends.

Held, that he could not properly be convicted of suffering gaming under the Licensing Act, 1872, section 17, sub-section 1.—LOCKWOOD v. COOPER, K.B.D., 48; [1903] 2 K. B. 428; 72 L. J. K. B. 690; 89 L. T. 306.

7. Order taken by traveller—Appropriation—Sale off licensed premises—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3.—An order for beer having been given to the traveller of a person licensed to retail beer at his premises by a customer at such customer's house, the traveller handed the order to the licensee at the licensed premises, who appropriated the beer by placing it in a box at those premises with a piece of paper on which was the customer's name. The beer was delivered and paid for at the customer's house.

Held, that this was not a sale off the licensed premises.—WALKER v. WALKER, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 88.

8. Renewal—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions—Evidence at quarter sessions.—On appeal to quarter sessions against the refusal to renew a licence the only evidence produced in support of the refusal was a map showing that there were a large number of other licensed houses within a short distance of the licensed premises in question.

Held (Kennedy, J., dissenting), that this was not evidence on which the quarter sessions could refuse to renew the licence of the house.—RAVEN v. SOUTHAMPTON JUSTICES, K.B.D., 574; [1904] 1 K. B. 430; 73 L. J. K. B. 282; 90 L. T. 94.

9. Renewal of licence—Value of house—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 45.—Section 45 of the Licensing Act, 1872, which requires premises to be of a certain annual value as a qualification for being licensed for consumption of intoxicating liquor thereon, does not apply to a house which was licensed at the time of the passing of the Act, and also at the time when the renewal was applied for, even in the case of there having been a break in the continuity of the licence.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 38; [1902] 2 K. B. 740) reversed.

Freer v. Murray, [1894] A. C. 576, distinguished.—IGOE v. SHANN, H.L., 111; [1903] A. C. 320; 72 L. J. K. B. 693; 89 L. T. 105.

10. Sale of liquors—Sale on unlicensed premises—Order taken by traveller—Duty of traveller to forward order to principal—Goods appropriated at and sent from licensed premises—Offence—Executory contract of sale—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3.—An order was taken by a brewer's traveller at a customer's house for beer to be supplied from the appellant's brewery, to be paid for by the customer on or after delivery. It was a rule in the brewery that no order taken at a customer's house would be executed until the traveller had sent into the office the name and address of the customer and the order had been entered and passed through the books and directions given to the carman in the ordinary way.

Held, that an order taken by the appellant's traveller, and so executed, did not constitute evidence of a sale at the premises of the customer, and therefore the appellant was wrongly convicted of an offence under section 3 of the Act of 1872. Whether, on other facts, an executory contract of sale would come within section 3 was discussed, but not decided.

Walker v. Walker, 67 J. P. 452, and Stephenson v. Rogers (Limited), 63 J. P. 230 47 W. R. Dig. 101, considered.—STRICKLAND v. WHITTAKER, K.B.D., 538; 90 L. T. 445.

11. Sale of liquor to children—Information for "knowingly" selling—Sale by barman—No knowledge on part either of barman or licence-holder—Liability of licence-holder.—A licence-holder cannot be convicted under section 2 of the Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1901, for "knowingly selling" intoxicating liquor to a person under the age of fourteen years, when he himself has no knowledge of the sale and when the barman who sells the liquor has no knowledge that the person to whom he sells is under the age of fourteen years, but honestly believes that he has attained that age. The section does not create an absolute prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquor to any person under the age of fourteen years, except in corked and sealed vessels, and where there is no knowledge on the part of the licence-holder or the barman who sells, the licence-holder cannot be convicted.—GROOM v. GRIMES, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 129.

LIGHT.—See Easement.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE of:—

1. Acknowledgment of debt—Conditional promise to pay—Implied promise to pay—21 Jac. 1, c. 16—Lord Tenterden's Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14).—In an action by a creditor to recover money lent the debtor pleaded, in his defence, that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The debtor, however, before the expiration of six years after the debt was incurred, wrote the following letter: "I am willing to sell the 5,230 shares that I hold . . . for the sum of £816 4s. 6d., and in the event of my doing so I will with the money pay the ten-shilling call on 629 of the above shares, amounting to £314 10s., and the balance in settlement of my account with R. Barrett & Son (Limited)," the creditor, "amounting at the 31st of December last to £501 14s. 6d."

Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take the case out of the statute, as the letter was a general acknowledgment of the debt with a conditional promise to pay, but without any distinct statement that except upon the performance of the condition the debtor would not or could not pay, and that therefore there was an implied promise to pay the debt.—BARRETT v. DAVIES, K.B.D., 607; 90 L. T. 460.

2. Principal and agent—Fiduciary relation.—A company remitted money to its agent in America to be used in the purchase of lands. The agent bought land and sold it to the company at a profit without disclosing his interest in the transaction.

Held, that an express trust was created, and that the Statute of Limitations was no bar to an action for an account in order to recover the balance of the moneys remitted to him and not applied for the particular purpose.

Burdick v. Garrick, 18 W. R. 387, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 233; Soar v. Ashwell, 42 W. R. 165, [1893] 2 Q. B. 390, followed.—NORTH AMERICAN LAND AND TIMBER CO. v. WATKINS, Ch.D Kekewich, J., 360; [1904] 1 Ch. 242; 73 L. J. Ch. 117; 89 L. T. 602.

See also Company, 40; Solicitor, 2.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Bye-law—Building—Deposit of plans—Change of bye-laws after approval of plans—Row of houses—Part of work carried out—Right to complete according to approved plans—Harrogate Corporation Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. ccix.), s. 27.—Section 27 of the Harrogate Corporation Act, 1893, provided that the deposit with the corporation of any plan of any street or building should be null and void "if the execution of the work specified in such plan should not be commenced within three years from the date of such deposit."

In 1894 a builder deposited a plan showing thereon a number of houses which he proposed to erect, and which were in accordance with the building bye-laws then in force in the borough. The plan was approved by the corporation.

Some of the houses were built and completed, and certificates were given on their completion by the corporation.

In November, 1901, the building bye-laws in force in the borough were repealed, "except as regards any work commenced before that date," and on the same day new bye-laws came into force with which the plan that had been deposited by the builder in 1894 did not comply.

Held (affirming the decision of Wright, J.), that the plan approved in 1894 was not merely the plan of one building, but was really a number of separate plans for the buildings shown thereon; that therefore the completion of some of the houses shown on the plan was not a commencement of the other buildings there shown, which were not in fact begun till after the new bye-laws came into force, and the defendant was not entitled to go on with the work under the old bye-laws.—HARROGATE CORPORATION v. DICKINSON, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 468; 73 L. J. K. B. 262; 90 L. T. 41.

2. Bye-law—Building—"Place of habitual employment for any person in any business"—Stables of building contractor.—By bye-law No. 2 certain buildings which should not be constructed or adapted to be used "as a place of habitual employment for any person in any manufacture, trade, or business" were to be exempt from the bye-laws relating to new buildings.

Held, that a building divided into three parts, consisting of a rain goods store, a timber store, and stables, used by a building contractor, was not a building used "as a place of habitual employment for any person in any manufacture, trade, or business" even although part consisted of the stables. — LINZELL v. FELIXSTOWE URBAN COUNCIL K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 388.

3. Bye-law—Erecting shed—Neglecting to comply with notice—Sufficiency of notice.—By certain bye-laws Nos. 53 and 96 it was provided that if any person should erect new domestic buildings certain open space was to be provided, and anyone who was intending to erect a building was to give notice to the council and deliver plans thereof, a description of the materials to be used, and other details.

By bye-law No. 98, where a person who has erected a building or done any other work to which the bye-laws apply receives a notice in writing specifying any matters in respect of which the erection or the work is in contravention of any bye-law, such person must cause anything done in contravention to be amended.

A notice was served stating: "I am directed . . . to call your attention to the fact that a wooden erection has been made . . . contrary to Nos. 53 and 96 of the bye-laws. . . ."

Held, that such notice was sufficient.—DICKINSON v. FORSYTH, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 30.

4. Bye-law — Infringement — Erection of houses abutting on public highway—Laying out new street—Urban authority — Statutory remedy — Attorney-General, absence of—Jurisdiction.—The defendants were the owners of a triangular piece of land within the plaintiffs' borough. Two sides of the triangle abutted upon public highways within the borough. The defendants, in pursuance of a building scheme, erected houses on their land fronting the highways. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants were laying out the highways as new streets which did not comply with the requirements of the borough bye-laws as to width, and they claimed, first, an injunction, and, secondly, a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to remove or pull down any work begun or done by the defendants in contravention of the bye-laws. The bye-laws, which were framed under the Public Health Act, 1875, prescribed a penalty for infringement, to be recovered by summary proceedings, and provided that the plaintiffs might, subject to any statutory provision in that behalf, remove, alter, or pull down any work begun or done in contravention of the bye-laws.

Held, (1) that the plaintiffs could not maintain an action in the absence of the Attorney-General; (2) that the facts did not justify the inference that the defendants were laying out a "new street" within the meaning of the bye-laws.

Decision of Joyce, J. ([1902] 2 Ch. 182, 50 W. R. Dig. 97) affirmed.

Attorney-General v. Ashborne Recreation Ground Co., 51 W. R. 125, [1903] 1 Ch. 101, approved.—DEVONPORT CORPORATION v. TOZER, C.A., 6; [1903] 1 Ch. 759; 72 L. J. Ch. 411; 88 L. T. 113.

5. Bye-law—New buildings—No exempting power reserved therein—Bye-law not unreasonable—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 16.—By a bye-law with respect to new buildings made by a rural sanitary authority it was provided that "Every person who shall erect a new building shall cause such building to be enclosed with walls constructed of good bricks, stone, or other hard and incombustible materials properly bonded and solidly put together (a) with good mortar compounded of good lime and clean sharp sand or other suitable material, or (b) with good cement, or (c) good cement mixed with sharp sand."

Held, that the bye-law was not unreasonable and ultrà vires, because it did not reserve to the rural authority any discretion to permit the erection of any new building in exceptional circumstances other than in accordance with the requirements of the bye-law. On proceedings being taken under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, in respect of an offence against the above bye-law, the justices have discretion under section 16, though the charge is proved, to dismiss the summons if they think the offence is of a trifling nature and that punishment would be inexpedient.—SALT v. SCOTT-HALL, K.B.D., 95; [1903] 2 K. B. 245; 72 L. J. K. B. 627; 88 L. T. 868.

6. Bye-law—Privy—Bye-law containing no provision as to notice to person complained against—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 37, 39.—A bye-law made by the London County Council under section 39 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and which provides that a person offending against it shall be liable to a penalty, is unreasonable and void if it does not contain a provision that notice shall be given to the person complained against before proceedings to recover the penalty are commenced against him.—NOKES v. ISLINGTON CORPORATION, K.B D., 399; [1904] 1 K. B. 610; 73 L. J. K. B. 100; 90 L. T. 22.

7. Bye-law — Public health — Lodging-house — Validity of bye-law—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 94, sub-section 1 (d) (e). —Two borough councils, acting under the power conferred upon them by section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, made a bye-law with respect to lodging-houses in their respective boroughs, requiring the landlord of any such house in the first week in April in every year to cause every part of the premises to be thoroughly lime-washed. "Lodging-house" was defined as a house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family. "Landlord" was defined in the first case as the person who receives or is entitled to receive the rack-rent of a lodging-house, and in the second case as the person entitled to receive the profits arising from the letting of the lodging-house.

Held, that the bye-law in both cases was bad, as it contained no provision that the landlord, before he became liable to a penalty for a breach of the bye-law, should receive notice that the bye-law had not been complied with.

Held, further (by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J., Wills, J., dissenting), that the bye-laws were not unreasonable, in so far as they required the lime-washing to be done in the first week of April.—STILES v. GALINSKI, K.B.D., 462; [1904] 1 K. B. 615; 73 L. J. K. B. 485; 90 L. T. 437.

8. Hoarding—"Abutting" on street.—A hoarding for advertisements sixty feet long and twelve feet above a hedge, no part of such hoarding being nearer to the street than two feet and having the hedge between it and the street, does not "abut" on the street.—BARNETT v. COVELL, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 29.

9. Metropolitan borough—Compensation to existing officer on abolition of office—Amount of salary and emoluments—Resolution assessing compensation—Rescission by subsequent resolution—Validity—London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), s. 30 (2) —Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 81 (7)—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 120.—A metropolitan borough council, successors to a vestry, resolved to abolish the office of an "existing officer," and passed a resolution assessing his compensation under section 120 of the Local Government Act, 1888. The amount assessed was a proportion of a sum claimed by him as representing his emoluments. Afterwards the council being advised that this amount was excessive, and therefore illegally assessed, by reason of the fact that certain items were improperly included in his claim, passed another resolution rescinding the first, and assessing his compensation at the same proportion of a lesser sum.

Held, that the amount of his emoluments was a question of fact to be ascertained by the council, subject to an appeal to the Treasury, and that the council, having ascertained that fact, and, by the first resolution, assessed the compensation, in the absence of an appeal to the Treasury, became bound to the officer to pay to him the compensation so assessed, and could not, by a subsequent resolution, relieve itself of that obligation.—LIVINGSTONE v. WESTMINSTER CORPORATION, K.B.D., 395; [1904] 2 K. B. 109; 73 L. J. K. B. 434.

10. Severance of part of rural district into urban district—Adjustment of property and liabilities—Highway expenses—Loss of income—Local Government Acts, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 57, 62; and 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 54.—By an order of a county council, made under section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1888, part of a rural district was converted into an urban district, which was no longer liable for the maintenance of the highways in the rural district, but took over its own liabilities and property in its own separate area. The rural district council claimed an adjustment of the income, liabilities, and expenses, under section 62 of the Act, in respect of the maintenance of the highways, as the contributions formerly received from the urban district area exceeded the rates derived therefrom.

Held, that the loss of profit from the contributions formerly received by the rural district council from the area comprised in the new urban district was not a matter for adjustment, for the section does not give compensation for such loss, and loss of income under this section referred to present income and not to that to be derived from rates which may hereafter be imposed.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 353, [1903] 1 K. B. 554) reversed.

In re Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union, 47 W. R. 322, [1899] 1 Q. B. 540, and In re Buckinghamshire County Council and Hertfordshire County Council, [1899] 1 Q B. 515. 47 W. R. Dig. 114, overruled —CATERHAM AND GODSTONE DISTRICT COUNCILS, RE, H L, 625; [1904] A. C. 171; 73 L. J. K. B. 589; 90 L. T. 653.

11. Sewer—Drain—Nuisance by sewage—Drainage of houses—Liability of local authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 2, 4, 14, 19, 21, 42, 43.—A channel or gutter, which was vested in the defendants as the local authority, and which ran between a road and the footpath in front of the house of the plaintiff adjoining the road, was used for carrying off the surface water from the road, and also the water from the roofs of some of the other houses bordering on the road, by means of pipes communicating therewith, and from the curtilages of these houses. In the channel itself at various intervals were gratings for conducting the water into the deep underground drains. There was also a cesspool situate in a garden adjoining the plaintiff's house. Sewage-matter had overflowed from the cesspool into the channel through no fault of the plaintiff, as it came from another house, and being permitted to remain in the channel had caused the illness of the plaintiff's infant son by means of foul and noxious smells escaping therefrom, through the defendants neglecting to keep the channel properly cleaned out.

Held (1) that the channel was a "sewer" within the meaning of the definition of sewers in section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875; (2) that being a sewer the local authority were bound under section 19 of the same Act to keep it free from pollution; and (3) that the plaintiff not having himself caused the pollution, was entitled to damages and an injunction against the defendants.

Decision of Phillimore, J., affirmed.—WILKINSON v. LLANDAFF AND DINAS POWIS RURAL COUNCIL, C.A., 50; [1903] 2 Ch. 695; 73 L. J. Ch. 8; 89 L. T. 462.

12. Street—Objection to proposed works—Grounds—Not a street within the Act—Local government—Highway repairable by inhabitants at large—Evidence—Admissibility—Private Streets Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 5, 7.—By section 7 of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, the owner of premises liable to be charged with any part of the cost of executing works under the Act may by written notice to the urban authority object to the proposed works on the following, amongst other, grounds: (a) that an alleged street is not a street within the meaning of the Act; (b) that a street is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. By section 5 the expression "street" in the Act means a street as defined by the Public Health Acts, and not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large.

Held, that where the ground of objection was that the alleged street was not a street within the meaning of the Act, evidence was admissible to prove that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large.—CARRY v. BEXHILL CORPORATION, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 142; 73 L. J. K. B. 74; 90 L. T. 58.

13. Street—Paving expenses—Decision of justice that street is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large—Res judicata—Wakefield Corporation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. lxxi.), ss. 29, 30, 31—Private Streets Acts, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 6, 7, 8.—Upon an objection by the owners of premises in a street to a scheme for certain private street works which the local authority proposed to execute under a local Act (which contained provisions identical with sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Private Streets Acts, 1892), the justices decided that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and upheld the objection. Subsequently the local authority proposed to execute private streets works in the street under a different scheme.

Held, upon objection taken by the owners of premises in the street, that the mattter was res judicata, by reason of the former determination of the justices.

Reg. v. Hutchins, 29 W. R. 724, 6 Q. B. D. 300, distinguished.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 305, [1903] 1 K. B. 417) affirmed.—WAKEFIELD CORPORATION v. COOKE, H.L., 321; [1904] A. C. 31; 73 L. J. K. B. 88; 89 L. T. 707.

14. Street—Power of local authority to erect pillar for overhead tramway wire—Pillar sunk in soil of pavement — Trespass to private property — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4. 19—Newport Corporation Act, 1900, s. 51.—Where a local authority requires to open up the soil of a street, the surface only of which has been dedicated to the public, they do not commit a trespass on private property so long as the act to be done is within the area of their statutory powers.

Held, therefore, that no trespass was committed by the digging of a hole in the footway in which to place a pole to carry the electric wire for a tramway scheme authorized by a private Act which incorporated the provisions of the Land Clauses Act, the act complained of not amounting to a taking of land but only to the exercise of a right in the nature of an easement.—ESCOTT v. NEWPORT CORPORATION, K B.D., 543; [1904] 2 K. B. 369; 73 L. J. K. B. 693; 90 L. T. 348.

15. Street—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257—Expenses incurred by local authority—Charge upon premises—Date of charge—Completion of works—Vendor and purchaser.—Expenses incurred by a local authority for works executed in a street after notice to the owners of adjoining premises only became a charge on the premises within section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on the completion of the works, and not on the date on which the local authority enter into a binding contract for their execution.

Nor do such expenses, by reason of the notice, constitute an incumbrance on the premises so as to prevent a vendor, who conveys the property after the notice but before the completion of the works, making a good title free from incumbrances.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 392), affirmed.—ALLEN AND DRISCOLL'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 680.

16. Transfer of powers of other authorities—County borough—Urban sanitary district—"Urban district"—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 21, 35, 62—A county borough, if it be an urban sanitary district under the Public Health Act, 1875, is an "urban district" within section 62 (1) of the Local Government Act, 1894, and its council can exercise the powers of that section. Section 21 of the Local Government Act, 1894, which by the operation of section 35 is inapplicable to a county borough, is not to be read as if it were a definition of "urban district" excluding county boroughs.—KIRKDALE BURIAL BOARD v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 427; [1904] 1 Ch. 829; 73 L. J. Ch. 529.

LOCKE-KING'S ACT.—See Will, 26.

LUNATIC:—

1. Practice—Vesting orders—Direction to transfer stock—Title of proceedings—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 116, sub-section 1 (d); ss. 133, 333—Rules in Lunacy, 1892, rr. 9, 57, 58; Schedule, Form 1.—An order in Lunacy directing a transfer of stock under section 133 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, should be entitled in the matter of the Lunacy Acts, 1890 and 1891, as well as in the matter of the particular lunacy; but this is not to apply to a case under section 116, sub-section 1 (d) (of a person who through mental infirmity arising from disease or age is incapable of managing his affairs), where the title contains a reference to the statutes "53 Vict. c. 5, and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 65."—PURVIS, RE, C.A.; [1904] 1 Ch. 373; 73 L. J. Ch. 381; 90 L. T. 394.

2. Real estate—Permanent improvements—Application that sums so expended may be a charge on such real estate for the benefit of persons entitled to personalty—Nature of improvements—Administration in lunacy—Jurisdiction—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 118.—Under section 118 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the court has discretion to consider not only the benefit of the lunatic personally, but also the question of what is fair as between his real and personal property; and the court has jurisdiction under that section to order that money already expended under a previous order in permanent improvements should be charged upon the real estate improved. Repairs incidental to the ordinary course of management would not come within the category of permanent improvements, and therefore ought not to be made a charge upon the real estate.

Attorney-General v. Marquis of Ailesbury, 36

W.R. 737, 12 A. C., 672, discussed.—GIST, RE, C.A., 422; [1904] 1 Ch. 398; 73 L. J. Ch. 251; 90 L. T. 35.

3. Trust fund—beneficiary of unsound mind not so found by inquisition—Maintenance of lunatic—Undertaking—Jurisdiction—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 116.—A lunatic not so found was absolutely entitled to a trust fund under a will and settlement. An originating summons was taken out in the Chancery Division for the purpose of having it declared that a certain part of the investments representing the fund might be expended for the personal benefit and maintenance of the lunatic, and also so much of the capital as the court should think fit. The fund was represented by some India Stock and mortgages.

Held, that if the trustees transferred the stock and deposited the mortgage deeds in court, and if the sister of the lunatic, who was also one of the trustees of the settlement, gave an undertaking to apply the income for the lunatic's benefit, the trustees might pay to the sister the income of the fund during the lunatic's life or until further order.

Decision of Joyce, J., who held the administration was more properly one in lunacy jurisdiction, reversed.—CARR'S TRUSTS, RE, CARR v. CARR C.A., 595; [1904] 1 Ch. 792; 73 L. J. Ch. 459; 90 L. T. 592.

MARKET:—

Disturbance—Intention—Setting up rival market on market day—Declaration—Liberty to apply for injunction.—Although according to the decision in Mayor of Brecon v. Edwards, 1 H. & C. 51, it is necessary to consider what has been the intention of the defendant against whom an action is brought for the alleged disturbance of a market, in committing the acts complained of, yet in a case where the defendant had set up a rival market on a market day, taking advantage of the concourse of people coming to the lawful market, it was held to be quite immaterial that he had no intention of rivalling the lawful market; but that it was not necessary to give effect to this conclusion by granting an injunction, for, in the circumstances, the justice of the case would be met by a declaration to the effect that the conduct of the defendant was unlawful and constituted an invasion of the plaintiff's market, with liberty to the plaintiff to apply for an injunction if the defendant should repeat the wrongful acts complained of.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.—WILCOX v. STEEL, C.A.; [1904] 1 Ch. 212; 73 L. J. Ch. 217; 89 L. T. 640.

MARRIAGE:—

Presumption in favour of a valid marriage—Long-continued open cohabitation—Ceremony—Foreign marriage—Recognition—Strict proof.—Where there is clear proof that English persons intended to be married to one another, some evidence of a ceremony by way of a French marriage de facto, and of recognition of them afterwards as man and wife by their families and by them of their children as legitimate, during a long course of years, the court will not require strict proof of marriage, even upon the assumption that to contract marriage in France in the manner alleged was not in accordance with the habits of law-abiding people there.

The offspring of such a union held therefore entitled to share in a gift under a will to "children."—SHEPHARD, RE, GEORGE v. THYER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 456; 73 L. J. Ch. 401; 90 L. T. 249.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Advances—No separate property—Acknowledgment in 1894 of debt—Contract to pay—Executor—Retainer—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1—Will—Construction—Money on deposit—"Ready money."—A married woman will not render herself liable, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, by acknowledging, in 1894, advances previously made to her by a testator in respect of which she could not have been sued, although the acknowledgment would take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. In such a case the executor cannot retain the advances to the married woman out of such portion of the testator's estate as is bequeathed to her. A bequest of "ready money" does not include money on deposit at a bank withdrawable on fourteen days' notice.—WHEELER, RE, HANKINSON v. HAYTER, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 586; [1904] 2 Ch. 66; 73 L. J. Ch. 576.

2. Authority of wife to pledge husband's credit—Necessaries—Husband and wife sued jointly—Presumption of agency—Alternative liability of husband—Election—Rules of Supreme Court, ord. 14, r. 5.—The relationship of husband and wife gives rise to no presumption of joint liability for goods supplied to the domestic establishment on the order of the wife. Should husband and wife be sued jointly for goods supplied to the wife, and judgment obtained against her, then, in the absence of joint liability, there is no alternative remedy against the husband, nor does ord. 14, r. 5, alter this.

When it is established that a sufficient allowance has been paid by the husband to his wife, and she has been directed not to go beyond it, the presumption of the agency of the wife for the usual domestic purposes of the joint establishment and other necessaries will be rebutted.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 290 [1903] 1 K. B. 64) affirmed.—MOREL v. WESTMORLAND H.L., 353; [1904] A. C. 11; 73 L. J. K. B 93; 89 L. T. 702.

3. Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Ante-nuptial debt—Property available to satisfy debt—Form of judgment—Validity of restraint—Exception—Settlement of woman's own property by herself—Money payable by husband under separation deed—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 19.—In an action against a married woman, who married after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, on an ante-nuptial debt, judgment was signed against her for a sum to be paid out of her separate property, whether subject to any restraint against anticipation or not. Subsequently she separated from her husband under a deed of separation, which contained a covenant by the husband to pay her a yearly sum by monthly instalments for her separate use without the power of anticipation.

Held, that, on the true construction of section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the money payable under the covenant could not be made available to answer the judgment debt, and that the judgment ought to be rectified by limiting its operation to separate property of the married woman not subject to any restraint against anticipation.

Axford v. Reid, 37 W. R. 291, 22 Q. B. D. 548 distinguished.—BIRMINGHAM EXCELSIOR MONEY SOCIETY v. HAYWOOD, C.A., 84; [1904] 1 K. B. 35; 73 L. J. K. 28; 89 L. T. 656.

4. Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Wife's contracts during coverture—Judgment after cessation of coverture—Married Women's Property Act, 1893

(56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1.—A married woman, who was possessed of separate property with a restraint against anticipation, made a promissory note jointly with her husband. After the death of the husband an action was brought against the widow on the promissory note, and judgment was obtained against her. On an application by the plaintiff for the appointment by way of equitable execution of a receiver of the income due to the widow from the aforesaid property,

Held, that, although in consequence of her having become discovert the restraint against anticipation had ceased, still the property was protected by section 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, and an order for a receiver could not be made.

Decision of A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ., in Barnett v. Howard, [1900] 2 Q. B. 784, 49 W. R. Dig. 107, approved and followed.—BROWN v. DIMBLEBY, C.A., 53; [1904] 1 K. B. 28; 72 L. J. K. B. 35; 89 L. T. 424.

5. Tort committed by wife—Action against husband and wife—Separate and inconsistent defences—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 2.—Section 1, sub-section 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, has not abolished the common law right to sue both husband and wife for a tort committed by the wife during coverture, and in such an action the husband and wife cannot put in separate and inconsistent defences.

A husband and wife were sued in the old common law form of action for a libel written and published by the wife during coverture. One statement of defence was delivered. In paragraph 1 the husband said that so far as he was liable, as the husband of the other defendant, he paid money into court in satisfaction of the claim. In paragraphs 2 to 5 the wife pleaded a denial of liability.

Held, that there could be only one defence to the action—namely, the one which the husband put on the record, and that the inconsistent defence of the wife must be struck out.—BEAUMONT v. KAYE, C.A., 241; [1904] 1 K. B. 292; 73 L. J. K. B. 213; 90 L. T. 51.

6. Trustee-mortgagee—Transfer of mortgage—Deed not acknowledged—Bare trustee—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c 75), s. 2—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 16.—Two trustees for sale, of whom one was a lady, sold land, and next day took a mortgage from the purchaser for a sum expressed to belong to them on a joint account. The lady having afterwards married, she and her co-mortgagee transferred the mortgage, and, on a sale by a person deriving title under the transferees, the purchaser objected that the deed of transfer had not been executed by the husband of the married woman or acknowledged by her. The vendor replied that, being a mortgagee, she could convey as a feme sole according to the decision in In re Brooke and Fremlin's Contract, 46 W. R. 442, [1898] 1 Ch. 647.

Held, following that case, that the purchaser's requisition had been satisfactorily answered.—WEST AND HARDY, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 188; [1904] 1 Ch. 145; 73 L. J. Ch. 91; 89 L. T. 579.

See also Justices, 3.

MASTER AND SERVANT:—

1. Clerk in bank—Qualified to receive retiring allowance—"Retiring with the consent of the directors"—Act by clerk contrary to the policy of the bank—Intimation to clerk to resign—Right to pension.—When a clerk breaks an unwritten but well recognized rule of his employer, and receives in consequence a letter requiring him to resign, that notice, although polite instead of peremptory language was used, is a dismissal.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiff, who had received such a notice, was not entitled to a retiring allowance; one of the conditions on which such an allowance was granted being that the applicant "retired with the consent of the directors."—STEPHENSON v. LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK, C.A., 183.

2. Contract to supply carriage and driver to commercial traveller—Goods left in carriage—Obligation to take care of carriage during temporary absence of traveller—Larceny by coachman—Liability of jobmaster for loss.—The plaintiff, a wholesale jeweller, entered into a contract with the defendant, a jobmaster, for the hire of a brougham and driver for the use of the plaintiff's traveller, and the brougham was fitted for the purpose of such use. The traveller left the brougham in the street for the purpose of getting his lunch, and while he was away the contents of the carriage were stolen, with the connivance of the coachman.

Held, that the defendant was liable, because there was an obligation on him, by virtue of the contract, to provide a careful and trustworthy driver who would safeguard the contents of the brougham during intervals when the traveller would be necessarily absent, and that the defendant was not the less liable because the breach of contract was occasioned by a criminal act on the part of the defendant's servant.

Abrahams v. Bullock, 50 W. R. 626, followed.—CHESHIRE v. BAILEY, K.B.D., 631.

3. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Accident arising out of and in the course of employment—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the deceased workman was an engine-driver in the employment of a railway company; that it was his duty to sign on for work at 7.45 every morning at an engine-shed near to which he lived and to which he could get, without crossing the line, by a path running by the side of the line from the road in which he lived; that on the day of the accident he left home at 6 o'clock and went along the line in the contrary direction to a signal-box, which was in the middle of the permanent way about a quarter of a mile distant from the engine-shed, in order to ask the signalman a question about the time of the passing of a train which he was charged with having run late a few days before; and that while he was making his way back along the line from the signal-box to the engine-shed he was accidentally run over by an engine and killed.

Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the deceased's employment.—BENSON v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO., C.A., 243; [1904] 1 K. B. 242; 73 L. J. K. B. 122; 89 L. T. 715.

4. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—Death from lightning—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—A bricklayer was killed by lightning while working at a height of 23 feet above the level of the ground on a scaffolding which was being used for the purpose of constructing a building more than 30 feet in height. In proceedings taken by his widow under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, expert evidence was given to the effect that the deceased man's risk of being struck by lightning was appreciably increased by reason of the exposed position in which he was working at the time.

Held, that the county court judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that the deceased was killed by an accident arising out of, as well as in the course of, his employment.—ANDREW v. FAILSWORTH INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, C.A., 451; [1904] 2 K. B. 32; 73 L. J. K. B. 510; 90 L. T. 611.

5. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Agreement—Registration of memorandum—Genuineness—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule II., s. 8.—Schedule II., section 8, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, provides that where the amount of compensation under the Act shall have been ascertained by agreement, a memorandum thereof shall be sent by any party interested to the registrar of the county court, who, "on being satisfied as to its genuineness," shall record it in a special register.

Held, that the registrar could not refuse to record the memorandum merely because owing to altered circumstances the workman was no longer entitled to the amount of compensation fixed by the agreement, but that his only duty was to ascertain whether the memorandum accurately represented the agreement which had been entered into.—BLAKE v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 503; 73 L. J. K. B. 179; 90 L. T. 433.

6. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Appeal—Costs—Refusal of judge to direct review of taxation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clause 12; Schedule II., clause 4.—An appeal will not lie to the Court of Appeal from the refusal of a county court judge to direct a review of taxation of the costs of an application to vary a weekly payment under Schedule I., clause 12, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—RIGBY & CO. v. COX, C.A., 195; [1904] 1 K. B. 358; 73 L. J. K. B. 80; 89 L. T. 717.

7. Employers' liability — Accident—Compensation —Apprentice—Infant—Election by infant to claim under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—Agreement not for the benefit of infant—Subsequent action to recover damages at common law—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 2 (b); s. 7, sub-section 2.—An apprentice, who was an infant, met with an accident in the course of his employment, and he agreed with his employers to accept a weekly payment amounting to half his wages in compensation, and signed a receipt, which stated that he elected to accept this sum under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims for compensation. Subsequently he brought an action against his employers at common law for damages in respect of the same injuries, based on their negligence in not having fenced the machine plane.

Held, that the Act by including an apprentice in the general word "workman" did not alter the law applicable to contracts made by infants, and that, it not being for the infant's benefit to accept compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, his election to accept the same did not bind him, and his claim under the Act was therefore no bar to his common law right to sue.

Decision of Bruce, J. (19 Times L. R. 665), affirmed. — STEPHENS v. DUDBRIDGE IRONWORKS CO., C.A., 644; [1904] 2 K. B. 225; 90 L. T. 838.

8. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Arising out of and in the course of employment—Unexplained accident—Burden of proof—Inference of fact—Presumption — Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the deceased workman, who was a fireman in the service of a railway company, was travelling by train, as he had a right to do, after he had finished work for the day, from the place where he had left his engine to the station where it was his duty to report himself, and that he fell from the train and was killed. It was admitted that the fall was the result of an accident, and that the accident happened in the course of his employment. The evidence as to how the accident happened was that he had a basket with him when he got into the train, and that he stood up to put it into the rack, that the train began to move on while he was standing by the door and that almost immediately afterwards he fell out.

Held, that there was evidence to justify the county court judge in drawing the inference of fact, apart from any question of presumption, that the accident not only happened in the course of the employment, but also arose out of the employment. —POMFRET v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO., C.A., 66; [1903] 2 K. B. 718; 72 L. J. K. B. 729; 89 L. T. 176.

9. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Average weekly earnings—Review of weekly payment—Fall in wages—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clauses 1 (b), 2, 12. —A haulier in a colliery was injured by an accident which for a time totally incapacitated him for work, and, by arrangement, his employers paid him one-half his weekly wages as compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Subsequently he was able to do light work, and his employers took him back into their employment as a lamp man, and paid him the same amount of wages as hauliers were then receiving, hauliers' wages having fallen since the accident. The employers thereupon discontinued the weekly payment. The workman filed a request for arbitration under the Act of 1897 to assess the weekly payment. The county court judge refused to award any weekly payment upon the ground that the maximum which had been originally fixed on the average weekly earnings before the accident was subject to variation according to the variation in the wages, and that, as the wages which the workman was receiving were the same as he would have received if there had been no accident and he had continued in the same employment, he was not entitled to any weekly sum as compensation.

Held, that the county court judge was wrong in holding that the original maximum was subject to variation, and that he was bound as a matter of law to award the workman no weekly sum as compensation, but that he should consider, in the exercise of his discretion, whether he would award any, and if so what, proportion of the difference between the wages earned by the workman previous to the accident and the wages which he was earning in the new employment since the accident.—JAMES v. OCEAN COAL CO., C.A., 497; [1904] 2 K. B. 213; 90 L. T. 834.

10. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation —Award by arbitrator appointed by a county court judge—Appeal to Court of Appeal—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37) Schedule II., clause 4. — Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, no appeal lies direct to the Court of Appeal from the award of an arbitrator appointed by a county court judge to assess a claim for compensation under that Act.—GIBSON v. WORMALD, C.A., 661; [1904] 2 K. B. 40; 73 L. J. K. B. 491.

11. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building—Scaffolding—Ladder—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the injured workman and another man were engaged at the time of the accident in whitewashing the interior of a shed more than thirty feet in height, and that they made use of a ladder by either standing or sitting on the rungs for the purpose of applying the whitewash to the higher parts of the shed. The county court judge found as a fact that the ladder was not a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act.

Held, that this finding was not wrong in point of law.—CROWTHER v. WEST RIDING WINDOW CLEANING CO., C.A., 374; [1904] 1 K. B. 232; 73 L. J. K. B. 71.

12. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Costs—Review of amount fixed by award or agreement—Interlocutory or original proceeding—Discretion of county court judge—Practice—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clause 12.—A county court judge has no jurisdiction to give a general direction to the registrar that the costs of all applications under clause 12 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to vary the amount of compensation fixed by award or agreement shall be treated as a mere application in the matter of the arbitration, and not as an original arbitration or proceeding.—RIGBY & CO. v. COX (No. 2), K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 208; 73 L. J. K. B. 690.

13. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Damages—Payments by employer—Receipts "without prejudice"—"Proceeding"—Action against third person—Exercise of "option"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 6.—The mere fact that a workman has received money from his employer and given receipts therefor, which receipts are expressed to be without prejudice, does not amount to an exercise of his option, under section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to proceed against the employer, so as to preclude him from subsequently pursuing any legal remedy which he may have against some person other than the employer. And in dealing with any particular case it should be regarded as a matter of substance, so that the omission of the words "without prejudice" from the first receipt will not irrevocably bind the workman so as to make it impossible for him to pursue his legal remedy, notwithstanding that the subsequent payments show that the parties must, as between themselves, have treated him as not irrevocably bound by the first payment.—OLIVER v. NAUTILUS STEAM SHIPPING CO., C.A., 200; [1903] 2 K. B. 639; 73 L. J. K. B. 857; 89 L. T. 318.

14. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dependants—Payment to or for benefit of dependants—Power to exclude any dependant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (4) (5) (6).—An arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, has no power, when awarding compensation to the dependants of a deceased workman, to direct payment of the compensation money in such a way as may result in the exclusion of any dependant who is not sui juris.—MANCHESTER v. CARLTON IRON CO., C.A., 291; 89 L. T. 730.

15. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Disease—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1.—A workman who was employed in a wool-combing factory had to cart some wool to the washing machine in the factory, and in doing so he had to pass close to some Persian wool, and thereby caught anthrax, which was a disease commonly imported in Persian wool.

A workman, who was employed as a wool sorter in a factory, in the course of his duty had to handle Persian wool, from which he caught anthrax.

Held, that, in both cases, the injury was caused by "accident" arising out of and in the course of the employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—HIGGINS v. CAMPBELL, C.A., 195; [1904] 1 K. B. 328; 73 L. J. K. B. 158; 89 L. T. 660.

16. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dock—Ship in dock—Sailor—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7), s. 104.—A sailor who meets with an accidental injury while engaged in clearing out the hold of a ship lying in dock is entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Per Collins, M.R., and Cozens-Hardy, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting.—GRIFFIN v. HOULDER LINE (LIMITED), C.A., 323; [1904] 1 K. B. 510; 73 L. J. K. B. 202; 90 L. T. 142.

17. Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Employment—Bricklayer paid so much an hour—Accident during dinner hour—Workman permitted to remain on premises—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 1, sub section 1.—A workman employed on a building which exceeded thirty feet in height was paid by the hour for the number of hours per week that he was actually engaged on his work, not including the midday dinner hour. The workman, without being under any obligation to do so, remained on the premises during the dinner hour, and was eating his dinner under a wall which he had been building when the wall was blown down and he was injured.

Held, that the action arose out of and in the course of his employment within section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the dinner hour not causing a break in the workman's employment with his master.—BLOVETT v. SAWYER, C.A., 503; [1904] 1 K. B. 271; 73 L. J. K. B. 155; 89 L. T. 658.

18. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Building exceeding thirty feet in height in which more than twenty persons are employed—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), s. 105, sub-section 2.—A building which exceeds thirty feet in height and in which more than twenty persons, not being domestic servants, are employed for wages, is not constituted a factory for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by virtue of section 105, sub-section 2, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901.—DYER v. SWIFT CYCLE CO., C.A., 483; [1904] 2 K. B. 36; 73 L. J. K. B. 566; 90 L. T. 613.

19. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Warehouse—Wholesale business—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A place which is used for storing goods for sale in a wholesale business, and as ancillary thereto, is a "warehouse" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Burr v Whiteley, 19 Times L. R. 117, discussed.—GREEN v. BRITTEN, C.A., 198; [1904] 1 K. B. 259; 73 L. J. K. B. 126; 89 L. T. 713.

20. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Factory"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—Every wharf is a factory within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Hall v. Snowden, Hubbard, & Co., 47 W. R. 486, [1899] 2 Q. B. 136, is overruled by Raine v. Jobson & Co., 49 W. R. 705, [1901] A. C. 404.—BARRETT v. KEMP, C.A., 257; [1904] 1 K. B. 517; 73 L. J. K. B. 138; 90 L. T. 305.

21. Employers' liability—"Accident"—Compensation—Injury—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—A workman of average health and strength unintentionally injured himself by overstrain while turning a machine in the course of his ordinary work for his employer.

Held, that this was an "accident" within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, where the word is used in the popular and ordinary sense, and the workman was therefore entitled to compensation thereunder.

Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed.

Hensey v. White, 48 W. R. 257, [1900] 1 Q. B. 481, overruled.—FENTON v. THORLEY, H.L., 81; [1903] A. C. 443; 72 L. J. K. B. 787; 89 L. T. 314.

22. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Medical examination of workman—Refusal to submit to examination by medical referee—Stay of proceedings—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (11).—Where a workman receiving weekly payments under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, has, on being required by his employer, submitted himself to examination by a medical man provided and paid by the employer, in accordance with clause 11 of the first schedule to the Act, it is optional with the workman whether he should submit himself to further examination by one of the medical referees appointed under the Act. His refusal to submit himself to such further examination is no ground for staying proceedings in an arbitration commenced by him under the Act.—NEAGLE v. NIXON'S NAVIGATION CO., C.A., 356; [1904] 1 K. B. 339; 73 L. J. K. B. 165; 90 L. T. 49.

23. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation Partial incapacity—Weekly payment—Earnings before accident—Earnings after accident—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clause 2.—Where a workman claiming compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is at the time of the arbitration only partially incapacitated, and has resumed work and is earning wages, but those wages are less than half the wages he was earning before the accident, there is no general rule by which the arbitrator ought, in assessing compensation, to award the maximum weekly payment allowed by the Act—viz., a payment of half the amount of the average weekly earnings before the accident; but he must exercise his discretion in each particular case.—WEBSTER v. SHARP, C.A., 275; [1904] 1 K. B. 218; 73 L. J. K. B. 141; 89 L. T. 627.

24. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Railway guard—Earnings—Lodging allowances—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1), (a), (i).—The House affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal, Sharpe v. Midland Railway Co., [1903] 2 K. B. 26, without hearing the respondent's counsel, holding that the lodging allowances were part of the earnings of the railway guard.—MIDLAND RAILWAY CO. v. SHARPE, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 349; 73 L. J. K. B. 666.

25. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Reviewing award—Earnings—Business set up since accident—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clauses 2, 12.—Upon an application by employers under clause 12 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to review a weekly payment awarded to the injured workman under the Act, the arbitrator must take into consideration the fact that the workman is earning profits from a business which he set up after the accident, and which he carries on for himself.—NORMAN v. WALDER, C.A., 402; [1904] 2 K. B. 27; 73 L. J. K. B. 461; 90 L. T. 531.

26. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Scheme of compensation—Right to take proceedings independently of Act—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 2 (b); s. 3, sub-section 1.—A workman contracted with his employers to accept a scheme of compensation in substitution for the benefits which he might claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The scheme, which was duly certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies under section 3, sub-section 1, of the Act, made provision for payments in cases of fatal and non-fatal accidents, and provided that the contributions made by the employers to the fund were to be in lieu of and to exempt them from any further claims which otherwise the workmen might be entitled to prosecute as the result of accidents occurring during their employment. The workman having been killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, his widow received certain weekly payments under the scheme, and then brought an action against the employers under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to recover damages for the death of her husband.

Held, that she was precluded from suing by section 1, sub-section 2 (b), and section 3, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—TAYLOR v. HAMSTEAD COLLIERY CO., C.A., 417; [1904] 1 K. B. 838; 73 L. J. K. B. 469; 90 L. T. 363.

27. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Seaman—Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42.—A man employed on a sailing barge whose main duty is to load and unload her, but who in fact assists in her navigation, such barge being suitable for coasting purposes, and is in fact being used on the sea reaches of the Thames, is a seaman, and so is not entitled to sue for personal damages for personal injuries under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880.—CORBETT v. PEARCE, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 422; 90 L. T. 781.

28. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Undertakers"—"Actual use or occupation"—Warehouse—Making additions to—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), s. 104—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—The respondents had contracted with the Government to erect certain pigeon-holes or cupboards in a warehouse in Woolwich Dockyard for storing military accoutrements. The warehouse had just been built for the Government by another contractor, and it consisted of two floors, each about 25 feet high, the pigeon-holes which were being erected by the respondents being on the upper floor. A workman in the employment of the respondents was killed by an accident while engaged in the work of erecting the pigeon-holes. At that time the lower floor was already occupied for the storage of military accoutrements, and a foreman and two men in the employment of the building contractor were engaged, in the same room where the respondents were erecting the pigeon-holes, finishing doors, putting on locks and painting, and the Government by their own workmen were fixing hydraulic cranes at each end of the room. The clerk of the works for the Government was in charge of the work to see that it was properly carried out. In proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897,

Held, that the respondents had the actual use or occupation of a definite portion of the warehouse for the purpose of carrying on the work within the meaning of section 104 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and were therefore liable as the undertakers within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Bartell v. Gray & Co., 50 W. R. 310, [1902] 1 K. B. 225, followed.—WEAVING v. KIRK, C.A., 209; [1904] 1 K. B. 213; 73 L. J. K. B. 77; 89 L. T. 577.

29. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Undertakers—Sub-contractor—Repair of buildings—Sub-contract for supply of scaffolding—Indemnity—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 4.—J., having contracted to paint the outside of a building more than thirty feet in height, entered into a sub-contract with P., whereby P. undertook the supply, fixing, and subsequent removal of certain cradles to be used as scaffolding in the work of painting. A workman in the employment of P. was accidently killed while engaged in the work of removing the cradles. The dependants of the deceased workman took proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, against both J. and P.

Held, that the applicants were entitled to an award of compensation against J., and that J. was entitled to be indemnified by P.—MCCABE v. JOPLING, C.A., 358; [1904] 1 K. B. 222; 73 L. J. K. B. 129; 89 L. T. 624.

30. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly payment—Application to review—Change of circumstances—Res judicata—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clause 12.—The employer of a workman receiving weekly payments under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applied for a review of the weekly payment, under clause 12 of the 1st schedule to the Act, upon the ground that the workman was no longer incapacitated for work.

The county court judge, acting upon the evidence of medical experts that the workman was not incapacitated for work, reduced the weekly payment to the nominal sum of 1d.

Subsequently the workman applied for a review of the weekly payment upon the ground that since the previous hearing he had repeatedly been refused, and had been unable to obtain, work owing to incapacity arising from his physical condition caused by the accident.

The county court judge refused to entertain the application, upon the ground that the matter was res judicata, and that no change of circumstances since the previous hearing was alleged which would give him jurisdiction to review the weekly payment.

Held (allowing the appeal), that the matter was not res judicata, and that sufficient change of circumstances was alleged to give the judge jurisdiction to entertain the application.

Crossfield & Sons v. Tanian, 82 L. T. Rep. 813, [1900] 2 Q. B. 629, distinguished.—SHARMAN v. HOLLIDAY & GREENWOOD, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 235; 73 L. J. K. B. 176; 90 L. T. 46.

31. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Wharf—Steamship lying alongside wharf—Fireman—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—The applicant, who was a seaman on the ship's articles, was employed as a fireman on board a passenger steamer, which made daily trips from Cardiff to places in the Bristol Channel. On the evening of the 20th of August the steamer arrived at Cardiff, and was made fast to a landing-stage outside the docks, where she remained until the following morning. She was timed to leave Cardiff at 8 15 a.m. on the 21st August. At 8.17 a.m. on that day, while she was still made fast to the landing stage, with the gangways still out, the applicant, while attending to the boilers, was injured by the bursting of one of the boiler tubes. In proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Held (by Collins, M.R., and Romer, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting), that the applicant was not at the time of the accident employed "about" the landing-stage, and therefore not about a factory within section 7 of the Act, his employment having no connection with the purposes for which his employers had the use of the landing stage.—OWENS v. CAMPBELL, C.A., 481; [1904] 2 K. B. 60; 73 L. J. K. B. 634; 90 L. T. 811.

32. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Workman"—Sempstress—Whether sempstress is a "workman."—A sempstress, who works at a sewing machine, and heats irons on a stove and irons materials, is a person "engaged in manual labour" within the definition of "workman" in section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and therefore entitled to the benefit of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880.—MAYNARD v. PETER ROBINSON (LIMITED), K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 136.

33. Truck Acts—Wages—Deductions—Set-off—Sum payable under magistrate's order.—A workman having absented himself from work in breach of his contract of employment, his employers took proceedings against him under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and obtained an order against him for payment of a sum of money by instalments payable on days on which his wages became due. On the day on which the first instalment became payable, the employers when paying him his wages deducted therefrom the amount of the instalment.

Held, that such deduction was not an offence against section 3 of the Truck Act, 1831.—WILLIAMS v. NORTH'S NAVIGATION COLLIERIES, C.A., 564; [1904] 2 K. B. 44; 73 L. J. K. B. 575.

34. Truck Acts—Wages—Payment otherwise than in coin—Payment in full with part to be handed back—Illegal payment.—The respondent, a manufacturer employing several workmen, had since the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, adopted the practice of paying his workpeople their wages fortnightly in full, but at the time of such payment a slip of paper was handed to each workman on which was written a sum equal to 2d. in the pound on the amount of the wages handed to the workmen, and the sum so indicated on the paper was then handed back by the workman to the respondent's cashier. This system was explained and was understood by the workmen as being intended to provide for the insurance premiums which the employer himself paid to cover his own liability in respect of accidents under the Workmen's Compensation Act. In accordance with this system the respondent paid a workman his wages (£2 5s.) in full, and at the same time handed him a slip of paper on which was written 4½d., which the workman then paid to the respondent.

Held, that there was not a payment of a part of the wages otherwise than in current coin, and that the respondent had committed no offence against section 3 of the Truck Act, 1831.—OWNER v. HOOPER, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 130.

See also Trade Union, 1, 2.

MERGER:—

Charge—Intestacy of portioner—Owner of land next-of-kin—No administration—Merger of beneficial interest.—A father was the settlor of a portion term which became vested in his son. The father became beneficially entitled to the portion on the decease of his son intestate in the father's lifetime. The father did not take out letters of administration to the son.

Held, that it was for the benefit of the father that the portion should sink into the estate. That the father's own beneficial interest in the charge, as the sole next-of-kin of the son, had merged in the estate.—FRENCH BREWSTER, RE, WALTERS v. FRENCH BREWSTER, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 377; [1904] 1 Ch. 713; 73 L. J. Ch. 405; 90 L. T. 378.

See also Bankruptcy, 8.

METROPOLIS:—

1. Building—Drainage of houses on low-lying land—Recovery of penalty—Time for commencing proceedings—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.), ss. 122, 200, sub-section 9.—Section 122 of the London Building Act, 1894, enacts that "It shall not be lawful for any person upon land of which the surface is below the level of Trinity high-water mark, and which is so situate as not to admit of being drained by gravitation into an existing sewer of the council, to erect any building to be used wholly or in part as a dwelling-house . . . except with the permission of the council."

Low-lying land, if it is situate at such a level that the drainage from it finds its way by gravitation into an existing sewer of the council under the ordinary conditions of the sewer, does not come within the above prohibition merely because that sewer during a substantial number of days in each year is so surcharged with flood water that the drainage is then prevented from passing into it.

Proceedings to recover a penalty under section 200, sub-section 9, of the Act, for contravening the above section are in time if they are taken within six months of the completion of the erection of the building, although more than six months have elapsed since the commencement of the erection.—ELLIS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 381; [1904] 1 K. B. 283; 73 L. J. K. B. 151; 90 L. T. 206.

2. Building—Raising party-wall by building owner—Lease of premises—Subsequent user of raised party-wall by adjoining owner—Right of lessee to proportion of expense of raising wall—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.), ss. 88-95.—The owner of a house in London, acting under the powers of the London Building Act, 1894, raised at his own expense the party-wall separating that house from the adjoining one. Subsequently he granted a lease of the house to the appellant for twenty-one years. The respondent, who was the owner of the adjoining house, being desirous of rebuilding the house, served notice on the appellant of the work which he proposed to execute, and which included the use of the raised party-wall beyond the use thereof made by him before the alteration. The appellant did not express his consent to the notice, and the matters in difference were thereupon referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Act. The appellant claimed (inter alia), under section 95, sub-section 2, of the Act, a proportion of the original expense of raising the party-wall, such claim being made in respect of the increased user thereof by the respondent. The arbitrators awarded the appellant a sum of money in respect of this claim.

Held, that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim, as the Act only contemplated a proportion of the original expense of raising the party-wall being paid to the person who actually incurred the expense, and not to a person who became tenant after the expense had been incurred.—STONE AND HASTIE, RE, C.A., 130; [1903] 2 K. B. 463; 72 L. J. K. B. 846; 89 L. T. 353.

3. Contract between members of the corporation and a company—Interest of a member as shareholder—"Interested or concerned in any company"—City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c clxiii.), s. 42—City of London Sewers Act, 1851, s. 53.—The 42nd section of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, provides that any contract entered into by any commissioner of sewers or member of the corporation, by or on behalf of the commissioners, who is "directly or indirectly interested or concerned" therein shall be void. The prohibition of such contracts extends to the case where members of the corporation are shareholders in a company at the time when the contract with the City Corporation is entered into, but does not apply where members subsequently become shareholders in a company to which the contract is transferred.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (49 W. R. 306, [1901] 1 Ch. 602) affirmed.—CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO. v. LONDON CORPORATION, H.L., 158; [1903] A. C. 434; 72 L. J. Ch. 737; 89 L. T. 310.

4. Drain or sewer—Combined system under order—Authority given to surveyor to approve by sanitary authority.—In 1868 the owner of certain houses applied, in pursuance of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, for permission to drain the houses by means of a combined drain.

The application was filed in a book and signed by the surveyor of the sanitary authority as approved, in pursuance of a resolution passed by such sanitary authority authorizing the surveyor "to grant applications for house drainage when they are regular, involving no special point for the consideration of the board."

There was no other evidence of the approval of the sanitary authority or of an order.

Held, that the pipe draining the houses was a sewer and not a drain.—HIGH v. BILLINGS, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 550.

5. "Drain" or "sewer"—Order for combined drainage—Plan—Connection not shown on plan—Unauthorized act.—A metropolitan vestry passed a resolution adopting a plan for the combined drainage of two contiguous houses, Nos. 27 and 29, in a street. The plan merely showed that the drains, which were represented by single lines, passed diagonally underneath the houses and united in front of them before entering the sewer in the street; it did not show in detail all the particular drains which were intended to be provided within the combined area. On the drains being constructed, a connection was made between the drain of No. 29 and a sink at the back of No. 27. It was found as a fact that this connection had been made with the approval of the vestry's surveyor.

Held, that the drain of No. 29 was a "drain" and not a "sewer" within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855.—HEAVER'S EXECUTORS v. FULHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 383; 73 L. J. K. B. 715.

6. Drainage—Removal of old disused drains—Byelaw or regulation and direction—Metropolis Manage- ment Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 76, 83.—By regulation 29 of the respondents all disused drains were to be broken up and destroyed, and the materials and foul earth removed and dry earth, ballast, or brick rubbish substituted.

By section 83 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a penalty is provided if any drain thereinbefore mentioned is found not to have been provided according to the directions or regulations of the respondents.

The appellants constructed new drains, which were connected with the respondents' sewer. On the premises were old and disused drains which were not physically joined or connected with the new drains. The old drains were not taken out.

Held, that the regulation was rightly made, and the appellants were properly convicted for constructing the new drain not in accordance with the directions of the respondents.—LONDON SCHOOL BOARD v. FULHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 116.

7. Drains—Bye-laws—Reconstruction of drain of old building—Necessity of intercepting trap—Work "in any building"—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 202.—By a bye-law made under the powers of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, it was provided that every person who should construct or reconstruct any pipe or drain, or other means of communicating with sewers, so far as he should effect any such works "in any building" erected before the confirmation of the bye-laws, should provide in such drain a suitable and efficient intercepting trap.

Held, that the word "in"—in the words "in any building"—meant, not "inside the building," but "in connection with the building," and that consequently the bye-law applied to the reconstruction of a drain in connection with an old building erected before the confirmation of the bye-laws, as the reconstruction of the drain was a work "in" such building, although such drain was outside the building, and that such drain ought to be reconstructed with an efficient intercepting trap, as required by the bye-law.—KINGSLAND v. HABEN, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 449.

8. "Dwelling-house"—"To be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class"—Intention and adaptation of houses for persons of working class only—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 13 (5), 150—London Building Act, 1894 (Amendment) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. cxxxvii.), s. 4.—By section 13 (5) of the London Building Act, 1894, a person may under the conditions therein prescribed, without the consent of the London County Council, alter or re-erect a building or structure existing at the time of the passing of the Act, but so that such re-erected building shall not be within the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway except in so far as the existing building was within the prescribed distance; and the sub-section ends with the proviso, as amended by section 4 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Amendment) Act, 1898: "Provided always, that no dwelling-house to be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class shall without the consent of the council be erected or re-erected within a distance of twenty feet from the centre of the roadway to a height exceeding the distance of the front or nearest external wall of such building from the opposite side of such street."

Held, that the words "to be inhabited" mean "intended to be inhabited," and that, with regard to such intention, the proper test to apply is: If the builder constructs the houses in such a way that it is practically certain that when constructed they would ultimately be inhabited by persons of the working class, and that their ultimate destination would be to become working-class tenements, although they might be in the hands of intermediate tenants, then they are "dwelling-houses to be inhabited by the working class"; and the mere fact that the builder had no intention that the houses should be occupied by persons of the working class only, but that he intended them for occupation by anyone who might take them, does not prevent them from being "dwelling-houses to be inhabited by the working class."

Held, further, with regard to the question of adaptation, that the proper test as to whether the houses are "adapted to be inhabited" by persons of the working class is not whether the houses are specially adapted for habitation by persons of the working class only, but whether they are, by reason of their structure, substantially adapted for habitation by persons who live in the same way as the working class live—that is, in small flats or separate tenements in the same house—and who would be liable to the same danger of overcrowding.—CROW v. DAVIS, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 407.

9. Notice before beginning to build—Authority conferred on dock company by private Act inconsistent with public Act—Surrey Commercial Dock Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxii.), s. 4—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 76.—The appellants, a dock company incorporated by Act of Parliament, obtained in 1894 statutory authority to extend and alter their works. In order to carry out those alterations it became necessary for the appellants to pull down a certain building and erect another on another site within the dock premises. This work they carried out, but gave no notice to the local authority of their intention to erect the new building.

Held, that there was no duty on the part of the appellants to give such notice of their intention to build under section 76 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, which section provides that before beginning to lay or dig out the foundations of any new building seven days' notice is to be given to the local authority by the person intending to build, as the control of the local authority under that Act was inconsistent with the powers conferred upon the appellants under their statutory authority.—SURREY COMMERCIAL DOCKS CO. v. BERMONDSEY CORPORATION, K.B.D., 446; [1904] 1 K. B. 474; 73 L. J. K. B. 293; 90 L. T. 123.

10. Obstruction—Information laid by an inspector of streets—"On behalf of" borough council—Validity.—An inspector of streets may lay an information for an offence under section 60 (7) of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, and it makes no difference that it purports to be laid "on behalf of" a borough council.—ALLMAN v. HARDCASTLE, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 553.

11. Open space—Hoarding—Adjoining landowner—Access of light—Building—Right to sue without joining Attorney-General—Metropolitan Open Spaces Acts, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 35), s. 1; 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 34), s. 7; 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 32), s. 4—Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72), s. 3.—A local authority has, under the Metropolitan Open Spaces Acts, 1877, 1881, and 1887, and the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884, control over open spaces for limited purposes only. It cannot, for example, use its interest in a disused burial ground either for the purpose of compelling an adjoining owner to give the public a right of way elsewhere or to prevent the acquisition by an adjoining owner of any rights in respect of any new building he may erect.

B., an adjoining landowner, erected flats overlooking an open space. The local authority threatened to erect a hoarding in the open space which would interfere with B.'s lights. B. thereupon brought an action for an injunction to restrain the council from erecting any such screen as would interfere or cause damage to himself and the tenants of his flats.

Held, that B. was entitled to an injunction.

Judgment of Buckley, J. (51 W. R. 109), reversed. —BOYCE v. PADDINGTON BOROUGH COUNCIL, C.A., 114; [1903] 2 Ch. 556; 72 L. J. Ch. 695; 89 L. T. 383.

12. Public health—Nuisance—Intimitation notice threatening proceedings—Repair of sewer in consequence of such notice—Right of owner to recover cost of work from sanitary authority—Voluntary work—Work done under compulsion—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 3, 4.—The plaintiff, the owner of certain premises, was served by the defendants with an intimation notice under section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, of the existence of a nuisance on his premises, and requiring him to abate the same within seven days, failing which the sanitary authority would commence proceedings against him by the service of a statutory notice. The nuisance was specified as a defective "drain." The plaintiff complied with the notice, and during the course of the work it was discovered that the so-called "drain" was in fact a "sewer," which was legally repairable by the defendants. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action to recover from the defendants the money he had expended in complying with their notice.

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover such expenses, because work done in compliance with an intimation notice under section 3 of the above Act, as distinguished from an abatement notice under section 4, must be regarded as work done voluntarily, and not under compulsion.

Thompson and Norris Manufacturing Co. v. Hawes, 59 J. P. 580, followed —OLIVER v. CAMBERWELL CORPORATION, K.B.D., 511; 90 L. T. 285.

13. Public health—Public convenience—Approaches—Subway—Trespass—Subsoil of roadway and footway—Injunction—Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 44.—By the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 44, power was given to a sanitary authority to construct and maintain public sanitary conveniences in situations where they deem the same to be required, and to defray the expense of providing such conveniences and of any damage occasioned to any person by the construction thereof, and the expense of keeping the same in good order; and for this purpose the subsoil of the road, exclusive of the footway adjoining a building, was vested in the sanitary authority.

A sanitary authority constructed under the middle of a public thoroughfare public lavatories, which were so built as to infringe upon the subsoil of the plaintiffs, who were the owners of certain premises on one side. On each side of the street were staircases which communicated with subways, which ran from side to side of the street, and so communicated with the convenience. The subways were capable of being used as the means of persons passing from one side of the street to the other, and were wider than was absolutely necessary for persons using these conveniences. The statute did not empower the sanitary authority to construct subways.

Held, that, as it appeared from the evidence, the real object of the defendants was to construct a means of passage by which persons could cross the road in safety, it was a subway; that they had exceeded their statutory powers, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against the defendants.

Decision of Joyce, J. (50 W. R. 268, [1902] 1 Ch. 269), reversed.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. WESTMINSTER CORPORATION, C.A., 596; [1904] 1 Ch. 759; 73 L. J. Ch. 386; 90 L. T. 461.

14. Rates—Lands taken compulsorily—Assessment for poor rate—Liability for deficiency in general rate—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 133—London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), s. 10 (2).—Section 10 of the London Government Act, 1899, under which the general rate and poor rate are to be made and levied as one rate as if it were a poor rate, does not increase the liability imposed by section 133 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on promoters of undertakings to make good the deficiency in the poor rate caused by their taking lands for the purposes of their undertaking, and they are only liable to make good the deficiency in that proportion of the general rate which represents the poor rate.

Decision of Wright, J. (51 W. R. 255) affirmed. —ISLINGTON CORPORATION v. LONDON SCHOOL BOARD, C.A., 115; [1903] 2 K. B. 354; 72 L. J. K. B. 677; 89 L. T. 53

15. Smoke—Chimney of club—Smoke from cooking ranges and heating apparatus—"Private dwelling-house"—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 24 (b).—The chimney of a club of 750 members, such club containing the usual club accommodation, emitting smoke from the cooking ranges and the furnaces of a vertical boiler used for heating the premises, is not the chimney of a "private dwelling-house" within the exception contained in section 24 (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.—MCNAIR v. BAKER, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 208; 73 L. J. K. B. 120; 90 L. T. 24.

16. Smoke nuisance—Notice to abate—Notice to prevent recurrence—Prohibition order—Specifying works—Evidence—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 4, 5, 130, Schedule III.—Before a notice is served under section 4 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, requiring the person served to do what is necessary for preventing a recurrence of the nuisance, it is not necessary that a notice requiring such person to abate the nuisance under section 4 (1) shall have been served previously or included in such notice. Therefore, a notice having been given under section 4 (2), a court of summary jurisdiction can make an order under section 5 prohibiting a recurrence of the nuisance and specifying works to be executed, where the only notice served has been under section 4 (2), if such court is satisfied that the nuisance, although abated, is likely to recur.

On the hearing of informations and complaints under section 5 (1) (b), the respondents proved the nuisances alleged, but offered no evidence as to how the black smoke which caused the nuisances had been caused or as to what works were necessary to abate or prevent such nuisances.

The appellants' witnesses stated that the black smoke might have been caused by two furnace doors being open at the same time.

The magistrate determined that the respondents were entitled to a prohibition order, and thereupon the appellants required that the order should specify the works they were to execute under section 5 (5), but insisted that, the case being closed, the magistrate was precluded from hearing further evidence as to the works necessary. The magistrate therefore added to his prohibition order a direction to the appellants to fit up apparatus to prevent the furnace doors being opened simultaneously.

Held, that the order was valid. — CENTRAL LONDON RAILWAY v. HAMMERSMITH CORPORATION, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 645.

17. Street opened by water company—Reinstatement of street by contractor employed by local authority—Power of local authority to recover expenses of supervising and superintending the works—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 114. —Where the soil of a street in the metropolis has been opened up by a water company, the local authority can, by virtue of section 114 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, recover the expenses of superintending and supervising the filling in and making good the soil so opened up.—NEW RIVER CO. v. WESTMINSTER CORPORATION, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 792.

18. "Uniting" of buildings—Blocks of flats commenced as separate buildings but finished as single building.—Section 77, sub-section 1, of the London Building Act, 1894, which prohibits the "uniting" of buildings except where they are wholly in one occupation or are constructed or adapted to be so, applies only to the uniting of buildings completely erected, in the first instance, as separate structures, and does not apply to the uniting of separate buildings in the course of erection for the purpose transforming them into and finishing them as a single separate structure.

Semble, that pushing a covered way between two buildings is not "uniting" the buildings within the sub-section.—GOODCHILD v. MATTHEWS, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 369.

See also Gas, 1; Highway, 7; Landlord and Tenant, 11; Local Government, 6, 7, 9.

MINES:—

1. Owner—Duty to fence—Public well in shaft of disused mine—Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), ss. 13, 41—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s 64.—By section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is provided that all existing wells "shall vest in and be under the control of" the local authority.

By section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, it is provided that "Where any mine . . . is abandoned, or the working thereof discontinued . . . the owners thereof, and every other person interested in the minerals of the mine, shall cause the top of the shaft . . . to be kept securely fenced for the prevention of accidents."

By section 41 of the same statute "the term 'mine' includes . . . all the shafts . . . in and adjacent to a mine . . . and belonging to the mine"; and "the term 'owner' . . . means any person or body corporate, who is the immediate proprietor, or lessee, or occupier of any mine . . . but does not include a person or body corporate who . . . is merely the owner of the soil and not interested in the minerals of the mines."

The shaft of an abandoned mine having become flooded with water, was used as a public well, and as such became vested in the defendants, the local authority. Owing to the top of the shaft being unfenced a horse belonging to the plaintiff fell down the well and was injured. In an action to recover from the defendants damages arising, owing to their negligence in not fencing the wall as required by section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872,

Held, that the defendants were not the "owners" of the mine or of the shaft within the meaning of section 41 of that Act, and were, therefore, not liable in an action for damage sustained owing to the top of the shaft not having been fenced as required by section 13.—KNUCKEY v. REDRUTH RURAL COUNCIL. K.B.D, 558; [1904] 1 K. B. 382; 73 L. J. K. B. 265; 90 L. T. 226.

2. Right to let down surface—Inclosure Act—Award—Manorial rights.—By an Inclosure Act and award certain waste land was allotted amongst commoners. The Act provided that nothing therein contained should be construed to diminish the rights of the lord of the manor in respect to his seignory and royalties except in respect of his ownership of the soil to be enclosed. And the Act further provided that the lord and his successors should hold and enjoy all mines and quarries under the waste together with the liberty of searching for, winning and working the same, as fully and freely as if that Act had not been passed, and that without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing. And the Act further provided a summary means by which any person injured through the lord's working of the mines should be compensated by the occupiers of allotments in the same township.

Held, in action brought by surface owners against an assign of the lord to restrain by injunction any injury to the surface by mining operations, that there was nothing in the Inclosure Act to deprive a surface owner of his common law right of support (the clause as to compensation in the Act relating to surface user only), and that consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction.—BISHOP AUCKLAND INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY v. BUTTERWORTH COLLIERY, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 90 L. T. 149.

MISTAKE:—

Banker—Customer—Money paid under mistake of fact.—The defendants, who were foreign bankers, were in the habit of making advances to K., who then purchased goods which the defendants held as security; when K. found a purchaser he assigned the right to receive the purchase-money to the defendants, who accordingly released the goods. K. also carried on the same system with B. & Co. The plaintiffs bought from K. two parcels, the one released by the defendants and the other by B. & Co. K. instructed the plaintiffs to pay the defendants and B. & Co. respectively for the goods so purchased. By mistake the plaintiffs paid both sums to the defendants, who credited K.'s account, notifying K. of their having done so. The defendants acting bonâ fide continued to make advances to K., who knew of the mistake, but did not disclose it, and afterwards became bankrupt. The plaintiffs sought to recover from the defendants the sum which should have been paid to B. & Co. as money paid under mistake of fact.

Held, that the defendants were liable to refund the money which had been paid to them under a mistake of fact, even though they had paid it away to a third party in ignorance of the mistake.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (51 W. R. 541), affirmed —CONTINENTAL CAOUTCHOUC AND GUTTA PERCHA CO. v. KLEINWORT, C.A., 489; 90 L. T. 474.

See also Company, 13.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Assignment—Mortgage debt—Assignment by way of sub-mortgage—Notice of assignment given by executors of sub-mortgage—Validity of notice—Judica- ture Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6—Mortgage by client to solicitor—Receipt for sum exceeding actual advance—Right of assignee to rely on receipt—Constructive notice—Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 3, sub-section 1.—The defendants, who were clients of H., a solicitor, executed a mortgage deed in favour of L., who was a clerk in the service of H., to secure £9,500, the receipt of which sum they thereby acknowledged. L. assigned the mortgage debt and security to H., and H. by way of sub-mortgage assigned the debt and security to E., who was also a client of his, to secure an advance of £6,000. Neither H. nor E. gave the defendants notice of either assignment. After the death of E. his executors gave notice in writing to the defendants of both the assignments, and brought an action on the covenant for repayment contained in the original mortgage.

Held, that the notice given by the plaintiffs to the defendants was good notice under section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873; and that, even if a less sum than £9,200 had actually been advanced to the defendants, the plaintiffs were entitled to rely on the statement by the defendants in the original mortgage that they had received that sum in full.

Bickerton v. Walker, 34 W. R. 141, 31 Ch. D. 151, followed.—BATEMAN v. HUNT, C.A., 609.

2. Clog on equity of redemption—Security for loan—Stipulation that mortgagee may purchase at fixed price within definite time.—A stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagee is to have the option of purchasing the whole or any part of the mortgaged security within a definite time is invalid, as a clog on the equity of redemption, and the rule applies to a mortgage by a company of its debenture stock.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 439, [1903] 2 Ch. 1) affirmed.—SAMUEL v. JARRAH TIMBER CORPORATION, H.L., 673; [1904] A. C. 323; 73 L. J. Ch. 526; 90 L. T. 731.

3. Equitable mortgage—Deposit of title deeds with letters—Subsequent mortgage—Registration—Priority—Consideration—Irish Registry Act (6 Anne, c. 2).—Equitable charges on land are within the Irish Statute of Anne (6 Anne, c. 2).

S., whose account with the respondent bank was overdrawn, was being pressed by the manager to reduce his overdraft. At that time S. had contracted to purchase an estate, and S. undertook by letter to lodge the deed of conveyance, when executed, with the bank for the purpose of securing his overdraft, and further wrote for forbearance and that he would put his account in order. Later on, in 1895, the estate was conveyed to S., subject to a mortgage (as to which there was no question), and he shortly afterwards deposited the conveyance with the respondent bank without further memorandum, and no registration of letters or any other document was made. The charge of the appellants (trustees of S.'s marriage settlement) was created by a deed of mortgage dated and registered in 1896. The appellants had no notice of the bank's transaction with S.

Held, that forbearance was for a reasonable time extended to S., who expressly or impliedly asked for it, and that the letters amounted to a valid charge in equity which attached to S.'s interest in the estate when the property was conveyed to him, and constituted a transfer of his interest by way of security to the bank; that this was a conveyance within the Registration Act (6 Aune, c. 2), and not having been registered must be postponed to the appellants' registered mortgage.

Alliance Bank v. Broom, 2 Dr. & Sm. 289, approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in Ireland, sub. nom. In re Stevenson's Estate. [1902] 1 Ir. Rep. 23, reversed.—FULLERTON v. PROVINCIAL BANK OF IRELAND, H.L., 238; [1903] A. C. 309; 72 L. J. P. C 79; 89 L. T. 79.

4. Foreclosure—Account—Receiver—Repairs—Mortgagee not in possession—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 24, sub-section 8 (i.) (ii.) (iii.).—A receiver, not in possession of mortgaged premises, has no power to make repairs without the written authority of the mortgagee, and then only to the extent of the rents and profits. In taking an account, therefore, in foreclosure proceedings, the mortgagee is not entitled to the cost of such repairs made without such written authority.—WHITE v. METCALF, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 280; [1903] 2 Ch. 567; 72 L. J. Ch. 712; 89 L. T. 164.

5. Freeholds—Mortgagee in possession—Mortgagor barred after death of mortgagee—Devolution of mortgaged land from person entitled at date of bar—Realty or personalty—Trust for sale.—A mortgagee of freeholds under an instrument, which was in the form of a trust for sale, entered into possession in 1861, and so remained until his death. He died in 1864, leaving all his property to his wife (whom he appointed executrix) for life, but otherwise intestate. His brother was his heir-at-law and sole next-of-kin. His wife entered into possession and so remained until her death in 1900. The equity of redemption was barred in 1879.

Held, that on the death intestate in 1880 of the brother, his moiety of the mortgaged premises, having become realty in 1879, passed to his coheiresses.—LOVERIDGE, RE, PEARCE v. MARSH, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 138; [1904] 1 Ch. 518; 73 L. J. Ch. 15; 89 L. T. 503.

6. Guarantee—Principal and surety—Covenant by mortgagor and surety to pay mortgage debt—Surety's liability limited—Covenant by mortgagor alone to insure debt against loss—Contract with insurance office—Co-surety.—In a mortgage D. joined with the mortgagor in a joint and several covenant for repayment on demand, on failure to comply with which demand the statutory power of sale was to be exercisable without further notice. D.'s liability was limited to £1,000. The mortgagor alone covenanted with the mortgagees to insure in their names the debt and interest against loss with the plaintiff corporation. In a proposal for insurance made to the corporation, D.'s suretyship was mentioned, and this proposal was incorporated in and was to be deemed the basis of the "contract of "insurance" intended by, a contract (headed "Mortgage Insurance Policy") by which the corporation agreed that if the mortgagees should become entitled to exercise their power of sale, and should give notice thereof to the corporation, the latter would, after six months from receipt of a claim from the mortgagees, pay to them the principal moneys for the time being owing under the mortgage and the interest within a specified limit. Thereupon the mortgage debt and interest were to be transferred to the corporation, with all securities for the same. This contract contained no express mention of D.'s suretyship or of his being a party to the mortgage. The mortgagor having been made default, D. having died, and a sale of the property under the power having produced less by £984 12s. 6d. than was owing, the corporation, who had paid that sum, brought this action to recover it from D.'s estate under his guarantee. D.'s executrix claimed contribution from the corporation as being co-sureties with D.

Held, (1) that the contract was one of guarantee and not of insurance, but (2) (reversing the decision of Swinfen Eady, J., ante, p. 93, [1903] 2 Ch. 670), that the corporation were not co-sureties with D., but were sureties for him and the mortgagor, on the principle of Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. 160, and that D.'s estate was not entitled to contribution, but must bear the whole deficiency.—DENTON'S ESTATE, RE, LICENSES INSURANCE CORPORATION v DENTON. C.A.. 484; [1904] 2 Ch. 178; 73 L. J. Ch. 465; 90 L. T. 698.

7. Leaseholds — Mortgage by sub-demise prior to Conveyancing Act, 1881 —Statutory transfer subsequent to Act—"Benefit of mortgage"—Legal estate—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 27, Schedule III., Part II.—On granting or assigning a term of years a deed will pass the legal estate in the term, however inartistic, untechnical, or uncertain the words may be, provided that the intention that the legal estate shall pass is apparent from the terms of the deed, but in the absence of technical or proper words to pass the legal estate it will not be held to pass unless the intention to part with the possession is plain. Thus where a lessee executed a mortgage of his leaseholds by sub-demise before the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and the executors of the mortgagee, after the passing of that Act, by a transfer in the statutory Form A. given in Part II. of Schedule III., conveyed and transferred "the benefit of the said mortgage" to one of themselves, Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged leaseholds did not pass to the transferee.—BEACHEY, RE, HEATON v. BEACHEY, C.A., 309; [1904] 1 Ch. 67; 73 L. J. Ch. 68; 89 L. T. 685.

8. Mortgage to friendly society—Sale by mortgagees —Purchase by official of society—Sale set aside.—In a sale by mortgagees, who were the trustees of a friendly society, the mortgaged property was purchased by a member of the investment committee which had charge of realising the mortgage securities. At the sale the mortgagor had bid more than sufficient to cover principal, interest, and costs. In an action by the mortgagor against the mortgagees and the purchaser,

Held, that under the circumstances under which the sale was carried out the plaintiff had not been fairly treated; that the onus lay on the defendants of proving the bona fides of the transaction, and that as this onus had not been discharged the sale must be set aside, following Farrar v. Farrars, 37 W. R. 196, 40 Ch. D. 395, and Martinson v. Clowes, 30 W. R. 795, 21 Ch. D. 857.—HODSON v. DEANS, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 122; [1903] 2 Ch. 647; 72 L. J. Ch. 751; 89 L. T. 72.

9. Priority—Equitable charge—Future property—Expectancy under will—Notice—Renunciation of sole executor—Executor mortgagor—Administrator—Property in court in lunacy.—Notice cannot be given so as to affect the priorities of incumbrances to a person who is himself the mortgagor both in the case of the incumbrance first created and of the subsequent incumbrances. The priorities of incumbrancers of future property are regulated by the order in which notices of their charges are in fact given to the legal holder of the property, after it has come into existence, and as between incumbrancers who have so given notice on the same day, in the order of the creation of their charges; the fact that the earlier incumbrancer has not been guilty of any negligence in the giving of his notice at a later date than the notice given by the later incumbrancer, is immaterial.

Whether, where the property charged is an expectancy under a will, an effective notice can be given to a sole executor who afterwards renounces probate, quære.

Decision of Buckley, J. (ante, p. 313), affirmed.—DALLAS, RE, C.A., 567; 73 L. J. Ch. 365; 90 L. T. 177.

10. Priority—Portion—Mortgage pursuant to order of court to raise two out of three portions charged on real estate.—Under the will of a testator, who died in 1851, three sums of £5,000, for children's portions, were charged on his real estate. In 1880 two of the portions had become raiseable, and in an action brought for the purpose of clearing the estate from charges an order was made in 1882 directing that the two portions should be raised by a mortgage of the estate to a person who was willing to lend the money, such mortgage to be settled by the judge. The proposed mortgagee was aware of all the circumstances and of the purposes for which the money to be advanced was required. The mortgage as settled contained recitals of the title to the portions and of the proceedings in the action, and was expressed to be without prejudice to any charge which might be subsisting in the mortgaged hereditaments under the will. The money was paid by the mortgagee into court, and was afterwards distributed among the persons interested. In an action by the mortgagee claiming priority over the persons interested in the third portion,

Held, that, having regard to the circumstances of the action and the actual terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee was only entitled to a charge on the estate for the two sums of £5,000, pari passu with the third sum of like amount.

Decision of Kekewich, J. ([1902] 2 Ch. 117), affirmed.—NIGHTINGALE v. REYNOLDS, C.A., 2; [1903] 2 Ch. 236; 72 L. J. Ch. 564; 88 L. T. 654.

11. Tacking — Transfer — Covenant to pay as collateral security—Construction of transfer deed.—Certain lands were mortgaged to secure £1,500. The equity of redemption in the said lands was, with other property, subsequently mortgaged to secure £2,500. The £1,500 mortgage security was transferred to the £2,500 mortgagee. The tenant for life of all the mortgaged property was a party to the deed of transfer, and thereby covenanted to pay the £1,500, subject to a proviso that, as between himself and the owners of the mortgaged property, his covenant was to be only a collateral security, but notwithstanding the mortgagee was at liberty to enforce either security.

The representatives of the mortgagee brought an action against the representatives of the tenant for life to recover the amount due upon their securities, and claimed to be entitled to tack the latter mortgage to the earlier one.

Held, by Romer and Stirling, LJJ. (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissentiente), that on the true construction of the transfer the tenant for life was, as between himself and the mortgagee, a principal and not a surety. Consequently there was no restriction on rights of the mortgagee in dealing with his securities, and the plaintiffs were entitled to tack the latter to the earlier mortgage.—NICHOLAS v. RIDLEY, C.A., 226; [1904] 1 Ch. 192; 73 L. J. Ch. 145; 89 L. T. 653.

See also Apportionment, 1; Bankruptcy, 8; Company, 18; Landlord and Tenant, 7; Fixtures, 1; Inland Revenue, 3; Railway, 4; Trustee, 1; Will, 16.

NEGLIGENCE:—

Statutory powers—"Damage sustained by reason or in consequence of the exercise of such powers"—Compensation—Negligence — Burden of proof—

Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 6, 7 —Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 2. —Where a public body was empowered by statute to carry out certain works and it was provided in the same statute that compensation should be paid to any person sustaining damages by reason or in consequence of the exercise of such powers, it was held that if a public body relied on the negligence of its agents or contractors as relieving it from all liability under the statute, it must discharge the onus of proving such negligence.—ST. JAMES' AND PALL MALL ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. v. REX, Ch.D Farwell, J.; 90 L. T. 344.

NEWFOUNDLAND, LAW of:—

1. Newfoundland Whaling Industry Act, 1902—Construction—Licences.—Licences under the Newfoundland Whaling Industry Act, 1902, can only be granted by the Governor in Council in the manner prescribed by the Act. A receipt for a licence fee, not granted by the Governor and not containing words appropriate to the grant of a licence, is not a licence, nor evidence of a contract to grant one.—NEWFOUNDLAND WHALING CO. v. GOVERNMENT OF NEWFOUNDLAND, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 399.

2. Occupation of land—Right of occupier as against wrongdoer—License to cut timber—Effect of—Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Second Series), c. 13, s. 51.—The effect of a license to cut timber on Crown land under c. 13, s. 51, of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Second Series) is to confer a title to the land and an exclusive right of occupation in the licensee, subject to the reservations contained in the Act; and therefore such licensee has lawful possession of timber lying on the land which was cut by a trespasser before the date of the license, and is entitled to damages for its removal.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.

The Winkfield, 85 L. T. Rep. 668, [1902] P. 42, approved.—GLENWOOD LUMBER CO. v. PHILLIPS, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 405; 90 L. T. 741.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Grant of land—Reservation to grantor—Omission from subsequent grant—Effect.—In 1829 the Crown granted land adjoining the sea to a corporation, reserving (inter alia) "all such part of the said piece or parcel of land hereinbefore described as may be within 100 feet of high-water mark on the sea coast, or in any creek, harbour, or inlet." In 1830 the corporation, in execution of a previous contract, sold the land to D., through whom the respondents claimed, and D. executed a mortgage to the corporation to secure part of the purchase-money, which was then unpaid. The land was conveyed to D. "to hold the same subject to the reservation and conditions in the now recited grant" (meaning the grant of 1829 from the Crown) "contained."

In 1833 the corporation was dissolved by Order in Council, and its property thereupon reverted to the Crown, "subject to all mortgages and contracts for sale previously lawfully made."

In 1840 D. paid off the mortgage, and the Crown granted the land to him. This grant made no mention of the reservation above mentioned, and described the land as being bounded on one side "by the water of" the "harbour."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the effect of the grant of 1840 was to do away with the reservation contained in the earlier grant. —ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NEW SOUTH WALES v. DICKSON, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 273; 90 L. T. 213.

2. Probate duty — Special power of appointment exercised by will—Trust property—Property "which belonged to" testator—Stamp Duties Act, 1898 (Act No. 27 of 1898). — A special power to appoint property among a limited class of persons is so entirely different from a general power of disposition that mere general language in a probate duty statute cannot be reasonably supposed to extend to property subject to such a power.

By a settlement made on the marriage of a testatrix certain property was conveyed to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to the testatrix for her life, and after her death to stand possessed of the property in trust for the issue of the marriage as she should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, equally. The testatrix by her will duly exercised the power of appointment in favour of her children.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that section 49 (2) A (a) of the Stamp Duties Act, 1898, does not apply to property over which a deceased person has only a special power of appointment by will, and that the settled property was not liable to probate duty under the Act.—COMMISSIONER OF STAMP DUTIES v. STEPHEN, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 137; 73 L. J. P. C. 9; 89 L. T. 511.

3. Public Works Act—Land taken for public purposes—Valuation—Costs.—By the Public Works Act of New South Wales (1900, No. 26) land for authorized works may be taken by the Government, and persons claiming compensation are to serve a notice of the particulars of their interest in the land, and of their claims for damages. The Minister for Public Works is then required to cause a valuation to be made, and to give notice to the claimant of the amount of such valuation.

In a case in which land belonging to the respondents was taken under the Act, and the minister gave them notice of a valuation, and afterwards, at the respondents' request, reconsidered the valuation, and wrote a letter to the respondents' agent to the effect that he was prepared to pay a sum larger than the original valuation, but gave no formal notice of the increased sum under the Act, and the respondents declined the increased offer,

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the letter was a sufficient amendment of the previous formal notification, and as in the subsequent proceedings the respondents only obtained a verdict for a sum equal to the amended offer made in the letter, they were not entitled to costs.—PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER v. HART, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 259; 90 L. T. 104.

4. Sydney Harbour Trust Act, 1900, ss. 27, 68—Wharfage rates—Private wharf — Interest in land existing at the time of the passing of the Act—Payment of rent.—By the Sydney Harbour Trust Act, 1900, s. 68, the Harbour Commissioners constituted by the Act were directed to collect in respect of all vessels berthed "at any wharf vested in the commissioners" . . . "wharfage and tonnage rates according to the provisions of the Wharfage and Tonnage Act, 1884." The Act of 1884 did not apply to private wharfs.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the rates granted by the later Act were to be levied on goods landed at a wharf vested in the commissioners though it was in the occupation of a private person.

Held, further, that the fact that the lessee of a wharf who remained in occupation of the wharf after the expiration of his lease, and had applied for a renewal of the lease, and had paid rent in advance pending such renewal, had not "an interest in such lands" within section 27 of the Act.—LUKEY v. SYDNEY HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 382; 90 L. T. 743.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

1. Contract to execute works—Wrongful seizure of works by defendants—Plaintiff entitled to determine the contract.

Held, that the appellants having by their conduct constituted the corporation their agents, and the delay being attributable to their acts, could not justify the seizure and re-entry of the works, and that the respondent was entitled to treat the contract as at an end and sue on a quantum meruit.—LODDER v. SLOWEY, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 442.

2. Licensing Act, 1895, ss. 3, 8, sub-section 4—Licensing poll—Poll null and void—Renewal of existing licences.—By the New Zealand Licensing Act, 1895, s. 3, "No licence of any description shall be granted or renewed until the electors of the district have previously determined in manner hereinafter provided (1) whether the number of licences existing in the district is to continue; (2) whether the number of licences existing in the district is to be reduced; (3) whether no licences are to be granted in the district."

By section 8, sub-section 4, if "none of the proposals respecting licences in the district is carried by the prescribed majority . . . the number of licences shall continue as they are until the next licensing poll."

A "licensing poll" was taken in the N. district, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, but was afterwards declared void on the ground of certain irregularities.

The appellant, who was the holder of a licence in the district, afterwards applied to the licensing committee for a renewal of his licence.

No objection was made to the renewal, but the committee held that, under the circumstances, they had no power to renew any licence.

Held, that the contingency of the poll taken being legally null and void was covered by section 8, sub-section 4, and that all existing licences continued in force until the next licensing poll.

Judgment of the court below reversed.—SMITH v. MCARTHUR, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 389; 90 L. T. 744.

NUISANCE:—

1. Noise, vibration, and smell—Electrical works—Generating station—Injunction.—By a provisional order made under the Electric Lighting Acts, and duly confirmed by Act of Parliament, the corporation of R. were authorised to supply electrical energy for public and private purposes within the area of the borough; it being provided by the order that nothing therein should exonerate the undertakers from any indictment, action, or other proceedings for nuisance in the event of any nuisance being caused or permitted by them. The corporation entered into arrangements with the defendant company for the erection, maintaining, and working of a generating station within the borough; and the defendant company, in pursuance of such arrangements, acquired as a site for the proposed works a piece of land adjoining the garden of the plaintiff's house, and proceeded to erect therein the requisite engines, dynamos, and other machinery.

The plaintiff, who occupied her house as a ladies' school, complained of various annoyances to the inmates of her establishment by noise, vibration, and offensive smells or vapours produced by the operation of the defendant company's works, and instituted an action for an injunction and damages in respect of the alleged nuisance.

The court being of opinion that the annoyances complained of were not trivial or a kind to be expected from any ordinary and reasonable use by the defendant company of the land they had acquired, and, further, that, in spite of a diminution in intensity and frequency of the annoyances complained of since the commencement of the action, yet even at the date of the trial such annoyances had repeatedly and recently recurred, an injunction and damages were granted accordingly.—KNIGHT v. ISLE OF WIGHT ELECTRIC LIGHT CO., Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 73 L. J. Ch. 299; 90 L. T. 410.

2. Overhanging trees—Damage—Injunction.—An action lies against an adjoining landowner for allowing his trees to overhang the boundary to the damage of the plaintiff's crops.—SMITH v. GIDDY, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 448.

3. Smallpox hospital—Action quia timet—Weight and sufficiency of evidence.—Where the site of a smallpox hospital is carefully chosen, is in a proper situation, and constitutes no appreciable danger to the public health and no nuisance to private property, and the hospital itself is properly managed and all precautions taken to prevent infection that scientific skill and knowledge require, the facts, that the hospital is within fifty-one feet of a high road and that there is some risk of infection even when the utmost care is taken, do not outweigh the benefits accruing to the public in general from the maintenance of a smallpox hospital that reduces the risk for every inhabitant of the district wherein it is situate. To warrant an injunction restraining the use of such a hospital there must be a strong probability, almost amounting to moral certainty, that the hospital will be an actionable nuisance. — ATTORNEY - GENERAL v. NOTTINGHAM CORPORATION, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 281; [1904] 1 Ch. 673; 73 L. J. Ch. 512; 90 L. T. 308.

4. Smoke—Funnel of steam-tug sending forth black smoke—Chimney—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 5, sub-sections 4, 5; s. 24, sub-section (b).—The funnel of a steam-tug is a "chimney" within the meaning of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, section 24 (b) of which provides that "any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance" is a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily under that Act.—TOUGH v. HOPKINS, K.B.D., 605; [1904] 1 K. B. 804; 73 L. J. K. B. 628; 90 L. T. 672.

5. Vibration — Electric generating station—Statutory powers of borough council—Provisional order under Electric Lighting Act—Injunction—"Temporary" nuisance.—The defendant council, under the powers of a provisional order, erected an electric generating station in proximity to houses of which the plaintiffs were lessees or occupiers. The order provided that nothing therein should exonerate the undertakers from an action for nuisance in the event of any being occasioned by them. In an action for an injunction it was admitted by the defendants that the vibration of their machinery created an actionable nuisance unless such nuisance was excusable as being of a merely temporary nature, but they alleged that after experments and alterations of the machinery the nuisance would abate, and that as the machinery was not yet completed in its final form, but only in course of construction, an action would not lie against them.

Held, that the nuisance was not merely temporary within the principle of Harrison v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., [1891] 2 Ch. 409, 39 W. R. Dig. 140, and that the defendants were not entitled to carry out their works unless they could do so without creating a nuisance, and that an injunction must go.

One of the plaintiffs having sub-let for all his term less the last three days, Held, entitled to an injunction in respect of damage to his reversion.—COLWELL v. ST. PANCRAS CORPORATION, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 523; [1904] 1 Ch. 707; 73 L. J. Ch. 275; 90 L. T. 153.

See also Justices, 4; Public Health, 5.

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Account—Ascertaining deceased partner's share—Articles—Construction—Goodwill—Inclusion in account.—Articles of partnership provided that a full and general annual account and valuation of all the capital, stock-in-trade, property, profits, moneys, credits, and effects whatsoever of the partnership should be made, and that if a partner should die before the expiration of the partnership his executors, administrators, and assigns should be entitled to such sum of money as his share of the capital and property of the partnership should upon the last general annual account amount to.

A partner died during the continuance of the partnership, and his executors claimed that in ascertaining the amount of his share they were entitled to have a sum for the goodwill of the partnership business, which was of considerable value, included in the account and valuation.

The articles contained no express provision as to the goodwill.

On a summons taken out to determine whether they were entitled to have a sum for the goodwill included,

Held, that there was no material difference between the present case and Steuart v. Gladstone, 40 L. T. Rep. 145, 10 Ch. D. 626, and, the principle of that decision being that, where the accounts from which the sum to be paid is to be ascertained are accounts for the purpose of ascertaining profits, the goodwill is not to be included, a sum for the goodwill ought not to be included in the account.—SCOTT v. SCOTT, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 89 L. T. 582.

2. Dissolution—Insufficient assets to repay capital—Question of adjustment—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 24, sub-section 1; s. 44.—Where the contributions of partners to the capital were unequal, but each were to share equally in profits; and in the distribution of assets upon a dissolution it was found that there was a deficiency of assets, Held, that the assets must be applied in paying rateably to each partner what was due from the firm to him in respect of capital, account being taken of the equal contributions to be made by each towards the deficiency of capital.—GARNER v. MURRAY, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 208; [1904] 1 Ch. 57; 73 L. J. Ch. 66; 89 L. T. 665.

3. Dissolution—Receiver and manager—Management—Interference—Injunction.—Two brothers carried on a business in partnership for some years, when the business began to fail, and one brother brought an action for dissolution of the partnership against the other, to whose mismanagement he attributed the failure. The plaintiff obtained an order appointing a receiver and manager of the business, who dismissed the defendant from the management, and afterwards an order was made for the dissolution of the partnership, the taking of the partnership accounts, and the realization of the partnership effects.

The defendant set up and managed a rival business under a similar name, which he alleged belonged to his sons as partners, and for which his wife and her sisters advanced the capital.

On a motion by the plaintiff for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the management of the old business by the receiver and manager, it was proved that the defendant had spread rumours to the effect that the old business would shortly be closed and sold by auction, and had induced some of the employees of the old business to leave, after giving due notice, and to enter the employment of the new business, and also had attempted to obtain from the landlord the tenancy of a field which had long been in the occupation of the old partnership, and used in the old business.

Held, that any act calculated to injure property under the control of the receiver and manager was an interference with the management of the receiver and manager whom the court was bound to protect; and an injunction was granted restricting the defendant from interfering with the management of the receiver and manager.—DIXON v. DIXON, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 161; 73 L. J. Ch. 103; 89 L. T. 272.

4. Expulsion clause—Conduct detrimental to partnership business—Breach of duty as a partner—Conviction by police magistrate—Dishonesty—Interim injunction.—Articles of partnership provided that in the event of either of the junior partners being "addicted to scandalous conduct detrimental to the partnership business," or being guilty of "any flagrant breach of the duties of a partner," the senior partner might give the offending partner six days' notice of expulsion from the partnership. One of the junior partners having been convicted by a police magistrate of travelling without a ticket with intent to avoid payment, and fined the full penalty, the senior partner served him with notice of expulsion. On motion by the junior partner for an interim injunction to restrain his expulsion,

Held, that, as the plaintiff had been convicted of dishonesty, the notice of expulsion was justified, and under the circumstances the court declined to interfere by interlocutory injunction.—CARMICHAEL v. EVANS, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 486; 73 L. J. Ch. 329; 90 L. T. 573.

See also Solicitor, 7.

PATENT:—

1. Assignment of application for—Assignee's right of action—Practice—Parties—Leave to amend.—The assignee of an application for a patent is only an equitable assignee of the patent. He cannot sue for infringement of the patent unless he joins the legal owner either as plaintiff or defendant.

Leave to amend by adding the legal owner granted.—BOWDEN'S PATENTS SYNDICATE v. SMITH, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 630; [1904] 2 Ch. 122; 73 L. J. Ch. 522.

2. Disconformity—Order for revocation—Terms—Form of order—Discretion of judge—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act. 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c 57), ss. 18, 19, 20—Costs.—Where a judge has exercised his discretion under section 19 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, by making an order to revoke letters patent unless the specification be amended by disclaiming part thereof, the Court of Appeal will not interfere to vary the terms he may have imposed in making such order.—GEIPEL'S PATENT, RE, C.A., 339; [1904] 1 Ch. 239; 73 L. J. Ch. 215; 90 L. T. 70.

3. Infringement—Combination patent—Sale of constituent part—Intention to infringe.—If the manufacture and sale of an article, which is a constituent part of a patent consisting in a particular combination, are not in themselves unlawful as infringing the patent, they do not become so by reason of the sale being to a person whom the vendor knows intends to infringe the patent.

Townsend v. Haworth, 12 Ch. D. 831n, 48 L. J. Ch. 770n, followed.

Decision of Swinfen Eady, J., (ante, p. 189), affirmed. — DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO v. MOSELEY & SONS, C.A., 454; [1904] 1 Ch. 612; 73 L. J. Ch. 417.

4. Infringement—Taking substance of invention.—In an action for the infringement of a patent, where it is alleged that the defendant has taken the "substance" of the invention, the question is to be decided with reference to the existing state of knowledge of the subject at the date of the patent and the operation of the machine in question, and not simply by reading the specification.

Where the merit of the invention consists in the principle which is embodied in it, a machine which carries the same principle into effect by different means may be an infringement; but, where the merit lies in a new combination of known features, a machine which produces the same result with the omission of something which is a material element in the patented machine, not a mere detail, will not be held to be an infringement of the patent.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—CONSOLIDATED CAR HEATING CO. v. CAME, P.C.; [1903] A. C. 509; 72 L. J. P. C. 110; 89 L. T. 224.

5. Pending action for infringement—Amendment of specification without leave of court—Subsequent action on amended specification—Invalidity of amendment—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 18, sub-sections 1, 9, 10; s. 19—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 5.—Sections 18 and 19 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, which relate to the amendment of a specification, must be read together. Section 18 states what an applicant may do before litigation, and section 19 states what he may do whilst in litigation; and if an applicant, whilst litigation is pending and without leave of the court under section 19, amends his specification under section 18 by leave of the comptroller, the amendment is irregular and void notwithstanding sub-section 9 of section 18.

Sub-section 10 of section 18 is not limited to litigation pending between the same parties at the time when the application to amend is made, but refers to any action for infringement or petition for revocation pending at that time in relation to the patent.—J. B. BROOKS & CO. v. LYCETT'S SADDLE AND MOTOR ACCESSORY CO., Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 512; 73 L. J. Ch. 319.

6. Revocation—Petition for revocation—Practice—Court or chambers—Consent.—An order for the revocation of letters patent for an invention cannot be obtained upon summons in chambers, even where the respondent consents to the revocation.—CLIFTON'S PATENT, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 629.

POLICE:—

Pension—'Approved service"—Continuous service—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), s. 1.—By section 1 of the Police Act, 1890, "ever constable in a police force (a) if he has not completed not less than twenty-five years' approved service . . . shall . . . be entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life."

Held (by Collins, M.R., and Stirling, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting), that "approved service" means continuous service, and that, therefore, in computing the period of twenty-five years, separate and broken periods of service cannot be added together.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 527, [1904] 1 K. B. 522) affirmed.—GARBUTT v. DURHAM JOINT COMMITTEE, C.A., 678; [1904] 2 K. B. 514.

POOR LAW:—

1. Rating—Appeal to quarter sessions—Right of assessment committee to appear as respondents—Consent of guardians—Notice to guardians—Sufficiency of notice—Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 39), s. 2—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 58), s. 12.—The consent of the guardians of a union, which is required by section 2 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, before the assessment committee can appear as respondents to a rating appeal, is not such a consent in writing of a majority of the guardians of a union required under the Poor Law Acts as is mentioned in section 12 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1882, and it is not necessary that fourteen days' notice should be given to each guardian of the meeting at which the consent to such appearance is to be given.—SMITH v. LEIGH UNION, C.A., 340; [1904] 1 K. B. 484; 73 L. J. K. B. 185; 90 L. T. 240.

2. Removal of pauper—Settlement—Married woman—Husband having no settlement—Derivative settlement—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 35.—A pauper and her husband, who was a foreigner with no settlement, came to reside in the parish of Birmingham in January, 1901, and resided there until June, 1901, when the husband went to America with no intention of deserting his wife, and with the intention of returning. The wife and her children continued to reside in the parish of Birmingham until March, 1902, when they went into the workhouse.

Held, that the pauper and her children, who were all under the age of sixteen years, were irremovable from the parish of Birmingham.—TEWKESBURY GUARDIANS v. BIRMINGHAM GUARDIANS, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 395; 90 L. T. 787.

3. School district—Board—Dissolution—Transfer of Consolidated Stock—Poor Law Amendment Act 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), ss. 40, 42, 45—Dissolved Boards of Management and Guardians Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 2), ss. 1, 12.—A school district and a board for such district were constituted under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844. The district was dissolved. At the date of the dissolution there was standing in the books of the Bank of England a sum of 2½ per cent. Consolidated Stock, which represented surplus assets of the board of management.

Held, that the corporate body remained in existence either by implication from section 1 of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 2, or according to the common law rule so long as any one of the corporators remained alive. The plaintiffs, the last acting managers, were not entitled to claim that the property was vested in them automatically under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 2, s. 12, and it would be necessary that the transfer of the Consolidated Stock be executed under the corporate seal of the board.—MORTON v. BANK OF ENGLAND, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 393; [1904] 1 Ch. 664; 73 L. J. Ch. 503; 90 L. T. 375.

4. Settlement—Addition to parish—Divided

Parishes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61)—Poor Law Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 54).—Where a pauper has acquired a settlement in a parish, and subsequently by an order of the Local Government Board, made under the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, as amended by the Poor Law Act, 1879, a part of an adjoining parish has been added to the former parish, the identity of the original parish is not destroyed, and the pauper's settlement is not lost.

Reg. v. Tipton Inhabitants, 3 Q. B. 215, and St. Saviour's Union v. Dorking Union, 46 W. R. 309. [1898] 1 Q B. 594, distinguished.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (50 W. R. 275, [1902] 1K. B.562) affirmed.—WEST HAM UNION v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L. 465; [1904] A. C. 40; 73 L. J. K. B. 85; 89 L. T. 614.

5. Settlement — Irremovability — Residence — "Hospital"—Poor Removal Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 66), s. 1.—An institution partially endowed by a private person and founded with the object of providing a home and medical treatment, together with suitable employment and recreation, for persons suffering from epilepsy, the main part of the expenses being defrayed by payments of the inmates, is a "hospital" within the proviso to section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846.

Judgment of the Divisional Court ([1903] 1 K. B. 19) affirmed. — ORMSKIRK UNION v. CHORLTON UNION, C.A.; [1903] 2 K. B. 498; 72 L. J. K. B. 721; 89 L. T. 256.

6. Settlement—Three years' residence—Child under sixteen—Divided Parishes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), ss. 34, 35.—Where a child has, while under the age of sixteen, resided with its parent in a parish for three years in such manner and under such circumstances in each of such years as render a person irremovable, the child may, on attaining the age of sixteen, claim the benefit of the three years' residence as giving it a settlement in the parish under section 34 of the Divided Parishes Act, 1876.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 30, [1903] 2 K. B. 627) affirmed.

Reg. v. Elvet, 7 W. R. 586, 2 E. & E. 266, followed. —WEST HAM UNION v. HOLBEACH UNION, C.A., 513; [1904] 2 K. B. 121.

See also Rating, 1, 5-8.

POWER:—

1. Appointment—General testamentary power—Loan to donee—Covenant to exercise power—Priority of lender as to appointed fund over other creditors.—Property appointed by will under a general power is assets for payment of the debts of the appointor.

The donee of a general testamentary power of appointment exercised the power in favour of a mortgagee, in pursuance of a covenant contained in the mortgage deed. At the death of the donee of the power, his estate proved to be insolvent.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the mortgagee had no priority over the general creditors of the estate as against the appointed fund.

Rule laid down by Knight-Bruce, L.J., in Fleming v. Buchanan, 3 De G. M. & G. 976, approved and followed.—BEYFUS v. LAWLEY, H.L.; [1903] A. C. 411; 72 L. J. Ch. 781; 89 L. T. 309.

2. Excessive appointment — Appointment under special power to uses of existing settlement, or such as are "capable of taking effect"—Validity of limitation —Remoteness—Construction of will.—Where under a special power of appointment a testator appoints to the uses or trusts of an antecedent instrument or such of them as are "capable of taking effect," the phrase "capable of taking effect" may be construed as meaning what the law allows to take effect, and need not be confined to a reference to the uses or trusts which, by reason of the deaths of parties and other intervening circumstances, are still in fact existing, or capable of coming into existence; and if therefore some of the uses or trusts fail by reason of the cestuis que trust not being objects of the power, or by reason of the rule against perpetuities being infringed, those uses or trusts may be treated as excluded from the appointment.

Dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Line v. Hall, (1873) 43 L. J. Ch. 107, 108, considered and applied.—FINCH AND CHEW'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1903] Ch. 486; 72 L. J. Ch. 690; 89 L. T. 162.

See also Trustee, 2, 3; Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

PRACTICE:—

1. Appeal—Court of Appeal—Action referred by consent of parties to master—Judgment entered by master—Right of appeal to Court of Appeal—Rules of Supreme Court, ord. 14, r. 7.—When in an action in the High Court the whole action has been referred, under ord. 14, r. 7, to a master, and judgment has been entered in pursuance of his direction, an appeal from the judgment does not lie to the Court of Appeal.—FRASER v. FRASER, C.A., 147; [1904] 1 K. B. 56; 73 L. J. K. B. 6; 89 L. T. 491.

2. Appeal—Official referee—Reference of Chancery action—Motion to set aside judgment—Jurisdiction.—Where an action in the Chancery Division is referred to an official referee, and judgment is entered by direction of the official referee, the proper course for the unsuccessful party is to apply in the Chancery Division to set aside the judgment and not in the first instance to appeal to the Court of Appeal. — WYNNE-FINCH v. CHAYTOR, C.A., 24; [1903] 2 Ch. 475; 72 L. J. Ch. 723; 89 L. T. 123.

3. Appeal—Special leave—Abstract point of law.—Special leave will not be granted to appeal from a judgment which is not impeached, merely with a view to have an abstract point of law, not arising in case, decided by their lordships. — REX v. LOUW, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 412.

4. Appeal in formâ pauperis—Certificate of counsel.—On an application for leave to appeal in formâ pauperis it is not necessary that the application should be supported by the certificate of an independent counsel who did not appear for the applicant in the court below.—MITCHELL v. NEW ZEALAND LOAN AND MERCANTILE AGENCY CO., P.C.; [1904] A. C. 149; 73 L. J. P. C. 17; 89 L. T. 83.

5. Costs — Action settled — "Record withdrawn. No costs on either side"—Costs of interlocutory proceedings ordered to be paid by plaintiff—Right of defendant to tax after settlement of action —During the progress of an action several orders were made upon interlocutory applications, that the plaintiff should pay the defendants' costs in some cases "in any event."

The action was subsequently settled upon the terms indorsed on the briefs of counsel. "Record withdrawn. No costs on either side," the question of the costs of the interlocutory proceedings not being present to their minds.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that after the settlement of the action the defendants were entitled to taxation and payment of their costs of the interlocutory proceedings which the plaintiff had been ordered to pay.—WALTER v. BEWICKE, MORRING, & Co., C.A.; 90 L. T. 409.

6. Costs before action—Threat of proceedings—Preparation for defence before issue of writ—Taxation—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 29.—Defendant, being threatened with an action for being party or privy to a fraud disclosed in a previous action to which he was not a party, obtained a transcript of the speeches, evidence, and judgment therein before the issue of the writ in the present action, with a view to defending the same. The present action was subsequently dismissed for want of prosecution.

Held, that the defendant was entitled under ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 29, to the costs of only so much of the transcript of the evidence and judgment as related to the issue in the present action.—BRIGHT'S TRUSTEE v. SELLAR, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 369; 73 L. J. Ch. 245; 90 L. T. 155.

7. Costs—Copies of documents for the judge.—Where the court is asked to construe the terms of a document, a copy should be provided for its use, and the costs of such copy should be allowed on taxation.—HOUSTOUN'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 61; 89 L. T. 469.

8. Costs—Defendant joined in the alternative—Liability of unsuccessful co-defendant to pay costs of successful co-defendant—Judicature Act, 1890, s. 5—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 4; ord. 65, r. 1.—In an action brought against two defendants in the alternative, and tried with a jury, the judge held that there was not good cause to deprive one of the defendants of costs as against the plaintiff, but yet was of opinion that the costs so occasioned ought properly to be borne by the other defendant. He accordingly ordered the plaintiff to pay these costs in the first instance and then to add them to his own, and to have them paid to him by the other defendant.

Held, that the judge had jurisdiction to make such an order.—SANDERSON v. BLYTH THEATRE Co, C.A., 33; [1903] 2 K. B. 533; 72 L. J. K. B. 761; 89 L. T. 159.

9. Costs — Extraordinary expenses of repairing highway—Action in High Court—Sum not exceeding £250 recovered—High Court costs—Locomotives Act (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 12 (1).—Section 12, sub-section 1 (a), of the Locomotives Act, 1898, provides that the expenses incurred by a highway authority in repairing a highway damaged by extraordinary traffic which are recoverable from the person ordering the traffic "may be recovered if not exceeding £250 in the county court, and if exceeding that sum in the High Court." In an action in the High Court brought by a highway authority to recover a sum exceeding £250 for damage caused by extraordinary traffic, the jury assessed the damages at £60, and the judge at the trial ordered judgment to be entered accordingly with costs, and gave a certificate that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the High Court.

Held, that the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain the action, and that as the trial was with the jury the costs followed the event and the plaintiffs were entitled to High Court costs.—CHESTERFIELD RURAL COUNCIL v. NEWTON, C.A., 129; [1904] 1 K. B. 62; 73 L. J. K. B. 24; 89 L. T. 466.

10. Costs—Indemnity—Costs of action—Costs of appeal.—A person who has agreed to indemnify another from a liability is not primâ facie liable to pay to the person indemnified the costs incurred by him in an unsuccessful appeal from the judgment of a court of first instance establishing his liability.

Third party ordered to pay defendants' costs of trial as between party and party.—MAXWELL v. BRITISH THOMSON HOUSTON CO., K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 342; 73 L. J. K. B. 644.

11. Costs—Inspection of property the subject of the action—Inspection without an order—Taxing-master's discretion—R. S. C., ord. 50, r. 3.—The fact that an inspection of property, the subject-matter of an action, has been carried out by an arrangement between the solicitors of the parties and not in pursuance of an order is not of itself sufficient reason why the costs of such inspection should be disallowed. — ASHWORTH v. ENGLISH CARD CLOTHING CO. (No. 1). Ch.D. Joyce, J., 507; [1904] 1 Ch. 702; 73 L. J. Ch. 274; 90 L. T. 262.

12. Costs—Interest—Action dismissed with costs—Payment of costs and interest—Order reversed by Court of Appeal—Return of costs and interest—Order of Court of Appeal reversed by House of Lords—Second return of costs and interest—Right to further interest.—On the 22nd of June, 1901, the plaintiff's action was dismissed by Joyce, J., with costs; and on the 26th of March, 1902, the plaintiff accordingly paid the defendants' costs, together with interest thereon.

On the 11th of July, 1902, the Court of Appeal reversed the order of Joyce, J.; and on the 21st of July, 1902, the defendants repaid to the plaintiff the costs and interest.

On the 9th of November, 1903, the House of Lords reversed the order of the Court of Appeal and restored the order of Joyce, J. The plaintiff returned the costs and interest to the defendants.

Held, that the defendants were also entitled to interest on the costs as from the 21st of July, 1902.—ASHWORTH v. ENGLISH CARD CLOTHING CO. (No. 2), Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 704; 73 L. J. Ch. 282; 90 L. T. 263.

13. Costs—New trial—Misdirection. — If a new trial is granted by the Court of Appeal on account of the misdirection of the jury the costs of the application rest entirely in the discretion of that court.

Bray v. Ford, [1896] A. C. 44, 44 W. R. Dig. 131, discussed.—HAMILTON v. SEAL C.A., 581; [1904] 2 K. B. 262; 73 L. J. K. B. 560; 90 L. T. 592.

14. Costs—Party and party—Refresher fees to counsel—Ord. 65, rr. 29, 48—On a party and party taxation refresher fees to counsel may be allowed in excess of the maximum set out in ord. 65, r. 48.—STEWART v. WEBBER, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 559.

15. Costs—Payment into court of a lump sum with denial of liability as to part of claim and admission of liability as to part—Cost of issues found for plaintiff—Issue not going to the whole cause of action—R.S.C., 1883, ord. 22., rr. 1, 6.—In an action for wrongful dismissal the plaintiff claimed, amongst other things, three months' full pay and nine months' half pay. The defendants admitted liability for three months' full pay and six months' half pay, and whilst denying any further liability paid a sum of money into court. At the trial the plaintiff obtained a verdict and judgment for a sum in excess of the sum paid into court. Upon an application by the defendants for judgment or new trial, the court held that the plaintiff was entitled to less than the sum paid into court and gave judgment for the defendants, but they decided the issue of six months' or nine months' half pay in favour of the plaintiffs.

Held, on the principle of Wagstaffe v. Bentley,

[1902] 1 K. B. 124, that the defendants, while entitled to the general costs of the action, must pay the cost of the issue on which they had failed, although it was not an issue going to the whole cause of action.

Semble, per Cur.: Under order 22 payment into court of a lump sum with a denial of liability as to part of the claim and an admission of liability as to part cannot be pleaded as a defence to an action. —HUBBACK v. BRITISH NORTH BORNEO CO., C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 473; 73 L. J. K. B. 654.

16. Costs — Rating appeals — Appeal to quarter sessions—Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 6.—In an appeal to quarter sessions under the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, the court has power to give to the successful party the costs incurred in the court below as well as the costs of the appeal.—REX v. CORNWALL JUSTICES, K.B.D., 31; [1903] 2 K. B. 178; 72 L. J. K. B. 622; 88 L. T. 775.

17. Costs—Set-off—"Parties"—Independent proceedings—Ord. 65, r. 14; r. 27, sub-rule 21.—Ord. 65, rr. 14 and 27 (21), do not allow a set-off of costs in separate actions.—DAVID v. REES, C.A., 579; [1904] 2 K. B. 435.

18. Costs—Summons under ord. 14, r. 1—Reference to master—Costs of the action—Costs of the reference and award—Ord. 65, r. 12—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 116.—In an action brought to recover a balance of account on a tradesman's bill, the plaintiffs took out a summons under ord. 14, r. 1, for leave to sign final judgment. Upon the hearing of the summons no order was made, but the action was referred to a master for trial in accordance with rule 7 of the same order. After twenty-one days from the service of the writ the master, having tried the action, made an order giving the plaintiffs leave to sign judgment for £23 15s., "with £7 costs of the action, and also with costs of the reference to the master and his award, such costs to be taxed by the taxing-master on the High Court scale." From this order the defendants appealed to Phillimore, J., sitting at chambers.

Held, by that learned judge in court, that as regards the costs of the action, judgment not having been given within twenty-one days, and that period not having been extended by a judge under section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, the plaintiffs were only entitled to costs on the county court scale, and the appeal should be allowed in that respect; but with regard to the costs of the reference to the master and his award, the order made was correct, as the master must be deemed an arbitrator, having the same discretion as to costs, including the power to certify for High Court costs, as an arbitrator has.—HAYDOCKS (LIMITED) v. MULHOLLAND, K.B.D., 400; [1904] 1 K. B. 145; 73 L. J. K. B. 125; 90 L. T. 88.

19. Costs—Taxation—Assessment—Objections to the taxing-master's findings — Certificate—Summons to review—Construction of ord. 65, r. 27 (38a)—Ord. 65, r. 27 (39) (41).—This was a summons to vary a taxing-master's certificate.

Upon a petition seeking for payment out of certain funds in court the consent of the company, as an incumbrancer with a stop order on the fund in question, was necessary. After carefully considering the matter, which was of a complicated nature, the company duly consented. On taxation, however, of the bill of costs carried in by the company's solicitors, only a small part of the amount claimed was allowed by the taxing-master.

It appeared that the taxing-master began by taxing the costs item by item; then he ceased to do so, excluded the remaining items entirely, and allowed instead a lump sum of ten guineas for the professional services of the solicitors. The taxing-master stated, in answer to an inquiry by the judge, that he had assessed under ord. 65, r. 27 (38*a*).

No objections to the taxing-master's findings were ever carried in, but after he had signed his certificate this summons was taken out.

Held, that the taxing-master had not taxed in accordance with ord. 65, r. 27 (39), nor could he be taken to have assessed a lump sum under ord. 65, r. 27 (38*a*). Assessment was by the sub-rule only permissible where there had been some dishonesty or misconduct on the part of the solicitors whose bill was under consideration; this was clearly so in each specific case mentioned in the sub-rule, and the subsequent general words "from any other cause" must be treated as ejusdem generis with the preceding words. If the taxing-master intended to exercise this delicate question, he must say so in definite terms and upon proper evidence. Consequently the taxation was wrong in principle, and in such a case the summons to vary need not be preceded by objections to the taxing-master's findings.

In re Castle, 36 Ch. D. 194, followed.—JOHNSTON, RE, MILLS v. JOHNSTON, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 132; 73 L. J. Ch. 17; 89 L. T. 497.

20. Costs—Taxation—Party and party—Refresher fees—Discretion—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, rr. 8, 27 (29) (48).—In a taxation of costs between party and party the taxing-master has a discretion to allow the payment of refresher fees in excess of those prescribed by ord. 65, r. 27 (48).

In re Ermen, 51 W. R. 475, [1903] 2 Ch. 156, and Stewart & Co. v. Weber, 19 Times L. R. 722, followed.—CAVENDISH v. STRUTT, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 333; [1904] 1 Ch. 524; 73 L. Ch. 247; 90 L. T. 500.

21. Costs—Taxation—Solicitor and client—Action against public authority—Action in respect of construction of contract—Act done in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or of public duty or authority—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—By an agreement a public authority had, in pursuance of statutory authority, given to the plaintiffs certain powers, reserving to itself the right, by duly giving notice, to determine those powers. The public authority gave notice to the plaintiffs to determine the powers. In an action by the plaintiffs against the public authority, seeking declarations that the notice to determine had not been duly given, and that, by reason of the subsequent passing of an Act of Parliament, the public authority had become incapacitated from determining the powers, the plaintiffs were unsuccessful.

Held, that the act done by the public authority which gave rise to the action was not done in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or of any public duty or authority, and that the plaintiffs were liable to pay to the public authority costs taxed as between party and party alone, and not as between solicitor and client.—NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. v. KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPORATION, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 26.

22. Discovery—Interrogatories—Action for libel—Defence of fair comment — Interrogatories as to previous statements concerning plaintiff—Leave to administer—Ord. 31, rr. 1, 2.—In an action for damages for libel in respect of a criticism, published in the defendants' paper, of an opera composed by the plaintiff, the defendants pleaded that the words complained of were fair and bonâ fide criticism of and comment on the opera, and were published without malice.

The plaintiff applied for leave to deliver interrogatories to the defendants asking them whether they had not previously published an incorrect statement about the plaintiff, what information they had which induced them to believe that statement was true, from whom they derived such information, whether it was derived from the same source as the article complained of, and what steps they had taken to verify it.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that leave to deliver the interrogatories had been properly refused as not being relevant to the question of malice.—CARYLL v. DAILY MAIL PUBLISHING CO., C.A.; 90 L. T. 307.

23. Discovery — Production — Privilege — Further affidavit—Sufficiency—Omission of statement by party that documents for which protection is claimed contain nothing impeaching his own case.—In an action to enforce the right to profit made upon an alleged joint purchase and resale of land and an account, defendant had counterclaimed for specific performance of an alleged agreement between him and the plaintiff as to certain properties purchased by defendant and, as alleged, by the plaintiff and defendant jointly and payments to be made, for a sale, and the execution of a proper conveyance.

Defendant in an affidavit of documents had sworn that he objected to produce certain documents on the ground that they related only to his own case, and did not tend to prove or support the plaintiff's case.

Held, that the affidavit, according to the dicta in the case of Morris v. Edwards, 63 L. T. Rep. 26, 15 App. Cas. 309, in the House of Lords, as followed by the Court of Appeal in Attorney-General v. Mayor and Corporation of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 81 L. T. Rep 311, [1899] 2 Q. B. 478, was technically sufficient, although not containing the statement that the documents for which privilege was claimed contained nothing impeaching his own case.—JOHNSON v. WHITAKER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 90 L. T. 535.

24. Leave to defend—Security to satisfaction of master—Decision of master as to sufficiency of security —Appeal—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 14, r. 6; ord. 54, r. 21.—Where an order has been made under ord. 14, r. 6, granting the defendant leave to defend on giving security to the satisfaction of the master, there is no appeal from the decision of the master on the question of the sufficiency of the security tendered by the defendant.—HOARE v. MORSHEAD, C.A., 87; [1903] 2 K. B. 359; 72 L. J. K. B. 724; 89 L. T. 125.

25. New trial—Railway accident—Damages—Application for a new trial—Excessive damage—Personal injuries—Loss of income—Misdirection of jury—Wrong measure adopted by jury.—If a jury in awarding damages to a plaintiff injured in a railway accident applied a wrong measure or took into consideration matters which they ought not to have taken into consideration in contravention of the direction of the judge, and the court can draw such an inference from the amount awarded and all the circumstances of the case, a new trial may be ordered, although the court is not in a position to say that the mere quantum of excess was so large that no reasonable jury could have arrived at such an amount. But if the jury in estimating the amount took into consideration the fact that the plaintiff would be debarred from following the profession for which he had fully qualified himself, and other revelant matters, then, although the amount awarded appears excessive, it is not for the court to traverse the verdict, and an application for a new trial on the ground of excessive damage will be refused.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, laid down in Praed v. Graham, 38 W. R. 103, 24 Q. B. D. 53, although it binds the court, does not prevent the court from looking at other decisions of the Court of Appeal—viz., Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 27 W. R. 797, 4 Q. B. D. 403, 28 W. R. 10, 5 Q. B. D. 78, as construing Praed v. Graham in the light of those decisions.

Decision in Rowley v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 21 W. R. 869, L. R. 8 Exch. 221, adopted.—JOHNSTON v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 612; [1904] 2 K. B. 250; 73 L. J. K. B. 568.

26. Parties—Trustee—Breach of trust—Claim for replacement of property—Executors of trustee—Representatives of trust estate.—In an action by a cestui que trust against the executors of a deceased trustee (who was not the last surviving trustee) for the replacement of trust property alleged to have been lost by breaches of trust, the representatives of the trust estate must be made parties to the action. If there are no such representatives, and there is a power of appointing new trustees, that power must be exercised and the new trustees joined as parties. — JORDAN, RE, HAYWARD v. HAMILTON, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 150; [1904] 1 Ch. 260; 73 L. J. Ch. 128; 90 L. T. 223.

27. Power of court to take notice of illegality—New trial—Questions not raised in court below.—It is the right and duty of the court at any stage of a cause to consider, and, if it be proved, to act upon, an illegality which may be fatal to the contention of either party to the litigation, so as to prevent the process of the court from being used to establish a claim which ought not to be enforced. But in a case in which a court of appeal, after argument and before judgment, raised of its own motion the question of the illegality of the contract upon which the action was brought, which had not been raised in argument before them, the Judicial Committee, though considering the circumstances very suspicious, declined to give judgment upon questions which had not been raised in the court below, and sent the case back for a new trial.—CONNOLLY v. CONSUMERS' CORDAGE CO., P.C.; 89 L. T. 347.

28. Review—Action of review—Charging order—Error in law apparent on face of order.—The High Court has no jurisdiction, by means of an independent action, to review its own order on the ground that the order is erroneous in law upon its face.—BRIGHT & CO. v. SELLAR, C.A., 148; [1904] 1 K. B. 6; 72 L. J. K. B. 809; 89 L. T. 431.

29. Service of writ—Scottish corporation carrying on business in England—Ord. 9, r. 8.—The writ in an action against the Bank of Scotland was served upon the manager of a branch of the defendant bank at the office of the branch in London. The defendant bank was constituted under statute which contained no provision for service of process upon the bank.

Held, that the service was valid under ord. 9, r. 8.— LOGAN v. BANK OF SCOTLAND, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 495.

30. Service of writ out of the jurisdiction—Ord. 11, rr. 1, 4—Primâ facie evidence of breach within jurisdiction.—Where application is made for leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction, or to discharge an order for such service, the court is not called upon to try the merits of the action, but the affidavits should show a primâ facie cause of action within the jurisdiction, and disclose a substantial question which the plaintiff bonâ fide desires to try. Sufficient information should be given to make clear the ground on which the court is asked to proceed.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.—CHEMISCHE FABRIK, &c. v. BADISCHE ANILIN, &c., H.L.; 90 L. T. 733.

31. Service out of the jurisdiction—Summons to enforce award—Submission to jurisdiction—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 47), s. 12—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11.—A contract between the appellants, who were foreigners carrying on business abroad, and the respondent contained an arbitration clause. The respondent instituted arbitration proceedings the appellants, and appointed an arbitrator. The appellants did not appoint an arbitrator, and the hearing of the arbitration took place without any appearance on the part of the appellants before the sole arbitrator, who made an award in favour of the respondent. The respondent applied for leave to serve on the appellants out of the jurisdiction a summons to enforce the award under section 12 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Held, that the court had no power to allow service out of the jurisdiction of such a summons.—RASCH & Co. v. WULFERT, C.A., 145; [1904] 1 K. B. 118; 73 L J. K. B. 20; 89 L. T. 493.

32. Short cause—Affidavits in support.—In actions coming on as short causes without pleadings or notice of motion copies of the affidavits in support should be left with the papers for the use of the judge.—CHURCH STRETTON MINERAL WATER CO., RE, Ch. D. Byrne, J., 375.

33. Staying proceedings—Frivolous and vexatious action—Interlocutory application in county court—Subsequent action in High Court raising same question—Ord. 25, r. 4.—Where an action was brought in good faith to try a legal point which ought to be tried, a motion, under ord. 25, r. 4, to dismiss the action as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court, on the ground that the point was res judicata, having been raised and determined in previous proceedings, was dismissed with costs in any event.

Decision of Swinfen Eady, J. (89 L. T. Rep. 744), affirmed.—LEA v. THURSBY, C.A.; 90 L. T. 265.

34. Summons for directions—Order of master—Setting down for trial as short cause—Motion for judgment—Evidence by affidavit—Notice—Consent—Ord. 16, r. 21; Ord. 30, r. 2; Ord. 36, r. 14; Ord. 40, r. 1; Ord. 52, r. 5.—This was a debenture-holders' action which the master set down for trial without pleadings to be heard as a short cause; judgment to be applied for on minutes; the evidence to be taken by affidavit.

Two days' notice of motion was served on the defendants, and an objection was taken at the hearing that this was not in compliance with the master's order, and that ten days' notice of trial ought to have been given under ord. 36, r. 14.

Held, that the order was defective in that it did not give the plaintiff leave to serve notice of trial, but, assuming that leave to serve such notice was implied in the order, it remained that the order was to set down the action for trial, and that ten days' notice must be given.—PRINGLE & Co., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 89 L. T. 743.

See also Appeal, 1, 2; House of Lords, 1, 2; Interpleader, 1.

PRESCRIPTION:—

Lost grant—Presumption—User—Acquiescence—Disentailment and resettlement—Tenant for life in possession—Implication of lost grant as against reversioner—Dedication of right of way—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 7, 8.—Where there is a tenant for life in possession of settled land, a lost grant of a right of way cannot be implied as against the reversioner merely from the user of the way during the lifetime of the tenant for life, one ground being that reversioner, not being in possession, would have no power to prevent the user; and the circumstance that the reversioner joined with the tenant for life in barring the entail, and in making a resettlement during the period of the user, does not alter the case.

Bradbury v. Grinsell (2 Wms. Saund. 175 (d) (e)) and Daniel v. North (11 East, 372) considered and applied.

Decision of Walton, J., affirmed.—ROBERTS v. JAMES, C.A.; 89 L. T. 282.

See also Easement.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT:—

1. Authority of agent—Underwriters at Lloyd's—Policy guaranteeing that drawer of bill will put acceptor in funds to meet it—Policy authorized by terms of agency, but made to benefit agent and not in the interest of the principal—Liability of principal.—Where an agent, who is authorized to make contracts "for and on behalf of" his principal, has acted within the terms of a written authority given to him by the principal, but the existence of which was not known to the other party to the contract, the principal cannot, if the other party has acted bonâ fide, repudiate liability, although such contract was made by the agent solely in his (the agent's) own interest and not in the interest of his principal.

Decision of Bigham, J. (51 W. R. 652, [1903] 2 K. B. 399), reversed.—HAMBRO & SON v. BURNAND, C.A., 583; [1904] 2 K. B. 10; 73 L. J. K. B. 669; 90 L. T. 803.

2. Commission—Corrupt bargain—Confirmation by principal—Evidence—Necessity of full knowledge of all facts.—The defendant, acting through his agent, entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, who were shipbuilders, for the building of a ship. Before the contract was arranged the plaintiffs secretly agreed to give a commission to the defendant's agent.

At an interview which afterwards took place between the plaintiffs and the defendant as to the payment by him of money due under this contract, the plaintiffs informed him that they had agreed to pay commission to the agent, and the defendant, after being so informed, paid them a small sum on account. The plaintiffs afterwards brought an action to recover the balance due to them.

At the trial of the action, Bruce, J., held that, by reason of the plaintiffs' secret agreement to give a commission to the defendant's agent, the contract was one which entitled the defendant to repudiate, but that by what had occurred at his interview with the plaintiffs he had confirmed the contract and debarred himself from repudiating it (88 L. T. Rep. 286). On appeal, Held, reversing the decision of Bruce, J., that the plaintiffs had not shown that there had been a full disclosure to the defendant of all the circumstances in connection with the plaintiffs' agreement to pay commission to the agent, and that, therefore, there had been no such confirmation by the defendant of his contract as debarred him from repudiating it.—BARTRAM v. LLOYD, C.A.; 90 L. T. 357.

3. Commission—"When and if the purchase is completed by private treaty."—The defendant, who was desirous of selling a house, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff that if the latter introduced to him a person who should become the purchaser of the house, he, the defendant, would pay the plaintiff as and by way of commission a certain sum "when and if the purchase is completed by private treaty." The plaintiff introduced a purchaser who was accepted by the defendant, and a contract to purchase was signed and a deposit paid. The purchaser was unable to carry out the contract, and it was agreed between her and the defendant that he should release her from the contract in consideration that he should retain the deposit, and this was accordingly done.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission, as the purchase was "completed by private treaty" so far as he was concerned.—CHAPMAN v. WINSON, K.B.D., 478; 90 L. T. 159.

4. Secret commission—Breach of duty—Right of agent to commission.—The relation of principal and agent implies that the agent will act solely on behalf of his principal. If, therefore, in breach of his duty as agent, he receives a secret commission from the other side, he is not only liable to refund the secret commission, but he is not entitled to any commission; and the principal is entitled to recover any commission that he has paid the agent.—ANDREW v. RAMSAY, K.B.D., 126; [1903] 2 K. B. 635; 72 L. J. K. B. 865; 89 L. T. 450.

See also Limitations, Statute of, 2.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.—See Mortgage, 6.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration—Person entitled to administration missing—Length of absence—Citation—Applicant entitled—Special circumstances—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—When an application is made to the court for a grant of letters of administration by a person who is not primarily entitled to the grant, the special circumstances of the case will be taken into consideration, and the court will use its discretion in granting or refusing administration under section 73 of the Probate Act, 1857.

Where the special circumstances are such as to justify the court in coming to the conclusion that the person who would be entitled to a grant of letters of administration in priority to the applicant is dead, or may reasonably be presumed to be dead, the grant of administration will be made to the applicant upon his swearing that he believes himself to be the next-of-kin of the deceased.

In the Goods of Reed, 29 L. T. Rep. 932, and In the Goods of Callicott, 80 L. T. Rep. 421, [1899] P. 189 followed and approved.—CHAPMAN, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1903] P. 192; 72 L. J. P. 62; 89 L. T. 308.

2. Colonial Probates Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 6) —Resealing—Limited grant.—A Colonial grant, though limited, may be resealed in the United Kingdom, provided that the proper conditions prescribed by the Colonial Probates Act, 1892, have been complied with.—SMITH, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 114; 73 L. J. P. 28; 90 L. T. 169.

3. Corporate body—Grant to corporate body and to individuals—Jurisdiction—Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20)—Practice.—The court will not make a grant of probate to a body corporate and to one or more individuals, all of whom have been appointed executors by a will.—MARTIN, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 90 L. T. 264.

4. Costs—Practice—Rule 41 (Contentious Rules, 1862)—R. S. C., ord. 21, r. 18—Suit for revocation of probate—Notice by plaintiff to cross-examine.—In construing ord. 21, r. 18, the principles which guided the old Ecclesiastical Courts, and afterwards the Probate Court, ought to be considered; and, following out those principles, a distinction is to be drawn between a party who seeks to call in and obtain revocation of probate, and a party who enters a caveat and takes the ordinary steps in opposing a will being admitted to proof.

A notice given under ord. 21, r. 18, by a plaintiff who claimed revocation of probate, held bad.

Beale v. Beale, (1874) L. R. 3 P. & M. 179, approved.—TOMALIN v. SMART, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 141; 73 L. J. P. 37; 90 L. T. 171.

5. Execution of will—Presence of witnesses—Attestation clause—Evidence—Presumption.—Where a will appears to be duly signed and witnessed, it is a presumption of law that the execution was duly carried out according to the requirement of the Wills Act, 1837, even though the witnesses may afterwards be in doubt as to what took place at the time of its execution.—WHITING v. TURNER, P.D. & Ad.D.; 89 L. T. 71.

6. Foreign domicil, will and marriage—English domicil subsequently acquired.—The third section of the Wills Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), is not limited in its operation to wills of British subjects, but extends to the will of a foreign testatrix made before her marriage, and in strict conformity with the law of her foreign domicil at that time, according to which marriage does not revoke a will.—GROOS, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 269; 73 L. J. P. 82.

7. Soldier's will—Military instructions—"Effects to be credited"—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 11.—Where a soldier on active service makes a declaration, at the instance of the military authorities who make a note of it at the time, to the effect, in the event of his death, he desires all his "effects to be credited" to a named person, such declaration is a valid testamentary document.—SCOTT, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1903] P. 243; 73 L. J. P. 17; 89 L. T. 588.

8. Undue influence—Fraud—Costs.—The court held that, inasmuch as there did not appear to be anything unreasonable in the charge of undue influence and fraud being made, it was justified in allowing the plaintiff's costs as between solicitor and client to come out of the estate, and subject thereto the costs of the defendant as between party and party to be paid out of the estate also.—WILSON v. BASSETT, P.D. & Ad.D., 274; [1903] P. 239; 72 L. J. P. 89; 89 L. T. 586.

9. Universal devisee and legatee—No executor named—Administration or probate—Title of administrator to real estate—Probate Court—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1, sub-section 1; s. 24, sub-section 2.—The universal devisee and legatee of a testamentary paper in which no executor is named is entitled to administration with the will annexed, but not to probate according to the tenor of the will. The practice of the Probate Court hitherto prevailing in this respect has not been altered by the Land Transfer Act, 1897.

Per Stirling, L.J.: The title of an administrator, though it does not exist until the grant of administration, relates back to the time of the death both as to real estate (by virtue of section 1, sub-section 1) as well as to personalty.—PRYSE, IN THE GOODS OF, C.A.; [1904] P. 301; 73 L. J. P. 84; 90 L. T. 747.

PUBLIC AUTHORITY :—

1. Action against—Tramway system acquired by county council — Public undertaking or commercial enterprize—Acquired and carried on with funds provided by the rates—Accident to passenger—Time within which action must be brought — Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (a).—The defendants, a local authority, acquired under an Act of Parliament power to purchase and work the undertaking of a tramway company with funds provided out of the rates. The plaintiffs received personal injuries owing to the alleged negligence of the defendants' servants, whereby the tramcar on which they were travelling collided with another tramcar. In an action to recover damages commenced more than six months after the accident, the defendants pleaded that the action could not be maintained by reason of the provision in section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

Held, that the local authority could avail themselves of the protection afforded to public authorities, and that the action, therefore, not having been brought within six months, was barred.—PARKER v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 476; [1904] 2 K. B. 501; 73 L. J. K. B. 561; 90 L. T. 415.

2. Action against justice—Issue of distress warrant —Limitation of action—Time of conviction or distress—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—The defendant, a police magistrate, convicted the plaintiff of an offence, and ordered him to pay a fine. The plaintiff having failed to pay, the defendant issued a distress warrant by virtue of which the plaintiff's goods were distrained upon. The conviction was subsequently quashed. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendant for damages for illegal distress. The action was commenced more than six months after the conviction, but less than six months after the distress warrant was issued.

Held, that the action was not barred by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.—POLLEY v. FORDHAM, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 345; 73 L. J. K. B. 687; 90 L. T. 755.

3. Payment of debt — Public duty—Damages— Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61)—Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 46).—Where a contractor brought an action under a building contract against a public authority for payment for work done and damages after the expiration of the time limited by the above-mentioned Acts for the suing of a public authority in respect of acts done in the performance of a public duty,

Held, that the public authority was not entitled to the protection given by the said Acts, and that the plaintiff could recover.

Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, [1896] A. C. 477, 45 W. R. Dig. 111, followed. — SHARPINGTON v. FULHAM GUARDIANS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 617.

PUBLIC HEALTH :—

1. Bye-law — Continuing offence — Evidence — Reasonableness.—The appellants, having been convicted of permitting a new building, executed in contravention of a bye-law, which bye-law did not contain any provision allowing the local authority to dispense with its provisions in any particular case, to continue to exist in such state as to be in contravention of the bye-law, the only evidence given was that one of the appellants had been convicted of originally erecting the building contrary to the bye-law, and that it was in the same condition as then, and that both appellants resided in the house to which the building in question was attached.

Held, that the bye-law was reasonable; that the conviction for the original offence was not evidence of the continuing offence; and that the justices had power under section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, to deal with an offence against the bye-laws if they thought fit to do so.—POMEROY v. MALVERN URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 555.

2. Dangerous structure—Costs incurred by authority —Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 75—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 160, 257—Costs of appellant where respondent does not appear — Practice.— Section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, does not apply to section 75 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, incorporated in the Act of 1875 by section 160.

Expenses of putting up a hoarding under section 75 of the Act of 1847 can be therefore recovered, although three months have not elapsed since the demand.

Costs may be granted in a proper case against a respondent, the defendant before the justices, even although he does not appear upon the appeal.—USK URBAN COUNCIL v. MORTIMER, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 25.

3. Drain on private ground—Draining several houses—Drain or sewer—"Single private drain"— Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. s. 59), s. 19.—J. was the owner of twelve houses, at the rear of which runs a main or common drain with which each of the houses connects.

The sewage is conveyed from the main or common drain through a branch drain into the public sewer.

The sewage of four other houses, belonging to two other owners, is conveyed by the main or common drain, which also runs at the rear of those four houses, into the said branch drain.

Both the main or common drain and the branch drain are constructed wholly on private property, and it was admitted that the branch drain was a "single private drain" within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890.

Held, that the main or common drain running at the rear of J.'s houses was a sewer and was not a "single private drain" within section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act of 1890.—JACKSON v. WIMBLEDON URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 359; 73 L. J. K. B. 428; 90 L. T. 417.

4. Meat—Meat going bad while stored—Meat not set out or offered for sale—"Intended for the food of man"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116, 117.—On a Monday morning, shortly after twelve o'clock at noon, an inspector of nuisances visited the shop where the appellant carried on the business of a butcher. The shop contained a safe which the inspector found closed. It was opened by him and found to contain some meat which showed signs of decomposition. Business was carried on in the plaintiff's shop up to midnight on the previous Saturday, when all the meat remaining unsold was placed in the safe, and was then sound and fit for the food of man. On the Monday in question the safe had not been opened after midnight on the previous Saturday until the inspector's visit, a period of thirty-six hours.

In the ordinary course of the appellant's business all the meat contained in the safe would have been examined before setting it out for sale, and any part found to have been unsound would have been removed.

Held, that there was no evidence that the meat was deposited on the appellant's premises for the purpose of sale and intended for the food of man.

Mallinson v. Carr, 63 L. T. Rep. 459, 17 Cox C. C. 228, [1891] 1 Q. B. 48, distinguished.—WIELAND v. BUTLER-HOGAN, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 588.

5. Nuisance—Private drain draining several houses—Drain emptying into cesspool—Undertaking by owner to treat drain and cesspool as private and to cleanse same—Nuisance at cesspool—Liability of owner as "person by whose act, default, or sufferance nuisance arises"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 94, 95, 96.—The appellant, a builder who had built houses on each side of a certain road, submitted plans to the local authority for a scheme of drainage for the houses, and the plans were accepted subject to the appellant entering into an undertaking with the local authority, which he did; and accordingly a drain or sewer, with which each house was connected by a single pipe, was constructed along the middle of the road for a distance of about 1,200ft., communicating with the surface by manholes and terminating in the road at a point at which it was connected with a large cesspool constructed on the adjoining land of which the appellant was lessee in possession. Several of the houses were connected with the drain and were drained through the drain into the cesspool as the ultimate outfall. The appellant was not the occupier of any of the houses, but was, within the meaning of the Public Health Acts, the owner of six of them and of the land on which the cesspool was built; and in the undertaking given to the local authority he undertook that the drains should, for all purposes of the Public Health Acts, be private drains, and that the drains and cesspool should be cleansed and maintained by him. A nuisance existed at the cesspool from the overflowing therefrom of sewage.

Held, on the authority of Meader v. West Cowes Local Board, 67 L. T. Rep. 454, [1892] 3 Ch. 18, that the appellant was the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arose, and that the obligation to clean out the cesspool and abate the nuisance was upon him and not upon the local authority, notwithstanding that the drain received the drainage of more than one house.—BUTT v. SNOW, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 302.

6. Sewer or drain—"Single private drain"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—T. was the owner of a block of seven houses in a street, and adjacent to these were two blocks of six houses each, belonging to another owner. There were two private passages between the blocks leading to the backs of the houses.

A 6in. pipe passed through the two blocks and across the two passages, passing into a 9in. pipe passing through the block belonging to T., and out into the main sewer in a street running at right angles to the street in which the three blocks were situated.

Held, that the 9in. pipe was a sewer and not a drain, and so was repairable by the local authority.—THOMPSON v. ECCLES CORPORATION, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 1; 73 L. J. K. B. 497; 90 L. T. 507.

7. Street not repairable by inhabitants at large—Expenses of sewering and paving—Liability of owner of premises—Owner at date of completion of work not owner at date of demand—Liability of person not owner at date of demand—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257.—Under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, notices were served by an urban authority upon the owners of premises fronting or abutting on a street (not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large) to sewer, pave, and make up the street. These notices not having been complied with, the urban authority executed the necessary works and apportioned the expenses upon the owners of premises fronting on the street, the appellant, both at the time of the notice to pave and at the time of the completion of the works by the urban authority, was the owner of premises fronting the street; but before the date of the notice of apportionment and of the demand upon him to pay the amount apportioned on his premises, he had ceased to be owner, having sold the premises, and upon the date of demand of such amount he was not owner of the premises.

Upon summary proceedings before justices to recover the amount apportioned on the premises from the appellant as being the "owner in default" within the meaning of section 150,

Held, but only upon the authority of the case of Reg. v. Swindon New Town Local Board, 4 Q. B. D. 305, that, notwithstanding the words in section 257 of the Act that such expenses may be recovered by the local authority "from any person who is the owner of such premises when the works are completed," the appellant not having been the owner at the date of the demand upon him to pay the apportioned amount, was not the "owner in default" within the meaning of section 160, although he was the owner of the premises at the time when the works were completed, and that therefore he was not liable to pay the expenses. To be the "owner in default" in such cases, a person must be the owner not only at the time when the works are completed, but also at the time when the apportioned amount is demanded from him.

Reg. v. Swindon New Town Local Board followed but questioned.—MILLARD v. BALBY-WITH-HEXTHORPE URBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 489.

See also Highway, 5; Inland Revenue, 13; Landlord and Tenant, 5, 10; Local Government, 6, 7, 11, 14-16; Metropolis, 12-16; Nuisance, 4.

RAILWAY:—

1. Bye-law—Intermediate station—Passenger breaks journey at a junction where it was necessary for her to change—Right of company to treat contract ended and to require ticket to be given up if passenger leaves the station.—The plaintiff took a return ticket, available for seven days on the defendant's line from Chorley to Manchester. She returned the same day by a train from Manchester which only brought her as far as Bolton, where she had to change and wait some half-hour for the next train to Chorley. She therefore determined to visit a friend in the town and to return in the evening by a later train. On quitting the station the ticket collector informed her that, as the next train would be leaving for Chorley shortly, if she did not go by it but left the station and returned by a later train, she must give up her ticket and re-book. She gave up her ticket under protest, and on completing her return journey by a subsequent train took a ticket to Chorley, for which she paid 11½d. In an action by her to recover the sum so paid,

Held, that in the absence of special terms a contract by a railway company to carry a passenger from one station to another does not give the passenger a right to break the journey, although the station where the passenger desires to alight and stay for a time is a junction at which he or she was obliged to change trains. Therefore, in the present case, the sum paid for a ticket from Bolton to Chorley could not be recovered back by the plaintiff from the company.—ASHTON v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 655; [1904] 2 K. B. 313; 73 L. J. K. B. 701.

2. Carriage of goods—Owner's risk note—Failure to carry goods by route specified.—Fish, in barrels, was consigned by the plaintiff to the defendant railway company to be carried from Brixham to Jersey, viâ Southampton, upon terms that the plaintiff, in consideration of his being charged a reduced rate, relieved the defendants from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention, except upon proof that it arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants. The defendants by a mistake carried the fish past Exeter, the station at which they ought to have transferred the barrels to the London and South-Western Railway Co.'s system, and the mistake was not discovered until the fish arrived at Taunton. It was then sent from Taunton viâ Weymouth to Jersey, with the object of lessening the damage. In consequence of this mistake the arrival of the fish at its destination was delayed, and the plaintiff suffered damage.

Held, that the defendants were protected by the terms of the contract.

Mallet v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 47 W. R. 334, [1899] 1 Q. B. 309, distinguished.—FOSTER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY, K.B.D., 685; [1904] 2 K. B. 306; 90 L. T. 779.

3. Goods consigned by shippers for carriage over several companies' lines under their special contract with railway company—Goods lost by fire while on rail—Privity of contract—Alternate rates—Owners' risk—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 7.—Where two or more railway companies agree together to carry through goods at a special rate in consideration that the goods are conveyed at owners' risk on their respective lines, and goods are lost or damaged, the sender has no cause of action, although the loss or damage to the goods occurred through the negligence of one of the companies other than that to which the sender or his agent consigned the goods on these terms.—BARRATT v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, K.B.D., 479.

4. Parliamentary deposit fund—Abandoned undertaking—Mortgage by sureties, owners of the fund—Payment out of court—Costs of owners having conduct of proceedings.—The sureties of a railway company, owners of the parliamentary fund deposited in court, mortgaged the fund. On the abandonment of the undertaking the usual inquiries were directed and the sureties had the conduct of the proceedings. On application for payment out,

Held, they were not entitled to their costs incurred in the proceedings wherein the inquiries were directed.—LANCASHIRE, DERBYSHIRE, AND EAST COAST RAILWAY ACTS, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 26; [1903] 2 Ch. 711; 72 L. J. Ch. 789.

5. Rates — Carriage — Pitwood — Measurement weight or actual weight.—Under the Great Western Railway Co. (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, the company are not bound to carry pitwood for mining purposes by measurement weight at the rates specified in the schedule thereto as applicable to goods in Class C.—GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY v. CASWELL, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 508.

6. Rates—Carriage of non-perishable goods by passenger train—Absence of statutory duty to so carry—Inclusive charge for collection, carriage, and delivery—Right of company to impose its own terms—Equality clause—Midland Railway Co. Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. cxviii.), s. 203—Railway Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 90—Midland Railway Co. Act (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. cxix.), Part V., clause 3.—By section 203 of the Midland Railway Co. Act, 1844, it was enacted that "all tolls for the use of the railway shall be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate. . . ."

By the Midland Railway Co. (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, it was provided that "the company shall not be under obligation to convey by passenger train, or any similar service, any merchandise other than perishables." By the same Act a provisional order fixing maximum rates for the conveyance of goods was fixed.

Held, that both section 203 of the Act of 1844 and section 90 (the "equality clause") of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, apply only to tolls which the defendant railway company were authorized by their Act to take, and that as the company were under no statutory obligation to carry non-perishable goods by passenger train, they were entitled to demand from persons who wished to send such goods by passenger train a special rate, including collection, carriage, and delivery, although the collection had been in fact made by the sender himself.—STONE v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., C.A., 491; [1904] 1 K. B. 669; 73 L. J. K. B. 392; 90 L. T. 194.

7. Rates—Undue preference—Shipment rate and works rate—Works rate for same services higher than shipment rate—Right of trader to apply for reduction of works rate—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 2—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), s. 27.—The mere fact that a railway company charge a higher rate for carriage of coal over the same length of line to traders' works—all traders being charged an equal rate—than they do for coal for shipment, is not of itself sufficient to give a trader a right to apply to the court for reduction of the works rate, and such difference between the works rate and the shipment rate does not necessarily show an undue preference or an undue prejudice within the meaning of the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts.—SPILLERS v. TAFF VALE RAILWAY CO., K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 713.

8. Receiver — Rolling stock — Proceeds of sale—Debenture-holders — Priority — Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), ss. 4, 23.—Rolling stock and other chattels of an insolvent railway company were sold to another railway company under the provisions of a statutory agreement, which directed the proceeds of sale to be paid to a receiver already appointed under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, and gave the purchasing company the exclusive right of working the insolvent company's railway for ten years on certain terms.

Held, that the proceeds of sale constituted money received by the receiver within the meaning of section 4, and the holders of mortgage debentures charging the undertaking were therefore entitled to those proceeds under section 23, in priority to unsecured creditors.

Yorkshire Railway Wagon Co. v. Maclure, (1882) 21 Ch. D. 309, 314, and In re Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway Co., (1888) 40 Ch. D. 119, 130, applied.—LISKEARD AND CARADON RAIL-WAY CO., RE, Swinfen Eady, J.; [1903] 2 Ch. 681; 72 L. J. Ch. 754; 89 L. T. 437.

9. Taking lands—Compulsory powers—Duration of—Computation of time—"Three years from the passing of this Act"—Exclusion of day of passing of Act—West Metropolitan Railway Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. ccl.), s. 29.—By section 29 of the West Metropolitan Railway Act, 1899, "the powers of the company for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purposes of this Act shall cease after the expiration of three years from the passing of this Act."

The Act passed on the 9th of August, 1899, and notice to treat for part of the land was served on the 9th of August, 1902.

Held, that in computing the three years the day of the passing of the Act must be excluded, and that therefore the compulsory powers of the company did not cease until midnight of the 9th of August, 1902.—GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY v. WEST METROPOLITAN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 21; [1904] 1 K. B. 1; 72 L. J. K. B. 931; 89 L. T. 428.

See also Carrier, 2.

RATING:—

1. Collector — Poor rate collector (Ireland)—Transfer of existing officers to county council—Scheme for collection of poor rate—Remuneration—Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, c. 37, s. 115, sub-sections 10-16, 18.—Sub-section 18 of section 115 of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, does not apply to poor rate collectors transferred to a county council, at any rate so far as the fixing the amount of their remuneration is concerned. Provision for their remuneration is made by sub-section 11.

So held by the Earl of Halsbury, L.C., and Lords Macnaghten, Davey, and Robertson, Lord Lindley dissenting.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (I.) ([1902] 2 I. R. 637) reversed, and the order for the mandamus discharged.—LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD FOR IRELAND v. MCKAY, H.L.; [1903] A. C. 402; 72 L. J. P. C. 100; 89 L. T. 277.

2. General district rate—Proportion of assessment—Rating Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54) ss. 3, 6—Public Heath Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211.—Where a right of sporting over land which is used as "arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands," is let apart from the land, the lessee of that right is not the "occupier" of such land within the meaning of section 211, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health Act, 1875, so as to entitle him to be assessed in respect of the same to the general district rate in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net annual value thereof; he is the occupier of a special hereditament—namely, the sporting right, and is liable, under section 6 of the Rating Act, 1874, to be assessed in respect thereof on the full rateable value of that hereditament.—ALTON URBAN COUNCIL v. SPICER, K.B.D, 624; [1904] 1 K. B. 678; 73 L. J. K. B. 280; 90 L. T. 576.

3. General district rate—Publication—Local Act—Power to order making of rate by overseers in same manner as poor rate—Necessity of publication of combined rate—Objection on application for distress warrant—Derby Corporation Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. cclxvii.), s. 180—Poor Rate Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 3), s. 1.—By a local Act a corporation were empowered, instead of themselves making, assessing, and levying any general district rate, to order such rates to be made, assessed, and levied as a borough rate, and to enforce payment from the overseers in the same manner as a borough rate, and if such order were made such rates were to be made, assessed, and levied by the overseers in the same manner and under the same provisions as in the case of the poor rate, and the overseers were to recover and enforce the poor rate in the same manner as the general district rate under the Public Health Act, 1875.

A rate which comprised both poor rate and general district rate was duly made by the corporation under the Act, and was duly allowed by two justices, but was not published.

Held, that "publication" was essential to the validity of the rate, as in the case of a poor rate under section 1 of the Poor Rate Act, 1743, and that the defence of non-publication could be raised in answer to a summons for a distress warrant for non-payment of the combined rate, as in the case of a distress warrant for non-payment of a poor rate.—BEESON v. DERBY OVERSEERS, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 47.

4. House—Occupation—Caretaker—51 Geo. 3, c. 150.—By 51 Geo. 3, c. 150, after reciting an Act of 12 Car. 2, c. 37, whereby a yearly sum of £250 was charged upon the houses of the inhabitants of the parish of St. Paul, Covent-garden, for the support and benefit of the rector, curate, clerk, and sextons for the time being of that parish, that charge of £250 was repealed, and in lieu thereof a yearly sum of £520 was charged upon all houses within the said parish to be assessed by the churchwardens and paid by the occupiers of such houses respectively.

Held, that houses consisting of the offices, warehouses, store-rooms, and counting-houses of publishers, some rooms in which were occupied by caretakers and their families, such caretakers having internal access to the whole of the premises, were chargeable under this statute.

Surman v. Darley, 14 M. & W. 181, considered.—LEWIN v. NEWNES, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 160.

5. Payment—"A term not exceeding three months"—Tenancy from week to week—Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), ss. 1, 2.—A tenancy from week to week determinable by a week's notice on either side is a tenancy for "a term not exceeding three months" within section 1 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869.—HAMMOND v. FARROW, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 332; 73 L. J. K. B. 726.

6. Poor law—Part payment—Issue of distress warrant for balance—12 & 13 Vict. c. 14.—A ratepayer who was summoned for non-payment of a rate tendered a substantial portion of the rate in court, which tender was refused.

Held, that the magistrate was justified in refusing to issue a distress warrant except for the balance of the rate over and above the amount so tendered.—REX v. GILLESPIE, K.B.D., 367; [1904] 1 K. B. 174; 73 L. J. K. B. 106; 90 L. T. 15.

7. Poor rate—Application for distress warrant—Tender of part of rate—Jurisdiction of justices to issue distress warrant for whole rate—Jurisdiction to issue warrant of commitment for whole rate—Distress for Rates Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14), ss. 1, 2.—Where, upon a summons for a distress warrant for a poor rate, the person liable to pay the same tenders a part of the rate in court before the justices, the justices have, notwithstanding such tender in court, jurisdiction to issue a distress warrant for the whole amount of the rate, and, in default of sufficient distress to satisfy the whole amount, to issue a warrant of commitment in respect of the whole amount, notwithstanding a subsequent tender of part.

Rex v. Gillespie, [1904] 1 K. B. 174, explained.—WILES, EX PARTE, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 225.

8. Recovery of rates—Illegal distress—Liability of overseers—Poor Relief Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 12), s. 7—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 5, sub-section 1; s. 19, sub-section 5; s. 33.—Where a justices' warrant of distress for rates is handed by one of the overseers to the assistant overseer, who, by the terms of his appointment, is authorized to perform all the duties of an overseer, and the assistant overseer, in the execution of the warrant, is guilty of an illegal and excessive distress, the overseers are not liable for the assistant overseer's conduct.—BAKER v. WICKS, K.B.D., 556; [1904] 1 K. B. 743; 73 L. J. K. B. 410; 90 L. T. 706.

9. Volunteer drill hall and storehouse—Part occasionally let for other purposes—Exemption from rates—Crown purposes.—Certain premises were used as a storehouse, drill hall, &c., for a volunteer battalion, the whole of the property being in the occupation of, and vested in, the commanding officer. Certain portions of the premises were occasionally let for lectures, balls, &c., but such letting was subservient to the use of the premises for military purposes.

The appellant was the caretaker, and did not reside on the premises, but the musical and dramatic licences were taken out in the name of the appellant. The appellant was rated in respect of such portions of the premises as were let out for the above-mentioned purposes.

Held, that, although the appellant was not the proper person to be rated, as he was only a servant, yet those portions of the premises which were let out were properly rateable.—LEWIS v. DURHAM UNION, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 383.

See also Poor Law, 1.

RECEIVER:—

1. Administrator pendente lite—Indemnity—Costs of defending action—Charges of personal misconduct—Defence of the action no benefit to the estate.—Although an administrator pendente lite and a receiver is entitled to an indemnity from the estate for his costs in an action brought against him as such administrator or receiver in respect of the estate, where he is defending the estate, yet he is not entitled to his costs incurred in defending a personal action in which he is charged with fraud and personal misconduct where his defence cannot result in any benefit to the estate.

S. was appointed administrator pendente lite, and subsequently receiver, of an estate in an administration action. He had an action brought against him charging him with misconduct as such administrator and as such receiver. He applied as such receiver for leave to defend, but leave was not granted. The action was dismissed with costs, which, however, he did not obtain owing to the want of means of the plaintiff. Upon the administration action coming on for further consideration S. asked for indemnity from the estate for those costs.

Held, that as the action was brought against him personally, and as his defence could not have benefited the estate, S. was not entitled to such indemnity.—DUNN. RE, BRINKLOW v. SINGLETON, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 345; [1904] 1 Ch. 648; 73 L. J. Ch. 425.

2. Equitable execution—Subsequent mortgagees and judgment creditors—Stop order—Charging order—Priority.—An order appointing a receiver prevents the debtor from dealing with the moneys, over which the receiver has been appointed, to the prejudice of the execution creditor, and prevents any subsequent execution creditor from gaining priority over the creditor obtaining the order, if at the date when the order appointing the receiver was obtained, the property of the judgment debtor can not be taken in execution or made available by any other legal process.

Persons obtaining charging orders or stop orders on a fund in court paid in subsequently to the date of the receiving order do not obtain a priority.—ANGLESEY, RE, DE GALVE v. GARDNER, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 124; [1902] 2 Ch. 727; 72 L. J. Ch. 782; 89 L. T. 584.

3. Practice—Land in possession of receiver—Leave to issue writ for recovery of possession—Writ of possession issued without leave—Injunction.—Leasehold land was in the possession of a receiver appointed by the court on behalf of a mortgagee of the lessee. Leave was given by the court to the lessor to issue a writ against the lessee for the recovery of possession of the land. The lessor obtained judgment and, without obtaining further leave from the court, attempted to execute his judgment by issuing a writ of possession.

Held, that the leave given by the court did not extend beyond leave to obtain judgment, and, consequently, that the lessor could be restrained by injunction from interfering with the possession of the receiver.—MORRIS v. BAKER, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 207; 73 L. J. Ch. 143.

4. Practice—Writ of possession—Time—Ord. 41, r. 5—Ord. 47, r. 2.—Where an order was made directing delivery of certain premises into the possession of a receiver appointed by the order, but no time within which delivery of possession was to be made was specified in the order, it was held that a writ of possession could not issue because ord. 41, r. 5, had not been complied with.—SAVAGE v. BENTLEY, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 90 L. T. 641.

See also Mortgage, 4; Partnership, 3; Railway, 8; Vendor and Purchaser, 5.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE:—

1. Covenant — Agent — Construction — Limited to particular business—Reasonableness.—An agent of an insurance society, who was employed as agent in a particular district, by his contract of service, agreed that he would not "interfere directly or indirectly with the business" after resigning or being dismissed from his agency.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that, upon the true construction of the contract, the restraint was limited to the business of the society in the district in which the agent had acted for them, and was therefore reasonable and valid.—BARR v. CRAVEN, C.A.; 89 L. T. 574.

2. Music-hall artist—Covenant not to sing at any town within twenty miles of Manchester—Restraint to continue for six months after close of engagement—Reasonable restraint.—By an agreement in writing the defendant agreed to appear at the plaintiffs' theatre at Manchester at a salary of £60 per week. The agreement contained the following clause: "Prior to the commencement of this engagement and during its continuance, or within six months afterwards, no artist shall perform at any place of entertainment within twenty miles of Manchester . . . without the written consent of the director . . ." The defendant having been billed to appear at a theatre at Salford, in violation of this agreement and after leave to appear there had been refused her, the plaintiffs brought this action, claiming an injunction.

Held, on the evidence, that the restraint was reasonable, and therefore that the injunction claimed should be granted.

Nordenfelt v. Maxim-Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A. C. 535, followed.—TIVOLI, MANCHESTER (LIMITED) v. COLLEY, K.B.D, 632.

See also Contract, 11; Covenant, 5; Goodwill, 1; Solicitor, 6.

RIVER:—

Ownership of soil—Presumption and medium filum aquæ—Island.—The plaintiffs were incorporated by the Great Torrington Commons Act, 1889; and by that Act there were vested in the plaintiffs certain common and waste lands freed and discharged from manorial rights, but nevertheless upon the trusts and for the purposes in the Act declared.

The lands in question were bounded on one side by a river. In the river at that part was an island (probably as old as the banks themselves) of some length, and occupying a considerable portion of the breadth of the river. The plaintiffs were unable to establish an express title to this island, nor was it shown that there was any such title in any other person.

In an action against the defendants for an injunction to restrain the defendants from removing gravel from the bed of the river at a spot near and on the common's side of the island,

Held, that the rule—that where a stream flows between two manors or properties, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the boundary is to be taken to be the medium filumaquæ—should here be applied on behalf of the plaintiffs by drawing the medium filum through that part of the river which flowed between the island and the plaintiffs' lands; so that, as the spot from which the gravel was being removed fell beyond the medium filum so drawn, the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction.—GREAT TORRINGTON COMMONS CONSERVATORS v. MOORE STEPHENS, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 347; 73 L. J. Ch. 124; 89 L. T. 667.

See also Water, 1, 2.

SALE OF GOODS:—

1. Agreement for credit—Agreement to give bills—Refusal to give bills—Action for price of goods—Liability.—If there is an agreement on the sale of goods that credit should be given, and as a security an agreement by the purchaser to give an acceptance, even although the purchaser refuses to give such acceptance, the period of credit still stands.

Semble, there may be an action for refusing to accept the bill if damage can be proved.—RABE v. OTTO, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 562.

2. Contract to sell at minimum price—Principal and agent—Contract—Who is agent?—A retail dealer of merchandize is not bound by conditions as to its retail price that were imposed upon its wholesale dealer by its manufacturer, in the absence of an express contract in respect thereto made with the wholesale dealer. A wholesale dealer who, having bought goods, resells them for his own profit, is not an agent of his vendor; and he is not made so, because the contract between them provides that he shall be deemed an agent in the event of a sale by him to a retail dealer.—TADDY v. STERIOUS, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 152; [1904] 1 Ch. 354; 73 L. J. Ch. 191.

3. Custom—Right to reject—Custom limiting right—Validity—Custom incorporated in contracts—Powers of trade arbitrators.—By a custom a buyer of barley was not entitled to reject for difference or variation in quality unless the same was excessive or unreasonable and was so found by arbitration under the contract.

Held, that the custom was good.

Semble, that where a custom applicable to contracts in a certain trade comes to be incorporated as an express term in the contracts of that trade, the proper inference to be drawn is that it destroys that custom as a custom.

Apart from custom or contract, an arbitrator has no jurisdiction to award a money compensation instead of rejection, where such right to reject exists. — WALKERS, WINSER, & CO. v. SHAW, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 152; 73 L. J. K. B. 325; 90 L. T. 454.

4. Implied condition—Breach—Measure of damages—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 11, 13, 14, sub-section 2; s. 53, sub-section 2.—The defendants contracted to sell by description to the plaintiffs sulphuric acid, commercially free from arsenic. The plaintiff did not make known to the defendants, either expressly or by implication, the purpose which they required the acid. In breach of the implied condition that the acid should correspond with the description in the contract, the defendants supplied to the plaintiffs sulphuric acid which was not commercially free from arsenic. The plaintiffs by the exercise of ordinary care might have discovered the presence of arsenic in the acid; but they did not do so, and, in ignorance of the fact, used the acid in the manufacture of brewing sugar in the shape of invert and glucose, which they sold to brewers who used it in the brewing of beer. The beer thus made was rendered poisonous, and the brewers suffered loss in respect of which the plaintiffs were liable to them. The plaintiffs also lost the price of the acid, which was rendered worthless to them, and the value of other goods spoilt through being mixed with the acid; and the goodwill of their business was damaged.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the defendants the price of the acid and the value of the goods spoilt, but not the damages payable by the plaintiffs to the brewers or the damage to the goodwill of the plaintiffs' business.—BOSTOCK & CO. v. NICHOLSON & SONS, K.B.D.; [1904] 1 K. B. 725; 73 L. J. K. B. 524.

5. Materials for ship in course of construction—Bankruptcy of shipbuilder—Property in goods. — A firm of shipbuilders contracted to build a ship for respondents, to be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's, and built under their superintendence. The contract contained a clause to the effect that "The vessel as she is constructed, and all her engines, boilers, and machinery, and all materials from time to time intended for her or them, whether in the building yard, workshop, river, or elsewhere, shall immediately as the same proceeds become the property of the purchasers, and shall not be within the ownership, control, or disposition of the builders, but the builders shall at all times have a lien thereon for their unpaid purchase-money." The contract further provided that in default of delivery it should be competent for the owners to take possession of the vessel, and of all materials intended for her, and to complete her themselves. Before the vessel was completed the shipbuilders became bankrupt. At the date of the bankruptcy there was in the shipbuilding yard a quantity of plates intended for use in the construction of the ship. They had been passed by Lloyd's surveyor at the makers' works, and had been marked with the number of the ship for which they were intended, and with the position they were to occupy in her. They had been seen in the shipbuilding yard by the shipowners so marked, but not been specially inspected or approved by them.

Held, that the case was governed by the decision in Seath v. Moore, 54 L. T. Rep. 690, 11 App. Cas, 350, and was not affected by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), and that the trustee in the bankruptcy was entitled to the plates as against the shipowners.

Judgment of the First Division of the Court of Session in Scotland reversed.—REID v. MACBETH, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 223; 90 L. T. 422.

SCOTLAND, LAW of:—

1. Entail — Restriction — Provision for widow—Deduction from free rental—Entail Provisions Act, 1824 (Aberdeen Act) (5 Geo. 4, c. 87), s. 1.—By section 1 of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 87, it was provided that the annuity to the widow of the deceased heir of entail "shall not exceed one third part of the free yearly rent of the said lands and estates where the same shall be let, or of the free yearly value thereof where the same shall not be let, after deducting the public burdens, life-rent provisions, the yearly interest of debts and provisions, including the interest of provisions to children . . . and the yearly amount of other burdens of what nature sover affecting and burdening the said lands and estates, or the yearly rents or proceeds thereof, and diminishing the clear yearly rent or value therof to such heir of entail in possession, all as the same may happen to be at the death of the grantor."

Held, affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session (1902, 5 F. 48), that on the calculation of the widow's annuity the heir of entail in possession was not entitled to make deduction for upkeep of estate, buildings, and fences, or for management and superintendence of the estate, these outgoings not being, in the sense of the statute, burdens affecting either the estate or its rents.—EARL OF GALLOWAY v. DOWAGER COUNTESS OF GALLOWAY, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 50.

2. Landlord and tenant—Forfeiture of lease—Condition to take over sheep at expiration of lease.—A tenant, in a letter offering to take a lease of a farm for ten years from 1897, stipulated that at his "awaygoing at the expiration of the lease" the landlord should take over the sheep at a valuation. The lease contained a clause that the lease should be forfeited for non-payment of rent, and, the tenant having failed to pay five half-years' rent, the landlord put an end to the lease in February, 1902, and refused to take over the sheep.

Held, reversing the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, reported as Stewart v. Breadalbane (Marquis of), [1903] 5 F. 359, that "awaygoing" must be taken to mean the legal expiration of the lease, and that the landlord on the tenant's default was not bound to take over the sheep.—MARQUESS OF BREADALBANE v. STEWART, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 217.

3. Remuneration of procurator fiscal—Preliminary inquiries into non-prosecuted cases—County General Assessment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 82), s. 3, sub-sections 2, 3—Rogue Money Act, 1724 (11 Geo. 1, c. 26), s. 12.—In an action for debt, the debt must be established either by contract or at common law or by statute.

Held, reversing the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, Hart v. County Council of the County of Lanark, [1902] 40 S. L. R. 117, that it could not be said that in the county of Lanark "it was in use" to pay these fees at the date of the Act of 1868, and therefore the county was not liable.—LANARK COUNTY COUNCIL v. HART, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 235.

See also Divorce, 7; Fishery, 1.

SET-OFF:—

See Company, 9; County Court, 2; Practice, 17.

SETTLED LAND:—

1. Compound settled—Heirlooms—Sale—Application of proceeds—Discharge of incumbrance—Heirlooms vested in tenant in tail—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 37, sub-sections 1, 2; s. 2, sub-section 9; s. 21, sub-section (ii.); s. 53.—By this will S. bequeathed pictures and heirlooms to trustees upon trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the person who, under S.'s marriage settlement, should for the time being be entitled to certain landed estates, but so that they should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail male by purchase of the said landed estates who should not attain twenty-one or die under that age leaving male issue at death. Under the said marriage settlement the said landed estates stood settled to X. for life, remainder to Y. for life, remainder to Z. in tail. One of the pictures had been sold and the proceeds paid to the trustees of the will and invested by them. It had been held that the settlement and will constituted a compound settlement. X. directed the trustees of the compound settlement to apply part of the said proceeds in discharge of a mortgage on the said landed estates,

Held, that the said proceeds were, under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 37, sub-section 2 (2), capital money arising under the Act; that they were applicable under section 21, sub-section (ii.); that the trustees of the compound settlement had not yet invested the said proceeds; and that X. was entitled, in virtue of the discretion conferred upon him by section 53, to direct the trustees of the compound settlement to apply part of the said proceeds in discharge of the said mortgage.—STAFFORD'S SETTLEMENT, RE, GERARD v. STAFFORD, Ch. D. Warrington, J., 536; [1904] 2 Ch. 72; 73 L. J. Ch. 560.

2. Compound settlement—Trusts to pay annuities—Remainder in trust for settlor—Will of settlor—Confirmation of trusts—Residue in trust for sale—Settlement of proceeds—Settled Land Acts, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 20, 63; and 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 18), s. 7.—P. conveyed and assigned his freeholds and leaseholds to himself and M. in trust, reserving a power of appointment, and by a subsequent deed he appointed that after his death the trustees should hold the same in trust out of the rents and profits to pay certain annuities, and that the surplus —and after the determination of the annuities, the whole—of the rents and profits should be in trust for and belong to himself, his heirs, and his executors. By his will P. confirmed the said trusts, and, subject thereto, devised and bequeated his real and personal estate to other trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, with power to postpone, and directed the proceeds to be held on trusts under which X. was tenant for life in possession.

Held, that the case was undistinguishable from In re The Marquis of Ailesbury and Lord Iveagh, 41 W. R. 644, [1893] 2 Ch. 345, and that on the principle of that case, as approved in In re Mundy and Roper's Contract, 47 W. R. 226, [1899] 1 Ch. 275, the two deeds and the will must be regarded as a compound settlement, and that X., as tenant for life thereunder, must be granted leave, under section 7 of the Act of 1884, to exercise the powers of the Settled Land Acts, and must be let into possession on his undertaking to keep down the annuities. — PHILLIMORE, RE, PHILLIMORE v. MILNES, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 682.

3. Heirlooms—Family portraits—Sale by tenant for life in impecunious position through no fault of his own—Opposition by remainderman—Pretium affectionis—Discretion of court—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 37, 53.—A nobleman, tenant for life of settled estates to which but for a settlement, to which he had himself been a party, he would have been entitled as tenant in tail was, through no fault of his own, in an impecunious position and unable to marry. The sale of certain heirlooms, including family portraits, some of historical interest, would put him in a better pecuniary position, and he applied under the Settled Land Act, 1882, for leave to sell the same. A remainderman, who was older than the tenant for life, but who would succeed him as tenant for life in the event of his not having male issue, opposed the sale of any family portraits or any portraits of persons connected connected with the family.

Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the court ought to allow the sale of all the heirlooms, including the portraits.—TOWNSHEND'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 89 L. T. 691.

4. Housing of the Working Classes Acts—Improvements—Cottages for labourers, &c.—Additions or alterations to enable house to be let—"Available for the working classes"—"Building not injurious to the estate"—37 & 38 Vict. c. 38, s. 25 (x., xx.); 48 & 49 Vict. c. 72, s. 11 (1) (b); 53 & 54 Vict. c. 70, s. 74 (1) (b); 53 & 54 Vict. c. 69, ss. 13 (ii.) and 18.—Section 13 (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, which authorizes, as improvements under the Act, "the making of additions to or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let," refers to a future letting. Therefore, where a scheme submitted by a tenant for life to trustees included additions to a house occupied by a tenant.

Held, that the trustees would have discretion to approve the work if the present tenant should give notice to quit, or even if they were satisfied he was resolved to do so.

The expression "available for the working classes" in section 74 (1) (b) of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (replacing a repealed enactment), means "actually available," and cannot apply to dwellings which are in the occupation of persons whom the Acts do not define as belonging to those classes.

The condition in the same sub-section limiting it to dwellings, "the building of which, in the opinion of the court, is not injurious to the estate," applies only where it is desired to build, and does not restrict the powers conferred by section 25 (xx.) of the Settled land Act, 1882.

Semble, a cottage occupied by a labourer, farm servant, or artizan is substantially within section 25 (x., xx.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, notwithstanding that it is rented in the name which his wife formerly bore as widow of a man not answering any of those descriptions.—CALVERLEY'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 206; [1904] 1 Ch. 150; 73 L. J. Ch. 25; 89 L. T. 500.

5. Sale by tenant for life—Undervalue—Action by remainderman to set aside sale—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 4 (1), 53, 54.—The mere fact that, upon a sale by a tenant for life under the powers of the Settled Land Acts, the purchase is at an undervalue is not of itself sufficient to invalidate the sale.

In 1902 a tenant for life, purporting to act under the powers conferred upon him by the Settled Land Acts, sold the freehold of certain public-house property to W. for the sum of £2,000.

At the time of the sale the property was subject to a lease which had been granted as from Christmas, 1892, for a term of twenty-one years at a rent of £63 per annum.

Within a few days after the sale W. contracted to resell the property for £3,000, although it was doubtful whether £3,000 was not in excess of the true value of the property.

W. had not, before making the original purchase, made any inquiry as to whether the trustees or tenant for life had had any valuation made.

Held, that these circumstances were not sufficient to sustain an action by a remainderman to set aside the sale.—HURRELL v. LITTLEJOHN, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 689; 73 L. T. Ch. 287; 90 L. T. 260.

6. Settlement by will—Power to jointure and raise portions—Re-settlement—Life estate assigned—Compound settlement—Sale by tenant for life under original settlement—Power of trustee of original settlement to give discharge for purchase-money—Settled Land Acts, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 50, and 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 4.—Where, in consequence of re-settlement, lands are subject to a compound settlement, but the original settlement is still subsisting, a tenant for life who has parted with his beneficial interest and whose life estate under the original settlement has not been restored, can exercise his statutory power of sale under the original settlement, and the trustees thereof can give a valid discharge for the purchase-money.

In re Cornwallis-West and Munro's Contract, 51 W. R. 602, [1903] 2 Ch. 150, distinguished.—WIMBORNE, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 334; [1904] 1 Ch. 480; 73 L. J. Ch. 270; 90 L. T. 540.

7. Tenant for life—Capital money—Improvements—Order of the court—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 21, 22, 25, 26, sub-section 2 (iii.).—A scheme for improvements had been approved by the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts; the scheme had been carried out by the tenant for life, and capital money was in the hands of the trustees.

Held, that under section 22, sub-section (2) (iii.) of the Act of 1882, the court should exercise its discretion as to whether the scheme was a provident one before authorizing repayment by the trustees to the tenant for life.—KECK'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 362; [1904] 2 Ch. 22; 73 L. J. Ch. 262; 90 L. T. 113.

SETTLEMENT:

1. Capital and income—Cost of repairs—How borne as between them.—Where repairs are done in accordance with the provisions of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to property subject to a marriage settlement, by persons other than the trustees of the settlement—who are not in a position to execute them—the costs cannot be claimed by the trustees as representing the corpus.—FARNHAM'S TRUSTS, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 535.

2. Cohabitation, trust for wife during—Validity—Policy of the law—Husband and wife—Post-nuptial settlement.—By a post-nuptial settlement the husband assigned certain leaseholds to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for life, or so long as she should continue the cohabiting wife or the widow of the settlor, for her separate use, and upon the determination of the trust in favour of the wife the husband took an interest in the settled property. Some years after the date of the settlement the husband and wife separated by mutual consent, and they had not since cohabited, Held, that the restriction of the wife's enjoyment of the rents to the period of cohabitation was not void as against the policy of the law, and that the trust in her favour determined upon her ceasing to live with the husband.

Cartwright v. Cartwright, (1853) 3 D. M. & G. 982, and H. v. W., (1857) 3 K. & J. 382, distinguished.—HOPE JOHNSTONE, RE, HOPE JOHNSTONE v. HOPE JOHNSTONE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 470; 73 L. J. Ch. 321; 90 L. T. 253.

3. Condition subsequent—Marriage of beneficiary at any time—Consent of third party necessary—Gift over.—A condition subsequent in a settlement, providing for forfeiture of the interest of a beneficiary and her issue in the settled property, if she should marry at any time without the consent of a specified person, is good, provided there is a gift over of the settled property.—WHITING, RE, WHITING v. DE RUTZEN, Ch.D. Warrington J., 653.

4. Construction—Gift to A. for life and to "children or child or remoter issue" at his death—Substitutionary gifts per stirpes.—In a settlement where property is given in default of appointment to "children or any the child or remoter issue" of A. on the happening of certain contingencies, a child living at the happening of such contingencies will take to the exclusion of his issue.

In re Cleland's Trusts, 7 L. Rep. Ir. 74, followed. —LUND'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Farwell J.; 89 L. T. 606.

5. Marriage settlement—After-acquired property—Covenant to settle—Scots domicil—Jus relictæ—Spes successionis.—A mere spes successionis of a wife to succeed to her husband's personalty in the event of his death leaving her surviving, even though it be coupled with an indemnity in damages by the husband contingently upon the failure of the spes by reason of his change of domicil or otherwise, is not caught by, or included in, a covenant in the marriage settlement whereby it was provided that "if at any time during the coverture" the wife should "in any manner become entitled to any personal property for any estate or interest whatsoever" exceeding £200 in value, the same should be brought into settlement.—SIMPSON v. SIMPSON, C. A., 310; [1904] 1 Ch. 1; 73 L. J. Ch. 53; 89 L. T. 542.

6. Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Property bequeathed to wife with general power of appointment, subject thereto to herself absolutely.—Where property is given subject to a general power of appointment, and subject thereto to the donee absolutely, then it will be caught by a covenant previously entered into by the donee to settle after-acquired property.

Steward v. Poppleton, W. N. (1877) 29, followed. —O'CONNELL, RE, MAWLE v. JAGOE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 102; [1903] 2 Ch. 574; 72 L. J. Ch. 709; 89 L. T. 166.

7. Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property of wife—Inclusion or exclusion of life annuities.—The fact that the terms of a covenant contained in a marriage settlement for the settlement of after-acquired property of the wife are sufficiently comprehensive to cover such property as annuities or life interests is not conclusive that such property is to be included in or caught by the covenant. Regard must be had to the intention of the covenantor as shown by the nature of the trusts declared of the after-acquired property covenanted to be settled, and if such trusts, as they stand, do not fit property of the nature of annuities, such property will be deemed not to be caught by the covenant.

Townshend v. Harrowby, 4 Jur. N. S. 353, followed.

Scholfield v. Spooner, 32 W. R. 910, 26 Ch. D. 94, distinguished.—DOWDING, RE, GREGORY v. DOWDING, Ch D. Kekewich, J., 293; [1904] 1 Ch. 441; 73 L. J. Ch. 194; 90 L. T. 82.

See also Bankruptcy, 9, 19, 20; Conflict of Laws, 2; Married Woman, 3.

SHIP:—

1. Bill of lading—Butter carried in refrigerating chambers — Negligence in working refrigerating machinery—"Faults in management of vessel"—Harter Act (U.S. Congress, the 13th of February, 1893) incorporated in bills of lading—Meaning of seaworthy.—By bills of lading incorporating an American Act of Congress the owners of The Minneapolis, conveying butter in refrigerating chambers, were relieved from liability for damage caused by faults in management of the vessel, provided she were seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage. The refrigerating machinery was in good order and the chambers properly cooled at starting, but through negligence in working the said machinery the butter became damaged during the voyage.

Held, by Kennedy, J., that "seaworthy" meant, in the present case, "fit to carry the butter safely," that The Minneapolis was seaworthy in this sense, that the damage arose from faults in management of the vessel, and that her owners, therefore, were not liable.

Held, on appeal, that inasmuch as the machinery was not intended for cooling the butter only, but other parts of the cargo and the ship as well, it was part of the ship, and that its mismanagement was a fault in the management of the vessel which relieved the owners by virtue of the Act.—ROWSON v. ATLANTIC TRANSPORT CO., C.A., 85; [1903] 2 K. B. 666; 72 L. J. K. B. 811; 89 L. T. 204.

2. Bill of lading—Charter-party—Exceptions—Accident caused by negligence of servants of shipowner—Use of reckless means of unloading by stevedore's men.—A cargo of sugar in bags was shipped under a bill of lading which incorporated a charter-party containing, inter alia, the following exceptions—viz., perils of the seas, barratry, collisions, stranding, and all other accidents, even though caused by the negligence of the shipowners' servants. The cargo was discharged into lighters by stevedore's employed by the ship. The stevedores' men, in order to facilitate the unloading, recklessly made use of large hooks, whereby some of the bags were torn and the sugar spilt and lost.

Held, that the loss of the sugar was due to an accident within the meaning of the exemption clause.

Judgment of Phillimore, J. ([1903] P. 35), affirmed.—"TORBRYAN," THE, C.A., 40; [1903] P. 194; 72 L. J. P. 76; 89 L. T. 265.

3. Bill of lading—Construction—Exceptions—Unseaworthiness—Unfitness of ship to receive cargo—Liability of shipowners.—The obligation cast by the common law upon a shipowner to provide a ship which is seaworthy, not only in the sense of being fit to meet the perils of wind and waves, but also in the sense of being reasonably fit to carry cargo, can only be got rid of by clear and unambiguous words in a bill of lading. A bill of lading contained the following exceptions: "Loss or damage arising from the consequence of any damage, breakdown, injury to or defect in hull, tackle, boilers, or machinery . . . however such damage, defect, or injury may be caused, and notwithstanding that the same may have existed at or at any time before the loading or sailing of the vessel, collision, stranding . . . or other perils of the seas, and whether any of the perils, causes, or things above mentioned, or the loss or injury arising therefrom be occasioned by . . . unseaworthiness of the ship at the beginning or at any period of the voyage, provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against such unseaworthiness." Cargo shipped under this bill of lading was damaged by water from a pipe used for the supply of water to a tank for domestic purposes. This pipe was broken when the cargo was put on board, and it was admitted that the ship was not fit to receive the cargo when put on board, and that all reasonable means had not been taken to provide against such unfitness.

Held, that the warranty implied by the common law on the part of the shipowners was not got rid of by the exceptions in the bill of lading, and that the shipowners were consequently liable for the damage to the cargo.—RATHBONE v. MCIVER, C.A., 68; [1903] 2 K. B. 378; 72 L. J. K. B. 703; 89 L. T. 378.

4. Bill of lading—Construction—Undivided portions of a bulk cargo—Error in apportioning damaged grain—Duty of shipowner—Rights and duties of consignees inter se.—Bills of lading for undivided portions of a bulk cargo contained the following clause: "If the parcel herein signed for constitutes part of a larger bulk shipped without separation into parcels, as per bills of lading, each bill of lading shall bear its due proportion of shortage or damage and/or sweepings, if any." Impressed in the margin was the following note: "Part of a parcel, shipped without separation. Each bill of lading to bear its proportion of shortage and damage, if any." One consignee received a full quantity of sound grain. On the apportionment of the unsound grain the plaintiffs refused to accept more than their proportion of unsound grain, and sued for short delivery.

Held, that the clause and note in the bill of lading did not impose any duty on the shipowner to apportion the grain, and that the error was caused by the consignee's agents.—GRANGE v. TAYLOR, K.B.D., 429; 90 L. T. 486.

5. Bill of lading—Discharge of cargo—Goods to be taken "as fast as steamer can deliver"—Deficiency of railway waggons—Option of shipowner to discharge in other ways not exercised.—Goods were shipped under a bill of lading which provided: "The goods to be taken from the ship by the consignees (at their expense) immediately after arrival, and as fast as steamer can deliver or the same will be transshipped into lighters, or landed, or warehoused at the expense and risk of the proprietors of such goods." On arrival of the vessel the consignees neither took delivery nor did the master exercise his option of landing or lightering the goods.

In an action by the charterer against the consignees for damages for detention of the vessel,

Held, that the plaintiffs were not deprived of their remedy because the master had not exercised his option as to landing or lightering the goods, and were entitled to recover.

Held, further, that the plaintiffs having made out a primâ facie case of delay in taking delivery by the defendants, the onus was upon the defendants to show that the delay arose from no default on their part, and was due to the want of appliances in the port, and that they had failed to do so.—"ARNE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 154; 73 L. J. P. 34; 90 L. T. 517.

6. Bill of lading—Exceptions—Marginal clause.—The plaintiffs were indorsees of bills of lading under which a cargo of maize, barley, linseed, oats, and wheat was shipped on the defendants' steamship. By the bills of lading it was provided that "the . . . owners . . . shall not be responsible for loss, damage, or injury arising from sweating . . . or consequences arising therefrom . . . or heat. That the . . . owners . . . shall not be responsible for any loss or injury to the said goods occurring from any of the causes above mentioned . . . whether any of the perils, causes, or things above mentioned . . . or occasioned by any act or omission, negligence, default . . . of stevedores . . . or other persons in the service of the shipowners . . ." On the margin of the bills of lading under which the maize was shipped was stamped: "In no case is the steamship to be held liable for heating or any other damage occurring to the within mentioned goods." Part or the maize became heated on the voyage, and the other cargo was damaged through improper stowage.

In an action by the plaintiffs to recover damages,

Held, that the words "above mentioned" did not refer to the matters in the clause above or the marginal clause, and that the word "heat" referred to heat arising from some extraneous cause, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment.

Held, further, that if the owners desired to relieve themselves from liability for the negligence of their own servants there should have been express words.

Price v. Union Lighterage Co., 89 L. T. Rep. 731, 9 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 398, [1904] 1 K. B. 412, followed.—"PEARLMOOR," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 286; 73 L. J. P. 50; 90 L. T. 319.

7. Bill of lading—Exemption—Warranty of seaworthiness of ship—Fitness of ship to carry goods.—Meat was shipped at Melbourne for carriage to London under a bill of lading which contained the following clause in large print: "Neither the steamer, nor her owners, nor her charterers, shall be accountable for the condition of goods shipped under this bill of lading nor for any loss or damage thereto, whether arising from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation, or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other cause whatsoever, whether arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage or at the time of shipment of the goods or not, nor for detention; nor for the consequences of any act, neglect, default, or error of judgment of the master, officers, engineers, refrigerating engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the owners or charterers, nor from any other cause whatsoever." There was also a small print clause exempting the shipowner from liability for loss or damage resulting from (inter alia) "defects, latent or otherwise, in hull, tackle, boilers, or machinery, refrigeration, or otherwise, or their appurtenances (whether or not existing at the time of the goods being loaded, or at the commencement or any stage of the voyage), if reasonable means have been taken to provide against such defects and unseaworthiness." The ship had on previous voyages carried cargoes of horses, and for the purpose of cleansing the ship to receive the meat a quantity of carbolic acid was used. Upon the arrival of the meat in London it was found to be tainted with carbolic acid. The learned judge at the trial found that the damaged condition of the meat arose from the tainted condition of the ship at the commencement of the voyage in consequence of the use of carbolic acid, and that if proper care and skill had been used at Melbourne the damage would not have occurred. He held, however, that the large print clause, notwithstanding the limited exemption in the small print clause, exempted the shipowner from liability.

Held, that the large print clause did not confer upon the shipowner a general exemption from liability for loss arising from the unseaworthiness of the ship at the commencement of the voyage, and as reasonable means had not been taken to provide against the unseaworthy condition of the ship, the small print clause did not exempt him.—BORTHWICK v. ELDERSLIE STEAMSHIP CO., C.A., 439; [1904] 1 K. B. 319; 73 L. J. K. B. 240; 90 L. T. 187.

8. Bill of lading—Liberty to over-carry goods if discharge cannot be effected without undue detention—Discharge prevented by delay at previous port—Delay caused by negligence of shipowner's agent—Remoteness of damage—Liability of shipowner.—A bill of lading contained the following clause: "If in the opinion of the master discharge cannot be effected without undue detention, the steamer shall have liberty to over-carry the cargo to London at merchant's risk, and deliver there to consignees or their assigns."

The ship was delayed at a port of call in the course of her voyage by the negligence of the shipowner's agents, with the result that, on her arrival at the port where the goods were to be discharged, the master found that the discharge could not be effected without undue detention, and he therefore over-carried the goods to London.

In an action by the consignee to recover damages for the over-carriage of the goods,

Held, affirming the decision of Kennedy, J. (88 L. T. Rep. 863), that the damage was not so remote from the negligence of the shipowner's agents as to disentitle the consignee from succeeding in the action.—SEARLE v. LUND, C.A.; 90 L. T. 529.

9. Carriage of goods—Passengers' luggage—Conditions on ticket—Stowage in lavatory—Damage by water—Fitness of ship—Seaworthiness.—A steamship company received passengers on board a vessel at an intermediate port on her homeward voyage. The ticket issued by the company contained a condition exempting them from liability for damage to passengers' luggage although the damage be caused by negligence or default of the company's servants, or by unseaworthiness or unfitness of the ship, provided that reasonable diligence had been used by the company to render the ship at starting seaworthy and fit for the voyage.

In consequence of the crowded state of the vessel, the only available place for stowing the passengers' luggage was a lavatory, and their luggage was accordingly put in there and the lavatory locked.

This lavatory was separated from an adjoining lavatory by a bulkhead which did not quite come down to the floor. A water-closet in the adjoining lavatory became stopped up and overflowed. The overflow, running underneath the bulkhead into the lavatory in which the passengers' luggage was stowed, damaged the luggage.

In an action by the passengers against the company claiming damages for injury to the luggage, Bigham, J., at the trial was of opinion that the damage was not caused by negligence of the company's servants, but by unseaworthiness or unfitness of the ship, and that reasonable diligence had not been used by the company to render the ship at starting seaworthy and fit for the voyage, and he gave judgment for the plaintiffs. On appeal, Held, affirming Bigham, J., that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment.—UPPERTON v. UNION CASTLE STEAMSHIP CO., C.A.; 89 L. T. 289.

10. Charter-party — Construction — Time for loading—Stoppage by strike—"Stoppage for six days from time of vessel being ready to coal"—Right to cancel charter.—By a charter-party it was agreed that a ship of the appellants should load a cargo of coal for the charterers "to be loaded in 140 running hours, commencing when written notice is given of steamer being completely discharged of inward cargo and ballast in all her holds, and ready to load." The charter-party also provided that in the event of a stoppage caused by a strike "continuing for a period of six running days from the time of the vessel being ready to load, this charter shall become null and void, provided, however, that no cargo shall have been shipped on board the steamer previous to such stoppage."

Due notice was given that the ship was ready to load, and, after the expiration of the time allowed for loading, a stoppage caused by a strike commenced, and continued for six days. No cargo had been shipped, and the charterers gave notice that the charter-party was cancelled.

Held, that the charter-party contemplated a stoppage in existence at the beginning of the loading time, and that the charterers were not entitled to cancel the charter on the occurrence of a stoppage at a later period.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.—STEEL v. GRAND CANARY COALING CO., H.L.; 90 L. T. 729.

11. Charter-party—Demurrage—Cargo to be discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day—Fraction of a day.—Under a charter-party the cargo of 2,367 tons on board a ship was to be discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day, weather permitting; the time to commence in accordance with the custom of the port; Sundays and all holidays and time lost by any cause whatever beyond the control of the consignee of the cargo not to count as discharging time. It was also provided that demurrage was "to be paid at the rate of 4d. per net registered ton per day and pro rata employed beyond the time allowed for discharging." The time the cargo would take to discharge would be 11¼ days. The discharge took 12¾ days, and the charterers contended that as they had rightfully broken into the twelfth day they were entitled to treat the whole of that day as a lay day, and paid demurrage calculated on that basis,

Held, that fractions of a day must be taken into account, and that the shipowners were entitled to be paid demurrage after 11¼ days.—YEOMAN v. REX, C.A., 627; [1904] 2 K. B. 429.

12. Charter-party—Detention at port—Loading—"Regular turn"—Custom of port—Delay caused by number of vessels chartered—Option.—A charter-party provided that a sailing vessel was to load a cargo of coal at N. "in regular turn" from B. Colliery or any of the collieries the freighters might name. No time for loading was fixed.

At the port of N. it was necessary to obtain a loading order from the colliery before a loading berth was allotted.

When the vessel arrived, a great many vessels were waiting to load from B. Colliery, and in consequence sixty-seven days elapsed before a coaling order could be given to the vessel.

The charterers, who were the owners of B. Colliery, had sold a cargo of that coal to be shipped by this vessel.

Held, that the words "regular turn" referred to the colliery turn as distinguished from the port turn both upon their proper construction and also having regard to the regulations and practice of the port;

Held, also, that the defendants had not chartered an unreasonable number of vessels to arrive at the port about the same time so as to make it impossible that the vessel should be able to load within a reasonable time; and that the probability of delay was known to and contemplated by the shipowners when they entered into the charter-party.

Held, therefore, that the charterers had not acted unreasonably, and were not liable for the detention of the vessel.

Decision of Kennedy, J., affirmed. — BARQUE QUILPUÉ v. BROWN, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 264; 73 L. J. K. B. 596; 90 L. T. 765.

13. Charter-party—Freight at rate per ton of gross weight shipped—"Payable on right and true delivery of cargo"—Loss of part of cargo—Lump sum freight—Freight on cargo delivered—Bill of lading freight collected by shipowner—Difference between freight collected and freight due for cargo delivered—Recovery of balance by charterer.—By a charter-party a cargo of sugar in bags was to be loaded at a named port, and the ship so loaded was to proceed to another named port and there deliver the cargo "agreeably to bills of lading on being paid freight in full of all port charges . . . at the rate of 10s. 6d. per ton of 20 cwt. gross weight shipped payable on right and true delivery of the cargo." Charterers' liability was to cease "when cargo is shipped and bills of lading signed, provided all the conditions called for in this charter have been fulfilled, but vessel to have a lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight, and demurrage." Any difference between the charter-party and bills of lading freight was to be settled at the port of loading on clearance of the vessel if required by the master. The amount due under this clause was ascertained at the port of loading, and paid by the charterers to the shipowners. The vessel loaded a full cargo, but on the voyage she grounded and a portion of the cargo was lost. The remainder was delivered at the port of discharge, and the bills of lading freight on the whole cargo shipped was collected by the shipowners. In an action by the charterers to recover, as money received to their use, the difference between the freight so collected by the shipowners and the amount due to them under the charter-party in respect of the cargo delivered,

Held, by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Collins, M.R., Romer, L.J., dissenting, affirming the judgment of Walton, J., that under the charter-party the shipowners were not entitled to a lump sum freight, and that the balance of freight in their hands could be recovered from them by the charterers.—LONDON TRANSPORT CO. (LIMITED) v. TRECHMANN BROTHERS, C.A.; [1904] 1 K. B. 635; 73 L. J. K. B. 253; 90 L. T. 132.

14. Charter-party—Hire—Suspension of hire—Detention by ice "caused by breakdown of steamer"—Vessel detained owing to repairs made necessary by stranding.—By a charter-party it was provided by one clause that, in the event of loss of time from damage preventing the working of the vessel, the payment of hire should cease until she should again be in an efficient state to resume her service, and by another clause that "detention by ice should be for account of charterers unless caused by breakdown of steamer."

During the voyage the vessel stranded; the necessary repairs were effected and she resumed her voyage; owing, however, to the delay thus caused she was unable to proceed to the destined port before it was closed by ice, and she was consequently detained at an intermediate port.

Held (affirming the judgment of Ridley, J.), that there was a detention by ice "caused by breakdown of steamer," and that payment of hire ceased during that detention.—TRAAE AND LENNARD, RE, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 377; 73 L. J. K. B. 553; 90 L. T. 407.

15. Charter-party—Obligation of charterer to have cargo ready—No time fixed for loading—Cargo from specific source—Option of charterer—Knowledge of parties at time of contract.—A sailing ship was chartered to load at N. a "cargo of coals as ordered by the charterers," and they afterwards directed that it should be loaded with coal from W. Colliery. No time for loading was fixed. At the port of N. it was necessary to obtain a loading order from the colliery before a loading berth was allotted. The W. Colliery had a small output, and the coal was in great demand. These facts were known to the parties at the time of the contract. In consequence of the number of ships loading from W. Colliery the ship did not obtain a loading berth for a long time, and, in addition to being delayed at N., lost a charter-party elsewhere, as she did not arrive before the cancelling date.

The owners brought an action to recover damages for the loss thus occasioned to them.

Held, that the charterers were not bound to have a cargo of coal ready for loading immediately on the arrival of the ship; that the vessel obtained a loading order in due course in her colliery turn, and there was then no delay on the part of the charterers, and therefore the cargo was provided within a reasonable time; that the option to select the particular coal was an option for the benefit of the charterers, who were not bound, in exercising it, to consider the benefit or otherwise of the shipowners; and therefore, all parties being acquainted with the practice at the port, and the charterers having acted reasonably, they were not liable for the delay.

Decision of Kennedy, J., affirmed.

Little v. Stevenson, [1896] A. C. 106, considered.—JONES v. GREEN, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 275; 73 L. J. K. B. 601; 90 L. T. 768.

16. Charter-party—Unseaworthiness at starting—Personal negligence of owner in lading.—Unless the conditions of a charter-party relieve the owner as distinct from his servants and agents from the consequences of personal negligence, he is liable if his ship, in other respects seaworthy, is rendered unseaworthy in being so laden under his orders as to become topheavy at starting, with the result that her deck cargo was partly jettisoned and partly swept overboard in a gale which otherwise could have been weathered in safety.—MASTER AND OWNERS OF STEAMSHIP "CITY OF LINCOLN" v. SMITH, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 250.

17. Coaling contract—Bill of exchange—Liability of master as drawer—Notice of dishonour—Delay.

Held, that the defendant who was the master of a ship and who had drawn a bill of exchange on the owners of the vessel for coal, was liable for the wording of the bill did not relieve him of that liability, and that he was not discharged by the delay in giving notice of dishonour as the special circumstances excused that delay within the meaning of sections 49 and 50 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.—"ELMVILLE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 319.

18. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Failure to stand by and give name—Limits of port of Liverpool—8 Anne, c. 8—Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 92)—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 422, 586, 603, 633.—The fact of a vessel after collision with another vessel not standing by and giving her name, as required by section 422 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, does not render her owners liable, if at the time she was compulsorily in charge of a pilot.

The Queen, 20 L. T. Rep. 855, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 242, L. Rep. 2 A. & E. 354, followed.

A collision occurred in the estuary of the River Mersey between the steamships G. and S.

By section 127 of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, "every pilot taking upon himself the charge of any vessel shall, if so required by the master thereof, pilot such vessel so far to the westward as the . . . Fairway Buoy of the Queen's Channel."

Since the date of the Act the buoy has been removed, and for the purposes of pilotage the Bar Lightship, which occupies a position outside of that occupied by the buoy, is treated as the westward limit.

The G. at the time of the collision was at anchor between the Bar Lightship and the place where the buoy used to be.

The defendants pleaded that The S. was at the time of the collision compulsorily in charge of a pilot.

Held, that, the Fairway Buoy having been removed, the Bar Lightship occupied the same place relatively for the purposes of section 127 of the Act of 1858, and that pilotage was therefore compulsory.—"SUSSEX," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 236; 73 L. J. P. 73; 90 L. T. 549.

19. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—London district—"Constant trader"—Pilotage Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 125), s. 59—Order in Council, the 18*th of February,* 1854—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 353, 379—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c 60), ss. 603, 625.—The Order in Council of the 18th of February, 1854, extending the exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained in section 59 of the Pilotage Act, 1825, has not been repealed by the subsequent Merchant Shipping Acts.

To entitle a vessel to come within the exemptions from compulsory pilotage given by the above Order in Council it is not necessary that she should be a "constant trader" to the ports or countries mentioned therein. In order to constitute a vessel a "constant trader" to ports between Boulogne (inclusive) and the Baltic it is not necessary that she should trade exclusively to ports within those limits.

The defendants, a British steamship company, ran a line of steamers from London via Antwerp to America and back. A new vessel belonging to them was on her second voyage from London via Antwerp to certain Mexican ports, carrying a general cargo and one passenger, when she came into collision in the estuary of the Thames with a vessel belonging to the plaintiffs. At the time of the collision the defendants' steamer was carrying a duly licensed Trinity House pilot. In an action for damage brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants, in which the latter pleaded compulsory pilotage, their pilot was found alone to blame.

Held, affirming the decision of Barnes, J. ([1902] P. 216), that the defendants were liable as their vessel was exempt from compulsory pilotage as she was a "constant trader" within the exemptions contained in section 59 of the Pilotage Act, 1825, which was supplemented by the above Order in Council and kept alive by section 353 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, for which is now substituted section 603 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Earl of Auckland (10 W. R. 124, 15 Moo. P. C. 304, held binding and followed.—"CAYO BONITO," THE, C.A., 133; [1903] P. 203; 72 L. J. P. 70; 89 L. T. 260.

20. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Port of Liverpool—Vessel proceeding through the port to Manchester—8 Anne, c. 8—Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Acts, 1858 and 1899 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 92 and 62 & 63 Vict. c. 172)—Upper Mersey Navigation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 104), ss. 4, 51—Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 188)—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 605, 633.—Pilotage is compulsory on a vessel inward bound from the sea through the port of Liverpool to Manchester until she enters the Ship Canal at Eastham.

Section 128 of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, requires that "the pilot in charge of any inward bound vessel shall cause the same (if need be) to be properly moored at anchor in the River Mersey, and shall pilot the same into some one of the wet docks within the port of Liverpool."

The fact that a vessel anchors for the purpose of waiting for the tide does not put an end to the compulsory services of the pilot.

Semble, pilotage is also compulsory on vessels going out from Eastham through the port of Liverpool to the sea.—"MERCEDES DE LARRINAGA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 215; 73 L. J. P. 65; 90 L. T. 520.

21. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Rules 46 and 49 Thames Regulations.—Those who rely on a plea of compulsory pilotage must establish the fact that the fault of the pilot was the fault of the pilot alone, otherwise the court will not act in finding that the fault was that of the pilot.

The Velasquez, 1 P. 494, approved.—"BENMOHR," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 686.

22. Collision—Damage—Freight—Substituted expense.—A steamship chartered by the Admiralty to carry a cargo of coal from the Tyne to Capetown came into collision with another steamship and put into the Thames for repairs. By agreement between the Admiralty and the owners of the cargo was unshipped in London and sold, and a sum of £1,000 was paid by the Admiralty to the owners of the vessel as a "substituted expense" in lieu of the estimated greater expense of storage and re-shipment on board the vessel after the necessary repairs had been effected. Both ships were held to blame for the collision, and at the reference a moiety of the claim by the owners of the collier was paid by the owners of the other vessel, but at the reference as between that other vessel and the Admiralty, the claim made by the Admiralty for an adjuster proportion of the sum paid as "substituted expense" was disallowed by the registrar.

The Court, affirming the report of the registrar, held that that claim failed, because it was not a loss sustained by the Admiralty directly in consequence of the wrong-doing of the other vessel.—"MINNETONKA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 672; [1904] P. 202; 73 L. J. P. 62; 90 L. T. 354.

23. Collision—Damage to pier—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts, 1868 and 1869—Prohibition.

The Court held that damage done by a ship to a pier is not "damage by collision" within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 3, of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and that, therefore, a county court had no Admiralty jurisdiction in respect of such damage. —"NORMANDY," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 634; [1904] P. 187; 73 L. J. P. 55; 90 L. T. 351.

24. Collision—Limitation of liability—Foreign vessel—Foreign certificate of registry—Order in Council—Double bottom—Water ballast—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 81, 84, 543, 745.—In an action for limitation of liability by owners of a French steamship, the French certificate of registry supported by affidavit, and the Order in Council of the 5th of May, 1873, extending the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), as to measurement to French vessels, were put in. A further affidavit was filed that the double bottom for water ballast was not used for the purpose of carrying cargo, stores, or fuel.

Held, that this was sufficient, and that it was not necessary that the certificate of a Board of Trade surveyor under section 81 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, should be also adduced.

The Zanzibar, 68 L. T. Rep. 297, 7 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 258, [1892] P. 233, followed.—"CORDILLERAS," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 90; 73 L. J. P. 13; 89 L. T. 673.

25. Collision—Manchester Ship Canal—Fog—Application of sea rules—Duty to stop and reverse on hearing whistle of approaching vessel—Art. 16—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, arts. 16 and 30—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 418 (1).

Semble, the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea do not apply to the Manchester Ship Canal.

Even assuming that they do apply, a vessel coming down the canal in a fog is not necessarily to blame under art. 16 of the regulations if she does not stop her engines on hearing the whistle of an approaching vessel forward of her beam; for the approaching vessel must be in the canal, and it may be assumed that she is being navigated on her right side, and her position is therefore, under the circumstances, sufficiently ascertained. —"HARE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 73 L. J. P. 47; 90 L. T. 323.

26. Collision—River Mersey—Vessel coming out of dock—Duty to keep out of the way—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 19.—A steamship coming out of Prince's Dock into the River Mersey came into collision with another steamship coming down the east side of the river in tow of two tugs.

Held, that art. 19 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea did not apply, and that there was no duty on the down-coming vessel to keep out of the way.—"SUNLIGHT," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 100; 73 L. J. P. 25; 90 L. T. 32.

27. Collision—Tug and tow—Fog—Duty of tug to stop on hearing whistle of approaching steamship—Art. 16 of Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea—Proceedings in foreign courts—Judgment by default—Estoppel.—Art. 16 requires a steam vessel hearing apparently forward of her beam the fog signal of a vessel the position of which is not ascertained, to, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, stop her engines.

A steam tug with a vessel in tow, on hearing the whistle of an approaching steamship in a fog forward of her beam, is not justified in proceeding if she can stop without encountering any difficulty with regard to her tow.

The Lord Bangor, [1896] P. 28, 73 L. T. Rep. 414, 8 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 217, distinguished.

Where the plaintiffs, in order to prevent the arrest of their vessel in Belgium, gave security to answer any judgment that might be obtained against them in France, and the defendants, having obtained a judgment in France against the plaintiffs in default of appearance, took proceedings in Belgium to have the French judgment made executory there, and the plaintiffs appeared to such proceedings, and the Belgian courts, without inquiring into the merits, declared the French judgment executory in Belgium,

Held, that the plaintiffs were not debarred from bringing an action for damages in respect of the same collision.—"CHALLENGE," THE, and "THE DUC D'AUMALE," P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 41; 73 L. J. P. 2; 89 L. T. 481.

28. Collision—Vessel "not under command"—Duty to keep course—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 4 (a) (b) (c).—A vessel exhibiting two red lights under art 4 (a) of the Collision Regulations as a signal that she is "not under command" ought to keep her course when approaching another vessel so as to involve risk of collision.

A collision occurred between the brigantine R. and the barque H. The R. was at the time close-hauled on the starboard tack; The H. was sailing free, but, having been recently in collision with a steamship, was exhibiting "not under command" lights. The helm of The R. was put up in order to pass ahead of The H., while the helm of The H. was ported.

Held, that The H. ought to have kept her course and let The R. get out of her way.—"HAWTHORNBANK," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 120; 73 L. J. P. 18; 90 L. T. 293.

29. Demurrage—Lay days—Grain cargoes—London Corn Trade Association Contract—Construction—Number of days to be allowed in discharging.—The London Corn Trade Association Contract, No. 22, provided as to the discharge of grain cargoes from vessels, "Sufficient days to be left for unloading," and, by clause 4, "Sufficient days (counting quarter days) shall be as follows: One running day for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons of grain, and for all quantities in excess 500 tons per day (as provisionally invoiced)," but in no case were less than five days to be allowed.

Held, upon the construction of this clause, that for all vessels of whatever size the time to be allowed for discharging the cargo was one day for every 400 tons of cargo up to 2,800 tons, and one day for every 500 tons above 2,800 tons, subject in every case to the minimum of five days; and that consequently, in discharging a grain cargo of 3,800 tons, one day was to be allowed for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons—that is, seven days—and one day for every 500 tons for the excess above 2,800 tons—namely, 1,000 tons—making in all nine days.—TURNER, BRIGHTMAN, & Co. v. BANNATYNE & SONS, K.B.D; 89 L. T. 507.

30. Practice—Action in personam—Specially indorsed writ—Judgment by default—Ord. 13, r. 3.—The practice of the Admiralty Division as to the procedure in default actions under ord. 13, r. 3, is the same as in other divisions. Where, therefore, the plaintiffs issued a specially indorsed writ in an action in personam in the Admiralty Division.

Held, that they were entitled to enter final judgment on the expiration of the time allowed to the defendants to appear.—"MADELEINE" AND "ANDRÉ THÉODORE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 73 L. J. P. 24; 89 L. T. 675.

31. Property of Colonial Government—Salvage—Action in rem—Liability of property of Crown to arrest.—An action in rem is a method of impleading the owners of a vessel, and if the owner is the King the action cannot be maintained.

A vessel which is the property of a Colonial Government, although built to be used as a ferry boat for the purpose of carrying passengers and merchandize for hire between one part of a railway owned by the Government and another, enjoys the same immunity from arrest as the property of the Crown, and is not liable to an action for salvage.

The Cybele, 37 L. T. Rep. 773, 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 532, 3 P. D. 8, discussed.—YOUNG v. STEAMSHIP "SCOTIA," P.C.; [1903] A. C. 501; 72 L. J. P. C. 115; 89 L. T. 374.

32. Salvage—Appeal—Reduction of award—Costs.—There is no hard-and-fast rule as to the costs of a successful appeal in a salvage action.

Where the defendants succeeded on appeal in getting the amount of the award considerably reduced,

Held, that they were entitled to the costs of the appeal, the costs in the court below remaining as they were.—"PRINCE LLEWELLYN," P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 83; 73 L. J. P. 22; 89 L. T. 489.

33. Salvage—Exhorbitant terms demanded—Agreement quashed by court.—While two large sailing vessels were weather-bound in Holyhead Harbour, one of them dragged her anchors and came in dangerous proximity to the other. The master of the dragging vessel hailed a tug, but the master of the tug demanded £1,000, and would take nothing less before rendering assistance. The master of the sailing vessel offered £100, but rather than foul the other ship agreed to pay £1,000, and he was towed into a position where he held on to his anchors. The owners, master, and crew of the tug brought an action against both vessels, their cargoes and freights, upon the agreement in the one case and for a salvage award in the other.

The Court quashed the agreement, on the ground that it was an exorbitant and an inequitable one, which was improperly forced upon the master of the sailing vessel, and therefore could not be sustained. It ordered a sum of £200 to be paid, and gave costs on the county court scale. The action against the other vessel the court dismissed with costs, it being of opinion that no salvage service had been rendered to her by the tug.—"PORT CALEDONIA" AND "ANNA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 223; [1903] P. 184; 72 L. J. P. 60; 89 L. T. 216.

34. Salvage—Launchers of lifeboats.—In this case it was held that as the master of The Cayo Bonito engaged the coxswains and crews of the lifeboats to perform salvage services, and those services were of some benefit, the tender was inadequate, and they were entitled to an award of £400. As regarded the launchers, the effect of the evidence seemed to be that, when the lifeboats were launched, the launchers took their chance whether there might be only service to life or whether there might be service to property. In the present case the launchers had substantiated their claim against the defendants, the owners of The Cayo Bonito, and were entitled to an award of £100.—"CAYO BONITO," THE (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 310.

35. Salvage—Signals of distress—Proper interpretation of section 434, sub-section 2, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60).—Section 434 (2) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which penalizes the master of a vessel who wrongfully uses or displays signals of distress, does not apply when such signals have been properly used.

Where, therefore, signals of distress were properly displayed, and a vessel put off in response to them, and on her arrival her services were not required,

Held, that she was not entitled to be compensated for the labour undertaken or loss sustained in consequence of answering the signals.—"ELSWICK PARK," P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 76; 72 L. J. P. 79; 89 L. T. 217.

36. Salvage—Stranding of salved vessel—Value for purposes of award.—A steam trawler towed a disabled steamship into Aberdeen Bay, and signals were made for a pilot and a tug. A tug came up in response and offered to pilot and tow the vessel into harbour, but the offer was refused by her master, and the tug sent back for a pilot. In the meanwhile the hawser parted, and the vessel drifted ashore. Her value at the time the services of the tug were offered was £8,580. The costs of refloating were £1,150, and of the repairs in consequence of the stranding £5,600. In an action for salvage by the owners, master, and crew of the trawler,

Help, on the facts, that they were entitled to salvage, and to an award of £750, and that, for the purposes of arriving at a proper award, the value of the salved property must be taken at £8,500.

Held, further, that the steamship ought to have taken the services of the tug when offered.—"GERMANIA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 131; 73 L. J. P. 59; 90 L. T. 296.

37. Salvage—Tug in tow—Rights of innocent parties.—A tow was brought into distress by the negligence of the master of her tug, and the tug thereupon salved her.

The Court held that nobody connected with the tug could claim as salvors.—"DUC D'AUMALE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D. 319; [1904] P. 60; 73 L. J. P. 8; 89 L. T. 486.

38. Seaman—Distressed seaman—Provisions for relief—Expenses of maintenance and passage home—"Sufficient evidence"—Wages paid abroad in excess of such expenses—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 190, 191, 193—Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 44), s. 4.

Held, that a seaman might nevertheless be a "distressed seaman" abroad within the meaning of section 191 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, although the wages due and paid to him abroad exceeded the amount of the expenses incurred on his behalf for maintenance and passage home.

Held, further, that although the mere fact that a seaman has been shipwrecked abroad is not conclusive evidence of distress, yet that in the present case there being evidence on which the learned judge could find (as he did) that the seamen were distressed, it was unnecessary to decide whether the "sufficient evidence" mentioned in section 193 meant "conclusive evidence."—BOARD OF TRADE v. "GLENPARK" SAILING SHIP, C.A., 646; [1904] 1 K. B. 682; 73 L. J. K. B. 315; 90 L. T. 360.

39. Seaman—Master and servant—Illegal deductions—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 31, 221, 232.—No deduction from the wages of a seaman can be made for the offence of desertion, except by a court of summary jurisdiction, in accordance with sections 221 and 232 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; and any private arrangement with the seamen that such deductions should be made is illegal.—KESLAKE v. BOARD OF TRADE, K.B.D., 127; [1903] 2 K. B. 453; 72 L. J. K. B. 829; 89 L. T. 534.

40. Wharf—Negligence—Damage to vessel lying in berth—Liability of wharf-owner.—Judgment of Bucknill, J. (51 W. R. 590), on the facts affirmed.—"VILLE DE ST. NAZAIRE," THE, C.A., 68.

SLANDER:—

Accusation of bringing "blackmailing" action—Imputation of criminal offence—Action for slander maintainable.—An action for slander founded upon an accusation that the plaintiff had brought a "blackmailing" action was held to be maintainable on the ground that the words spoken might fairly be interpreted by hearers as imputing to the plaintiff an indictable offence.—MARKS v. SAMUEL, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 287; 73 L. J. K. B. 587; 90 L. T. 590.

See also Injunction, 1.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Costs—Lease by vicar and others acting by different solicitors—Lessee's liability—Error in taxation—Disallowed costs of additional solicitors excluded from one-sixth—Objections—Ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rules 39, 41—Costs of taxation.—Where a lessor can only grant a lease with the consent of third parties, and such parties act by different solicitors, the lessee is not, in the absence of agreement express or implied, liable to pay more than one set of costs. In taxing a solicitor's bill of costs, some of the items in which represent payments made by him to other solicitors, which the client is liable to pay and would have been entitled to tax if sent in to him direct by such other solicitors, any sums taxed off such items are, no less than sums taxed off the solicitor's own charges, to be reckoned as taxed off his bill for the purpose of ascertaining who is to pay the costs of taxation.

Ord. 65, r. 27 (sub-rules 39, 41), which requires objections to be carried in before the taxing-master, does not apply to objections raised against the principle adopted by the master in the taxation.

In re Remnant, 11 Beav. 603, distinguished.—FLETCHER AND DYSON, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 27; [1903] 2 Ch. 688; 72 L. J. Ch. 791; 89 L. T. 473.

2. Costs—Statute of Limitations—Lien—Set-off—Appropriation of payments.—In an action by a solicitor against his client on a bill of costs extending from 1878 to 1899, the defence of the Statute of Limitations was pleaded. At the trial the defence of the statute was held good as to all items before 1893, and the bill of costs was referred for taxation, the taxing-master to take the cash account from 1893, and the plaintiff to give credit for all sums received by him for or on account of the defendant in respect of or which ought to be treated as reducing or discharging, the bill so taxed. In the bill of costs there was an item of £66 3s. 8d. which the plaintiff had received for the defendant in May, 1894, in an action brought by the defendant in that year against a firm of Rigby & Co. Before the judgment in the present action no appropriation of this sum to the statute-barred item in the bill of costs had in fact been made; and no costs were due to the plaintiff in respect of the action against Rigby & Co. The taxing-master held that this sum was not received for or on account of the defendant in respect of, or which ought to be treated as reducing or discharging, the bill of costs; and that it ought to be treated as applied in payment of what was due to the plaintiff in May, 1894, in respect of the statute-barred items.

Held, that neither on the ground of lien, set-off, nor appropriation could this sum be applied in payment of what was due to the plaintiff in May, 1894, in respect of the statute-barred items.—SMITH v. BETTY, C.A., 137; [1903] 2 K. B. 317; 72 L. J. K. B. 853; 89 L. T. 258.

3. Costs—Taxation—Commission for the collection of rents.—The taxing-master allowed a lump sum by way of commission to remunerate solicitors for the collection of certain rents.

Held, that the commission should be treated as struck out of the bill as an item improperly included, the solicitors remaining entitled to their proper remuneration for the work done.—SHILSON, COODE, & Co., RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 556; [1904] 1 Ch. 837; 73 L. J. Ch. 541; 90 L. T. 641.

4. Costs—Taxation—Third party—Bill of mortgagee's solicitor taxed by mortgagor—Application for review — Certificate of taxing-master — Practice—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 38.—Under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), where a third party taxes a bill, this taxation is on the footing of a taxation between the solicitor and the client, and if the third party be only interested in and liable to pay the costs of one matter, under this section, as a matter of principle, he can obtain taxation of the bill so far as concerns that one matter only, and on the footing of being liable to pay only the taxed costs of that matter.

Where in the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs incurred by him under a mortgage transaction, if the third party is a mortgagor and he is only interested in the relations between the solicitor and his client, a mortgagee, so far as they concern the position of the client strictly in his character of mortgagee, the mortgagor is entitled under this section to have taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs limited to the items of costs incurred by the client strictly in his position of mortgagee.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (reported W. N. 1904, p. 78), affirmed.—LONGBOTHAM & SONS, RE, C.A., 660; [1904] 2 Ch. 152; 90 L. T. 801.

5. Costs—Taxation—Winding up of estate—Costs special to particular beneficiaries—Costs in anticipation—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 39.—In the taxation, under section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, of the bill of costs of the solicitor of trustees engaged in dividing an estate between beneficiaries the special costs incurred with respect to the share of one of the beneficiaries are chargeable against the estate as a whole.

In the final settlement of an estate between the beneficiaries, the trustees are entitled to include by anticipation such reasonable charges as will be incurred in carrying out the final division.—MILLS, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 47; [1903] 2 Ch. 518; 72 L. J. Ch. 704; 88 L. T. 863.

6. Covenant in articles of clerkship not to practice within certain radius—Breach—Work usually done by solicitors.—The defendant had bound himself to a solicitor practising at M by articles for a term, and covenanted that he would not at any time do any work or act for or on behalf of any persons usually done by solicitors within a radius of fifteen miles from M without written permission. The defendant took proceedings to obtain probate of the will of a person within the prohibited radius, and corresponded from H with a witness within the prohibited radius with a view to obtaining his evidence in order to enable probate to be obtained. He signed the præcipe directing a plaint note to be issued for a county court summons at a court in the prohibited area on behalf of a plaintiff residing therein, and conducted the proceedings until receipt of the amount paid into court. He prepared the will of a testatrix residing within the area on instructions received outside the area, and received a small fee therefor, but was present when she executed it within the area; and, lastly, he advertised in a paper circulating within but published outside the area a farm for letting within the prohibited district.

Held, in an action to restrain the defendant from practising within the prohibited limit, that the covenant might be broken although the defendant or his clerks did not go professionally within such limit. That therefore the proceedings in connection with the collection of the debt through the county court infringed the covenant. Also the acts done in relation to the execution of the will, which must be held to have been done by defendant in his character of a solicitor, constituted a breach of such covenant, but that those as to advertising the farm did not break it.

Quære, as to applying for the proof of evidence infringing the covenant.—EDMUNDSON v. RENDER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 90 L. T. 814.

7. Partnership—Fraud of partner—Liability of partners—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 11 (b).—J. & G., who were solicitors, entered into a partnership deed, by which all appointments held by G. were to be comprised in the business. G. was secretary to a company. The company, for purposes of their own, had property bought by them conveyed into the name of G., who retained the title-deed. The transaction was carried through by the firm of J. & G. It was no part of the duty of G., as secretary, to take a conveyance of real estate of the company or to take charge of the title-deeds of the company. G. raised money on deposit of the title-deeds, and subsequently executed a legal mortgage to N. J. had no notice of the conveyance to G., except in so far as the firm of J. & G. had acted for the purchasers in the matter.

Held, that J. & G., being partners only as far as the secretaryship of the company was concerned, and the company, by vesting the legal estate in G., having thus enabled him to withdraw the deed in his capacity as trustee, there was no implied contract that the firm of J. & G. were to be responsible for the deed after it had been handed over to G. as the legal owner; and, consequently, that J. was not liable for his partner's fraud.—TENDRING HUNDRED WATERWORKS CO. v. JONES, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 61; [1903] 2 Ch. 615; 73 L. J. Ch. 41.

See also Company, 38; County Court, 2.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—See Company, 3; Contract, 12; Vendor and Purchaser, 6, 7.

STAMPS.—See Company, 27; Inland Revenue, 15-19.

STATUTE:—

Private Act—Construction—Restraint on alienation—Exception in favour of jointures—Jointure appointed by will—Validity of exercise of power—Construction of earlier statute by law as existing at later time.—By a private Act (27 Hen. 8, c. xvi.) certain estates were settled upon certain persons and the heirs of their bodies, and it was provided that none of the persons so entitled should "alyen, bargayn, give or selle any of the . . . premysses . . . nor any other thing do which should be to the hurt or disinheritance of the heirs of any of them . . . but only for the joynter of wyfe or wyfes for the term of lyfe or lyves of any husband."

Held, that, on the true construction of the Act, a power of jointuring was conferred which could be exercised by any instrument for the time being being known to the law, and not only by fine or recovery, or since the Fines and Recoveries Act by disentailing assurance; and that, on the authority of Vernon's case, 4 Co. Rep. 1*a*, 4*b*, it was well created by testamentary instrument, though at the time of the passing of the Act a will had no operation upon land, the statutes which enabled land to be devised by will being later in date.—BOLTON ESTATES, RE, RUSSELL v. MEYRICK, C.A., 87; [1903] 2 Ch. 461; 72 L. J. Ch. 605; 88 L. J. 851.

STREET:—

Building line, Infringement of—Statutory remedy—Penalty — Conviction — Subsequent action by Attorney-General for injunction—Laches—Mandatory order to pull down — Local government — Urban authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 157, 158, 251—Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52), s. 3.—The penalty prescribed by section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, for a breach of the prohibition in the first part of the section against infringing the building line is not the only remedy for the offence. It is a public general Act, and an injunction will lie at the suit of the Attorney-General on behalf of the public to restrain the infringement of the building line, and in a proper case a mandatory order to pull down will be made even although the offender has been previously convicted and fined under the section for the offence by a court of summary jurisdiction.

Attorney-General v. Ashbourne Recreation Ground Co., [1903] 1 Ch. 101, followed.

Observations on imputing laches to the Attorney-General and the relators in an action for injunction where the latter are a local authority.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WIMBLEDON HOUSE ESTATE CO., Ch.D. Farwell J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 34; 73 L. J. Ch. 593.

TITHE.—See Landlord and Tenant, 15.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. Invented word—Passing off—Infringement.—No word can be said to be an invented word if it is like any known word; it must be one coined for the first time, and must not be descriptive. But if it is an English word with merely the suffix "ine" added, it is not an invented word.—CHRISTY v. TIPPER, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 414; [1904] 1 Ch. 696; 73 L. J. Ch. 212; 90 L. J. 85.

2. Passing off goods as those of another trader—Distinctive words on trade-mark—Injunction—Patents, Designs and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 105.—The plaintiffs, a firm of distillers and wine and spirit merchants, had used a label with a cat and barrel depicted thereon since 1849.

In 1879 they registered their mark in class 43 for fermented liquors and spirits as an old mark. There are two other cat and barrel marks on the register in the same class, one scarcely used in England by traders who sold in bulk or used a label without a cat and a barrel; the other was a barrel and three cats, and no user in this country was proved.

The plaintiffs' goods were well known as the "Cat and Barrel Brand" or the "Cat Brand."

The defendant in 1899 commenced to sell sloe gin under a label whereon part of a cat and part of a barrel was depicted with the words "Cat Brand" underneath.

The plaintiffs did not manufacture sloe gin at the date of the registration of their mark.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to (1) an injunction to restrain the defendant, his agents and servants, from infringing the plaintiffs' registered trade-mark; and (2) an injunction to restrain the defendant, his agents and servants, from selling or passing off sloe gin not of the plaintiffs' manufacture as and for the goods of the plaintiffs in any way whatsoever, and in particular by using the words "Cat Brand" in connection with the representation of a cat and a barrel, or any words, signs, figures, or devices which were calculated to enable the defendant's sloe gin or other liqueurs or goods of the defendants to be passed off as and for the goods of the plaintiffs.—BOORD v. HUDDART, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 89 L. T. 718.

3. Registration—Motion to rectify—Fancy word "Tabloid"—Presumption from long user—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64.—Before 1884, B. & W. made and sold drugs of solid form and biconvex shape as "Tablets," and had registered "Tablets" as a trade-mark. In 1884 they coined and registered the word "Tabloid" as a trade-mark for substances used in pharmacy. They had since made and sold as "Tabloids" solids drugs of the same shape and size.

In 1903, T. applied to have the word "Tabloid" expunged from the register.

Held, affirming the decision of Byrne, J., (ante, p. 205), that, having regard to the long period of time during which the word stood unimpeached on the register, the presumption was that "Tabloid" was, at the date of its registration, a distinctive fancy word.—WELLCOME v. THOMPSON & CAPPER, C.A., 581; [1904] 1 Ch. 736; 73 L. J. Ch. 474.

TRADE NAME:—

1. Imitation—Whether calculated to deceive—Descriptive name.—The plaintiffs, who were large manufacturers of corsets in the United States of America, in May, 1900, adopted as a new descriptive designation for their corsets the term "Erect-Form." In March, 1901, they introduced these corsets into the United Kingdom. They advertised them extensively as "W. B. Erect-Form Corsets," the words "Erect-Form Corsets" being printed in a particular manner, so as to form a scroll. The letters "W. B." were the initials of the plaintiffs' firm, but having been warned that the initials "W. B." had been for some time used by another firm, they abandoned those initials, and substituted therefor, in ordinary type, the words "America's Leading."

In October, 1901, the plaintiffs' corsets having then acquired a substantial sale and reputation in this country, the defendants determined to apply the title "Erect-Form Corsets," together with the scroll, to goods of their manufacture, and they proceeded to sell corsets of their own make, some being of a style imitated from those of the plaintiffs, but many others totally different, in boxes, practically of the same size and shape, being such boxes as were generally used in connection with the sale of corsets, and having upon the lid the words "Erect-Form" printed as a scroll, but with the addition of one of their own trade-marks, consisting of the letters "C. B." They also distributed in connection with the sale of their corsets show cards displaying a similar scroll. Before the user by the defendants of the term "Erect-Form Corsets" they gave notice in the trade journals of what they were going to do.

Held (dissentiente Romer, L.J.), that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief, what the defendants had done not being intended to deceive nor calculated so to do.

Decision of Joyce, J. (88 L. T. Rep. 168), reversed.—WEINGARTEN v. BAYER, C.A.; 89 L. T. 56.

2. Local name—"Caledonia Springs"—Words calculated to deceive—Onus of showing that goods are distinguished.—The appellants supplied mineral waters taken from their springs, at a local spa called Caledonia Springs, to agents and others in Ontario and Quebec, and these waters had acquired in the market the name of "Caledonia Water." The respondents obtained other waters, but of similar properties, from borings not far from some of the appellants springs, and sold them under the description of "Natural Saline Water from the New" (or) "from New Springs at Caledonia" and as "Beaver Brand," with a picture of a beaver on their labels as a trade-mark.

Held, that the respondents were entitled to indicate the local source of the water sold by them, and had sufficiently distinguished their goods from those of the appellants.—GRAND HOTEL CO. OF CALEDONIA SPRINGS v. WILSON, P.C. 286; [1904] A. C. 103; 73 L. J. P. C. 1; 89 L. T. 456.

3. Merchandize marks—"Natural mineral water"—Water subjected to process—Water identical—False trade description—Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2 (2).—The description "natural mineral water" applied to water, which has been subjected to a process for the purpose of making it fit for sale and consumption, which when offered for sale is in all essentials identical to the water as it exists in the spring from which it comes, is not a false trade description.—DAVENPORT v. APOLLINARIS CO., K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 19.

TRADE UNION:—

1. Action, cause of—Inducing persons not to employ another—Object—Payment of debt.—If a person, who, by virtue of his position or influence has power to carry out his design, endeavours to prevent, and succeeds in preventing, a man from obtaining or holding employment in his calling, to his injury, by reason of threats to or special influence upon the man's employers, or would-be employers, and the design was to carry out some spite against the man, or had for its object to compel him to pay a debt, or any similar object not directly connected with the acts against the man, then that person is liable to the man for the damage consequently suffered.

Per Romer, L.J.: It is not essential in order for the plaintiff to succeed in such a case that he should establish a combination of two or more persons to do the acts complained of.

Two officers of a trades union, who, by virtue of their position, had control over the men of the union, and consequently power to influence employers by calling out or threatening to call out the men unless the demands of those officers were complied with, in order to compel the plaintiff to pay a sum of money due from him to the union, combined to prevent him from obtaining or retaining employment by threatening the employers that they would call out their men if the plaintiff were employed, and caused injury to the plaintiff.

Held, that these acts having been done in the service and for the benefit of the union, the two officers and the union were liable for damages to the plaintiff.—GIBLAN v. NATIONAL AMALGAMATED LABOURERS' UNION, C.A.; [1903] 2 K. B. 600; 72 L. J. K. B. 907; 89 L. T. 386.

2. Application of funds to provide benefits to members—Principal object of society—Divisibility of objects—Rules in restraint of trade—Illegal society—Action by member to enforce benefit rules—Trade

Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4.—A society registered under the Trade Union Acts was governed by rules some of which made provision for benefits to members, and the others were illegal as being in restraint of trade.

A member brought an action against the officers of the society to enforce a rule of the society under which he claimed to be entitled to a superannuation allowance.

Held, upon the consideration of all the rules of the society, that the main object of the society was illegal at common law as being in restraint of trade, and that those rules which made provision for benefits to members were merely ancillary to that main object, and could not be separated from it.

Held, therefore, affirming the judgment of the Divisional Court (88 L. T. Rep. 686), that under section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, the action must fail.—CULLEN v. ELWIN, C.A.; 90 L. T. 840.

3. Master and workman—Procuring breach of contract of service—Malice—Bonâ fide advice—Just cause.—Interference with contractual relations known to law is a violation of legal rights, which is actionable unless there is sufficient justification for what was done. In deciding what will constitute sufficient justification, regard must be had to the circumstances of each case. Where a third person has procured a breach of contract between master and servant, he is not justified of necessity merely by showing that he had no personal animus against the master or that it was to the advantage of the servant that the contract should be broken.

In 1901 the South Wales Miners' Federation issued a manifesto ordering the men to stop work on certain days known as "stop days." This action occasioned great loss to the employers, but was occasioned by a bonâ fide belief that the workmen would be benefited by reason of the rise in the price of coal thereby caused. In an action by the employers for damages, Held (by Romer and Stirling, L.JJ., Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissentiente), that the action would lie, although there was no malicious intention on the part of the federation to injure the employers, and the federation bonâ fide believed that they were bound to act as they did in the interest of the men.

Decision of Bigham, J. (51 W. R. 59), reversed.—GLAMORGANSHIRE COAL CO. v. SOUTH WALES MINERS' FEDERATION, C.A., 165; [1903] 2 K. B. 545; 72 L. J. K. B. 893; 89 L. T. 393.

TRAMWAY:

1. Contract—Clearing snow from track.—By agreement between the corporation of M. and a tramway company running tramcars through the streets it was agreed that "the company shall, under instructions from the city, keep their track free from ice and snow."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the company were not bound to remove from the streets altogether the snow and ice cleared off the tramway track; and that the words "under instructions from the city" only applied to the extent of the work to be done, not to the particular method to be adopted for doing it.

Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways Co., 75 L. T. Rep. 633, [1897] A. C. 111, distinguished.—MONTREAL CITY v. MONTREAL STREET RAILWAY CO., P.C.; [1903] A. C. 482; 72 L. J. P. C. 119; 89 L. T. 30.

2. Purchase by local authority — Depot outside district of local authority—"Used with and suitable to" the undertaking—Liability of local authority to pay for—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 43.—By section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, it is provided: "Where the promoters of a tramway in a district are not the local authority, the local authority . . . may" (within certain specified times) " . . . by notice in writing require such promoters to sell, and thereupon such promoters shall sell to them their undertaking, or so much of the same as is within such district, upon terms of paying the then value . . . of the tramway, and all lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the promoters suitable to and used by them for the purposes of their undertaking within such district."

The tramway company was the owner of a large depot situated some distance outside the boundary of the district council, but found by an arbitrator to be "used with and suitable to" the undertaking of the tramway company within the council's district.

The district council having given notice to the tramway company that they were required to sell to the council under the conditions and in the manner provided by section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, so much of their works and undertaking as were within the council's district.

Held, that the council were bound to pay for this depot.

Held, further, that the words "within such district" applied to the "undertaking," and not to "all lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the promoters."—MANCHESTER CARRIAGE CO. v. SWINTON UBBAN COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 795.

TRANSVAAL, LAW of:—

Proclamation No. 14 of 1902—Final decree of High Court—Jurisdiction in appeal—Transvaal Patent Act, No. 6 of 1887.—The Supreme Court of the Transvaal has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a decision of the High Court which before the war was final, for section 16 of the proclamation gives no right of appeal where none existed before.

Held, also, that the High Court had power to cancel a patent in an action to which the Attorney-General was not a party.—AFRICAN GOLD RECOVERY CO. v. HAY, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 438.

TRESPASS:—

Ditch and fence—Presumption of ownership—Acts of ownership—Rebuttal of presumption.—The plaintiff and defendant were adjoining owners of land, the lands being bounded by a bank with a fence, with a ditch on the defendant's side.

For nearly fifty years the defendant had trimmed the fence, pollarded the trees, and cleaned the ditch, but there was no evidence of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff.

Held, that these acts of ownership did not rebut the presumption that the bank and fence were the property of the plaintiff.—HENNIKER v. HOWARD, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 157.

TRINIDAD, LAW of:—

Deed of concession—Construction of covenant—Lands in possession of Crown.—A restrictive covenant by the Crown in a deed of concession affected certain lands situated within three miles of the subject of concession "which now are or at any time during the said term shall come into the possession of His Majesty."

Held, that the covenant related only to lands in the actual possession, and not merely subject to the control, of the Crown.—NEW TRINIDAD LAKE ASPHALT CO. v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 415.

TRUST:—

Will—Denuding—Vesting.—A testator directed that the income of his property (consisting of movable and real estate) be divided between his children; that in the event of any child dying leaving issue his or her share of income should be paid to the issue; and if a child left no issue the deceased child's share should be divided among the survivors; and he finally directed that "on the death of all" his children his estate should "be winded up and converted into money . . ." and divided among the children of his sons and daughters per stirpes.

The testator was survived by four children—Andrew, who died unmarried, George, who died in 1880, survived by the appellant (who became of age in 1898), Mary, and Jane; the two latter were still alive and had families. The appellant claimed payment of one-third of the corpus of the testator's estate.

Held, affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session ((1900) 2 F. 749), that the appellant was not entitled to immediate payment on the ground that the third of the income of the corpus was not by any means the same as the income of a severed portion of the estate; and it did not follow that if the estate was now divided that the remaining portion of the estate left undivided would represent in the future the present value.

Miller's Trustees v. Miller, (1890) 18 R. 301, and Yuill's Trustees v. Thomson, (1902) 4 F. 815, affirmed.—MACCULLOCH v. ANDERSON, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 55.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Liability—Mortgage by beneficiary—Inquiry as to prior charge—Trustees induced to sign incorrect statement by concealment of facts—Security deficient—Trustees not liable—Estoppel.—M., donee of a power, appointed £1,000 to her son C., and £1,400 to her son E. E. mortgaged this sum, and notice of the charge was given to the trustees, a fact which they entirely forgot. M., by her will, forgetting the appointment to E., appointed to her two sons and her daughter such further sums as, with C.'s £1,000, exhausted the fund. E. applied to X., one of the plaintiffs, for a loan on his interest under M.'s will, concealing the former appointment. X. required a memorandum from the trustees that they had no notice of a prior charge. He applied for this to P. & A., solicitors to the trust, who informed him they never advised trustees to give such assurance. They, however, authorized X. to call on Dr. M., one of the trustees, to obtain from him a declaration of C.'s identity. X. sent his clerk, who took advantage of the visit to induce Dr. M. to sign the memorandum as to notices. Dr. M. was unwilling to sign without legal advice, but gave way on being informed that P. & A. had been seen and their assent obtained. The sight of Dr. M.'s signature led the other trustee to sign. X. completed the mortgage without informing P. & A. of the signatures he had obtained. E.'s interest, after paying the prior charge, was not sufficient to meet the plaintiffs' mortgage, and they claimed the deficiency from the trustees to whom the receipt of notice of the prior charge had been brought home.

Held, that the circumstances under which the signatures to the memorandum had been obtained precluded the plaintiffs from praying it in aid to estop the trustees from setting up the prior charge as a defence, and that the trustees were therefore not liable.—PORTER v. MOORE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 619.

2. Power to appoint new trustees—Donee of power appointing himself—Sanction of court.—The fiduciary character of a power to appoint new trustees renders it improper for the donee of the power to appoint himself, save in exceptional circumstances; it does not in itself exclude him from the class of persons capable of being appointed. Accordingly, where it is beneficial to the trust that he should be appointed, and provided that he is not excluded by the language of the instrument creating the power, it is competent for the donee to appoint himself and for the court to confirm the appointment so made.

Tempest v. Lord Camoys, 58 L. T. N. S. 221, 36 W. R. Dig. 207, followed.

In re Skeats' Settlement. 42 Ch. D. 522. 38 W. R. Dig. 202, and In re Newen, [1894] 2 Ch. 297, explained. — MONTEFIORE v. GUEDALLA, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 151; [1903] 2 Ch. 723; 73 L. J. Ch. 13; 89 L. T. 472.

3. Will—Construction—Power—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 10 (3), 22, 37.—A power given to trustees, which enables them to deal with trust property, is primâ facie given them ex officio as an incident of their office, and passes with the office to the holders or holder thereof for the time being. The mere fact that the power is one requiring the exercise of a very wide personal discretion is not enough to exclude the primâ facie presumption. The testator's reliance on the individuals to the exclusion of the holders of the office for the time being must be expressed in clear and apt language. SMITH, RE, EASTWICK v. SMITH, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 104; [1904] 1 Ch. 139; 73 L. J. Ch. 74; 89 L. T. 604.

See also Company, 18, 29; Married Woman, 6; Practice, 26; Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

UNDUE INFLUENCE:—

Husband and wife—Guarantee—No consideration—Want of knowledge of effect—Independent advice.—F., who was indebted to B., obtained from his wife, the defendant, a guarantee in favour of B. to cover his debts then due to B., a present advance of £500 and future credits, the total liability being limited to £1,500.

The defendant was a trader on her own account, and had on previous occasions given F. small amounts of financial aid. The defendant was aware of F.'s financial position and of his indebtedness to B.

B., B.'s solicitor, F., and the defendant were the only persons present when the guarantee was signed, and the defendant had no independent advice.

The guarantee, a very complicated document, was twice read over by the solicitor, who suggested to B. that the defendant should be separately represented.

Held, (1) that the defendant did not sufficiently understand the nature of the guarantee; (2) that the relationship of husband and wife was one where in the case of a large voluntary benefit influence was presumed to exist; (3) that the transaction being challenged, the burden was on the donee to prove that the giving of the guarantee was free from the influence of the husband, and that, in the absence of independent advice, this had not been discharged; (4) that B. was sufficiently put on inquiry to be affected with the equitable flaws in the transaction.

Cook v. Lamotte, 15 Beav. 234; Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; Cobbett v. Brock, 20 Beav. 524; Turnbull v. Duval, [1902] A. C. 429, 87 L. T. Rep. 154, considered and applied.

Observation of Parker, V.C., in Nedby v. Nedby, 5 De G. & Sm. 377, not followed.—BISCHOFF'S TRUSTEE v. FRANK, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 188.

See also Probate, 8.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER:—

1. Assignment of lease—Notice of unusual covenants—Constructive notice—Fair opportunity—Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 3.—In the course of negotiations for the assignment of a lease by the plaintiff to the defendant the defendant's solicitor had an interview with the plaintiff's agent. The agent offered to show the solicitor a lease similar in terms to the lease proposed to be assigned. The solicitor being pressed with other business could not then examine the document. Without any further inquiries or any further information as to the terms of the lease, a contract for assignment was executed. The defendant, having subsequently discovered that the lease contained unusual covenants, repudiated the contract.

Held, in an action for breach of the contract, that the plaintiff had not discharged the onus which lay upon him of either disclosing or giving the defendant a fair opportunity of ascertaining the terms of the lease.—MOLYNEUX v. HAWTREY, C.A., 23; [1903] 2 K. B. 487; 72 L. J. K. B. 873; 89 L. T. 350.

2. Contract for sale and purchase—Conditions of sale—"Remarks"—Form of conveyance.—Provisions in a contract for sale and purchase, stating that something should be done either by vendor or purchaser after the estate has been vested, should be inserted as a covenant in the conveyance.—COOPER AND CRONDACE, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 441; 90 L. T. 258.

3. Freeholds subject to restrictive covenants—Covenants to be entered into by purchaser.—In an agreement for sale of freehold land, it was stated that the property was subject to restrictive covenants. The vendor had covenanted with his vendor to observe and perform these covenants, and to indemnify his vendor.

Held, that the purchaser ought to enter into a similar covenant with the vendor, but that the covenant should be prefaced with the words "with the object and intention of affording to (the vendor) his heirs, executors, and administrators a full and sufficient indemnity in respect of (the restrictive covenants), but not further or otherwise."—POOLE AND CLARKE'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 173.

4. Power of sale—Will—Executor—Constructive trustee.—A testatrix by her will, dated the 3rd of March, 1849, appointed R. J. and U. M. executors, and gave them powers to apply income in maintenance and to sell certain hereditaments after the death of the survivors of her daughters.

The testatrix died on the 25th of December, 1850. R. J. alone proved the will, and died, leaving J. W. and M. W. his executors.

In 1873 a petition was presented by all parties beneficially interested, and new trustees of the will were appointed under the Trustee Act, 1850.

After the death of the survivor of the daughters the trustees contracted to sell the hereditaments.

The purchaser required the concurrence of the beneficiaries.

Held, that the concurrence of the beneficiaries could not be required.—PERROTT AND KING, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 90 L. T. 156.

5. Receiver—Real estate—Purchaser's interest in land—Judgment creditor of purchaser—Equitable execution—Notice to vendor—Rescission of contract on money payment to purchaser—Secured creditor—Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 13.—In June, 1901, the purchaser under a contract for the sale of land paid a deposit, and was let into possession. The purchaser did not complete, and litigation ensued between him and the vendor. In August, 1902, a judgment creditor of the purchaser obtained by way of equitable execution an order appointing himself, upon giving security, receiver of the purchaser's interest in the land under the contract for sale, and at once gave notice of this order to the vendor, but did not perfect his security as receiver until May, 1903. In the meantime—in January, 1903—the purchaser being unable to complete, the litigation between him and the vendor was, without notice to the judgment creditor, compromised by the contract for sale being rescinded and the vendor paying the purchaser £110, not in part repayment of the deposit, but to give up possession of the property.

Held, that the £110 was not paid in respect of any interest which the purchaser had in the property, but as the price for getting him out of possession, and that the action failed.—RIDOUT v. FOWLER, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 93; 73 L. J. Ch. 579.

6. Specific performance—Vendor's motion to rescind contract—Form of order—Costs.—Form of order on motion for rescission of contract with costs of the motion and stay of all further proceedings, except such as might be necessary for recovery of the costs in an action for specific performance.—OLDE v. OLDE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 260; [1904] 1 Ch. 35; 73 L. J. Ch. 81; 89 L. T. 604.

7. Specific performance—Vendor's title—Adverse claim—Practice.—When a bonâ fide claim has been made by a third party affecting the vendor's title, although no action to enforce such claim is actually pending, the court will not make a decree for specific performance of a contract for sale against the purchaser, but will order the vendor's action for specific performance to stand over for a reasonable interval, to see whether the third party will meantime institute proceedings to enforce his claim.

On a sale of house property the vendor represented that rates were payable by the tenant. At the date of the sale the vendor knew that the tenant claimed that rates ought to be paid by the landlord. Before completion of the purchase the tenant brought an action against the vendor to enforce his said claim, but this action was dismissed on a technical ground. The tenant, however, expressed an intention of taking further proceedings in the matter against the vendor. The purchaser refused to complete on the ground that the vendor did not show a good title. In an action for specific performance brought by the vendor,

The Court refused to make an immediate decree for specific performance, and ordered the case to stand over for a definite period in order to see whether the tenant would in the meantime institute new proceedings to enforce his claim.—GEORGE v. THOMAS, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 416; 90 L.T. 505.

8. Title—Equitable estate in copyholds—Sale by administratrix—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1.—The equitable estate in copyholds vests, under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, in the personal representative, and not in the customary heir.—SOMERVILLE AND TURNER, RE, Ch D. Kekewich, J., 101; [1903] 2 Ch. 583; 72 L. J. Ch. 727; 89 L. T. 405.

9. Vendor receiving rents while in possession after time for completion—Arrears of rent—Trusteeship.—A vendor remaining in possession after the day fixed for completion of the sale by no default of the purchaser, and receiving the rents of the property after electing to take interest in lieu of rents, is not at liberty as against the purchaser to allocate any part of such rents to arrears of rent due to himself from tenants either at the date of the contract or subsequently before the day fixed for completion.—PLEWS v. SAMUEL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 410; [1904] 1 Ch. 464; 73 L. J. Ch. 279; 90 L. T. 533.

See also Local Government, 15.

WATER:—

1. Pollution—Solid matter—Prohibition against putting into river—Deposit in mill dam—Cleaning out dam—Deposit mixed with water and turned into river—Offence.—Section 5 of the West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894, makes it an offence for any person to put or cause to be put or knowingly permit to be put into any river or stream within the jurisdiction of the rivers board (after enumerating certain specified solid matters) "any deposit in a mill dam, or any sludge, or any solid sewage matter"; and "solid matter" was defined as not including "particles of matter in suspension in water." The respondents, who were manufacturers, were owners and occupiers of a mill and a large mill dam into which flowed through a goit the water of a certain river; and polluting trade effluents from several mills and the sewage of several hundred houses also passed into the river above the respondents' mill and thence through the goit into the respondents' dam, and, in consequence of the waters being impounded in the dam by the respondents, a quantity of mud, sludge, and deposit had been formed in the basin of the dam; but there had been no discharge into the dam by the respondents themselves of any effluent or any polluting matter, solid or otherwise. The respondents, in order to clean out the dam, turned the whole waters of the river into the dam, while men with spades conveyed the mud and deposit into the current as it flowed through the dam, and by this operation the mud, sludge, and deposit in the dam became admixed with water and was carried in suspension through the outlet from the dam into the river below the mill, rendering the river muddy and turbid for a considerable distance. The effluent, as it went from the dam into the river, consisted of over 99½ per cent. of liquids, and less than ½ per cent. of solids.

Held, that the respondents had committed no offence against section 5 of the Act, either in unlawfully causing to be put, or in knowingly permitting to be carried, in the river the mud, sludge, and deposit from the dam, as the stuff sent out into the river, being in a liquid state and containing less than ½ per cent. of solid matter, could not then be described as mud, sludge, and deposit, and that it was immaterial that it may have been so in the dam before the operation of cleaning began.—WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE RIVERS BOARD v. RAWSON, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 363.

2. Riparian owner—Obstruction of water for purposes unconnected with riparian tenement.—The owner of a tenement adjoining a natural stream has no right to divert the water to a place outside the tenement, and there consume it for purposes unconnected with the tenement.—MCCARTNEY v. LONDONDERRY RAILWAY, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 301.

WATERWORKS:—

1. Compensation — Lands compulsorily taken—Natural and special adaptability of land for purposes of undertaking—Right of arbitrator to take this into account—Aspatria, Silloth, and District Water Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. lvii.), ss. 23, 24, 29, 30.—In estimating the value of land and easements to be acquired by a water board for the purposes of constructing thereon a reservoir, the natural and peculiar adaptability for that purpose is a fit and proper matter for consideration by an arbitrator as an element in the value thereof in assessment of compensation.

Semble, that the claimant in such a case need not give evidence that there were other customers who would be willing to purchase his land for such a purpose.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (Bramwell, Brett, and Cotton, L.JJ.) in Riddell v. Newcastle and Gateshead Waterworks Co., reported in Browne and Allen's Law of Compensation (2nd ed.), p. 672, considered and approved.—GOUGH AND ASPATIA, SILLOTH, AND DISTRICT WATER BOARD, RE, C.A., 552; [1904] 1 K. B. 417; 73 L. J. K. B. 228; 90 L. T. 43.

2. Dividend—"Prescribed rate"—Preference stock—"Paid-up capital in the company"—Dividend not prescribed in special Act—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 2, 75—Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118), s. 13.—By section 75 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, "the profits of the undertaking to be divided among the undertakers in any year shall not exceed the prescribed rate, or, where no rate is prescribed, they shall not exceed the rate of ten pounds in the hundred by the year on the paid-up capital in the undertaking, which in such case shall be deemed the prescribed rate, unless a larger dividend be at any time necessary to make up the deficiency of any previous dividend." By section 2, "prescribed" means prescribed in the special Act. By section 13 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, where any company is authorized by a special Act to be thereafter passed to issue any preference stock, the company may issue such stock at a rate of dividend not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum.

A waterworks company was authorized by its special Acts of 1864 and 1875, which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses and the Companies Clauses Acts, to issue preference stock. No rate of dividend was specified in either of the special Acts. The company issued preference stock bearing interest at the rate of 4½ and 5 per cent. per annum respectively.

Held, that the "prescribed rate" for the preference stock, within the meaning of section 75 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, was 4½ and 5 per cent. respectively.—CHELSEA WATERWORKS CO. v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD, C.A., 449; [1904] 2 K. B. 77; 90 L. T. 831.

3. Dividend—Prescribed rate—Profits—Deficiencies in previous years—Incorporation of Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 75.—The appellant company was incorporated in 1809, and for some years paid dividends of less than 10 per cent. per annum, though there was no limit to the amount they might pay. In 1864 it obtained an Act of Parliament, which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, by section 75 of which Act no larger dividend than 10 per cent. in any year was permissible "unless a larger dividend be at any time necessary to make up the deficiency of any previous dividend which shall have fallen short of the said yearly rate.

Held, that the company were not entitled to pay a larger dividend than 10 per cent. per annum in order to make up any deficiencies which fell short of that rate prior to the year 1864, when the Waterworks Clauses Act was first incorporated.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 53; [1903] 1 Ch. 575) affirmed.—KENT WATERWORKS

Co. v. LAMPLOUGH, H.L., 401; [1904] A. C. 27; 73 L. J. Ch. 96; 89 L. T. 704.

4. Gratuitous use of water for extinguishing fire—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 42.—By section 42 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the undertakers shall at all times keep charged with water all their pipes to which fire-plugs shall be fixed, and shall allow all persons at all times to take and use such water for the purpose of extinguishing fire without making compensation for same.

Held, that this power was confined to take water from the undertakers, pipes to which fire-plugs were fixed, and did not apply to a fire-plug affixed to a private pipe which took water (by agreement) from the defendants' main for agricultural purposes.—WEARDALE AND CONSETT WATER CO. v. CHESTER-LE-STREET CO-OPERATIVE CO., K.B.D., 684; [1904] 2 K. B. 240; 73 L. J. K. B. 659.

5. House-owner's communication pipes lawfully connected with company's main—Communication pipes cut off by company—Trespass—Action for damages and injunction—Right of action—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 43, 53.—The builder and owner of a row of houses laid down communication pipes for the supply of water to the houses from the main of a waterworks company which had been incorporated by special Act. The special Act incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. The pipes were laid down with the approval of the company. The company afterwards refused to make the connection between the pipes and the main. The house-owner thereupon lawfully made the connection, which was then immediately cut off by the company.

In an action by the house-owner against the company claiming damages and an injunction to restrain the company from preventing him from again connecting the pipes with the main, and from severing such connection if so made again by the plaintiff,

Held, that there was nothing in sections 43 and 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which disabled the plaintiff from bringing such an action. —GALE v. RHYMNEY AND ABER GAS AND WATER CO., C.A.; 89 L. T. 399.

6. Pauper school—Supply of water for domestic purposes—Trade, manufacture, or business—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 35, 53—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 12.—Although the maintenance and education of pauper children by guardians of the poor is a "business" within section 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, yet, inasmuch as the premises wherein such business is carried on constitute a "dwelling-house" within section 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the guardians are entitled to demand a supply of water to the premises for domestic purposes, provided that they put themselves into a position to confine the user of the water so supplied to purposes which are domestic.

The meaning of the term "domestic purposes" discussed.

Observations on Barnard Castle Urban District Council v. Wilson, 50 W. R. 92, 51 W. R. 102, [1901] 2 Ch. 813, [1902] 2 Ch. 746.—SOUTH-WEST SUBURBAN WATER CO. v. ST. MARYLEBONE GUARDIANS, K.B.D., 378; [1904] 2 K. B. 174.

7. Penalties—Statutory duty to supply compensation water to mill-owners—Breach of duty—Right to maintain action in High Court for penalties—Recovery of penalties "otherwise provided for" than before justices —Huddersfield Water Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. cx.) s. 32—Waterworks Clauses Act. 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 85—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 145.—Under a local water Act a corporation were bound to supply certain compensation water as compensation for the waters taken by them for the purposes of the Act, and in case of neglect to supply such compensation water they were for every day on which such neglect occurred to "forfeit and pay to the occupiers of each of the mills and works affected thereby (who may sue for and recover the same) the sum of five pounds," and were also to make compensation for any loss sustained by such occupiers in respect of which the penalties were not a sufficient compensation, and such compensation might be sued for in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Section 145 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which was incorporated in the local Act, provides that every penalty or forfeiture, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two justices.

Held, affirming the decision of Wright, J., that the £5 penalties imposed by the local Act were intended in the main to be a mode of compensation to the injured occupiers of the mills, and therefore the mode of recovering penalties which is prescribed in section 145 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, did not apply, and an action to recover the penalties was rightly brought in the High Court.—MELTHAM SPINNING CO. v. HUDDERSFIELD CORPORATION, C.A.; 89 L. T. 403.

8. Pipes—Defective communication pipe—Non-repair by occupier of premises—Waste of water—Right to cut off supply—Right to receive supply—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 28, 29, 30, 43, 52—Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), ss. 28, 29, 32.—A communication pipe from the plaintiff company's main pipe to certain stables in the metropolis in the occupation of a servant of the defendant became defective, and thereby there was a leakage and waste of water. The communication pipe was the property of the defendant. The company served notice to repair, and intimated that unless the pipe was repaired they would cut off the supply of water. The defendant failed to repair the pipe, and the plaintiffs cut off the supply. The defendant thereupon preferred an information against the plaintiffs for penalties under section 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, for refusing to furnish a supply of water.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to cut off the water and cease to supply the defendant, as the duty to repair a defect in a communication pipe being cast by section 28 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, upon the owner or occupier of the premises, he had, after notice to repair, permitted the pipe to remain in a condition in which it would cause waste of water, and had wrongfully failed to prevent the waste within the meaning of section 32 of the same Act.—GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS CO. v. RODOCANACHI, K.B.D., 508; [1904] 2 K. B. 230; 73 L. J. K. B. 441; 90 L. T. 819.

9. Supply—Right of support for pipe—Private Act —Presumption.—By the Edinburgh Water Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. cxvi.), the respondents' predecessors in title were empowered to lay a pipe for bringing water from a certain spring into the city of Edinburgh, and in 1823 a pipe was laid down, and has since been continuously used. In 1898 the respondents brought an action against the appellants, who were the owners of the minerals under some of the land through which the pipe passed, for a declaration that they were entitled to support for their pipe so that it might serve as a conduit for water, and that the defendants were not entitled so to work the minerals as to injure it. The defendants denied that the plaintiffs had acquired a right of support.

Held, that, after the period of time which had elapsed, it must be assumed that the respondents' predecessors in title had done all that was required by the Act of 1819, and that they had acquired a right of support for the pipe.—CLIPPENS OIL CO. v. EDINBURGH WATER TRUSTEES, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 64; 73 L. J. P. C, 32; 89 L. T. 589.

10. Value of land taken—Proximity to other land—Land taken not of itself adaptable to reservoir—Assessment of value—Education of children of workmen constructing reservoir—Remoteness.—The T corporation were empowered by their special Act to take certain land for the construction of a reservoir, which included land belonging to the Duke of N. The land was not of itself adaptable for a reservoir, but with other land belonging to other owners, which other land by itself was not so adaptable, was adaptable for a reservoir.

The arbitrator, in determining the value of the land of the Duke of N., had regard to its natural character and position, and to its proximity to the other parcels of land, and to the probability that if any other persons required all the lands for a reservoir the land of the Duke of N. would have some enhanced value owing to its natural character and position and proximity to the other parcels of land.

Held, that the arbitrator was right.

Owing to the construction of the reservoir and an influx of workmen who would reside there for a considerable period, it was reasonably certain that there would be an additional population of children who would require education. The Duke of N. was the owner of fourteen-fifteenths of the land in the township where the land taken by the corporation was situate.

Held, that no claim was maintainable in respect of expense which might be incurred for educating these children, as it was merely an uncertain and remote possibility of a burden being imposed in respect of something which was not the use of the land itself.—TYNEMOUTH CORPORATION AND NORTHUMBERLAND (DUKE) RE, K.B.D.; 89 L. T. 557.

11. Water rate—Supply of water—Differentiation of rates—Corporation of borough—"Rates"—Northampton Waterworks Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. xlvii), s. 59—Northampton Corporation Waterworks Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. ccviii.), ss. 10, 25, 36—Northampton (Extension) Order, 1900, art. 36.—By section 59 of the Northampton Waterworks Act, 1861 (which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847), the waterworks company might from time to time supply any person with water for such remuneration and on such terms and conditions as should be agreed upon. By the Northampton Corporation Waterworks Act, 1884, the waterworks undertaking was transferred to the corporation, with all the authorities, rights, powers, and privileges of the company. By section 36 of the Act "the corporation may thenceforward charge for the supply of water for domestic use to any dwelling-house a sum not exceeding 7½ per centum per annum on the net rateable value of such dwelling-house, as ascertained by the valuation list in force at the commencement of the quarter during which the water rate becomes payable, or, if there be no such list, then on the net rateable value of such dwelling-house as the same is assessed to the last poor rate." There was no section in any of the Acts which gave any specific directions or powers as to either equality or differentiation of rating. The defendants' dwelling-house was, until 1900, situated in Kingsthorpe, a district outside the borough of Northampton, but within the corporation's area of water supply. By the Northampton (Extension) Order, 1900, the area of the borough was extended so as to include that part of Kingsthorpe where the defendants' house was situated, and, by article 36 of the order, the general district rates to be levied in the added part of Kingsthorpe were not in any one year for ten years to "exceed such an amount as, when added to the poor rate and the borough rate, and any other rate made by the corporation in the same year," would make up a total rate of 5s. 6d. in the pound on the rateable value of such hereditament. The rates levied in the added part of Kingsthorpe (other than the water rate) always amounted to 5s. 6d. in the pound. The corporation had, down to June, 1901, been paid a water rate of 7½ per cent. from all domestic consumers in the old borough and the added part In June, 1901, the corporation reduced the water rate to 5 per cent. in the case of consumers in the old borough, but retained it at 7½ per cent. in the case of consumers in the added part.

Held, (1) that there was nothing in the Acts to prevent the corporation from differentiating the water rate as above set forth; and (2) that the words "any other rate" in article 36 of the Northampton (Extension) Order, 1900, did not include a water rate, and that the corporation were entitled to charge a water rate from the defendant, though the rate payable by him, exclusive of the water rate, amounted to 5s. 6d. in the pound.—NORTHAMPTON CORPORATION v. ELLEN, C.A., 305; [1904] 1 K. B. 299; 73 L. J. K. B. 329; 90 L. T. 71.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES:—

1. Beam scale—Weight indicated exceeding true weight of article sold—Paper bag placed in scoop in which tea is weighed at request of customer—Metal clip fastened to machine—Having in their possession a scale which is false or unjust—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 25.—The respondents, who were wholesale tea merchants, received orders from certain customers to supply them with tea in quarter-pound packets weighed in customers' own bags, the net weight of each packet to be a quarter of a pound. In order to meet the wishes of their customers the respondents set aside one of their weighing machines, on one arm of which they attached a metal disc as nearly as possible corresponding in weight with the weight of a bag. The respondents were summoned under section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, for having in their possession a scale which was false and unjust.

Held, reversing the decision of the magistrate, that the respondents should have been convicted, because there was evidence that the beam scales in question could not weigh accurately, and were therefore false and unjust within the meaning of the section.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. PAYNE, K.B.D., 299; [1904] 1 K. B. 194; 73 L. J. K. B. 192; 89 L. T. 632.

2. Sale of coal—"Cause the weight of the vehicle . . . to be previously ascertained"—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 22.—By section 22 (1) of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889: "Where any quantity of coal exceeding two hundredweight is conveyed for delivery on sale in a vehicle in bulk, the seller of the coal shall . . . cause the weight of the vehicle to be previously ascertained. . . ."

Held, that the true test was whether the vehicle had been weighed so recently and under such circumstances that its correct weight had been ascertained.

Semble, that weighing at reasonable intervals was not the proper test, but that the waggon need not be weighed before every delivery.—BEARDSLEY v. PIKE, K.B.D.; 90 L. T. 652.

WILL:—

1. Attesting witness — Gift to daughter or her children—Attestation by daughter's husband—Failure of a gift to daughter's children—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15 —A testator who died in 1886 by his will, which was attested by the husband of one of his daughters, directed that after the death of his wife, which happened in the lifetime of that daughter, half of his freehold estate should go to that daughter or her children.

Held, that as the gift to that daughter was void by virtue of section 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, the gift to her children also failed.—APLIN v. STONE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1904] 1 Ch. 543; 73 L. J. Ch. 456; 90 L. T. 284.

2. Codicil confirming will—Unattested alteration made before execution of codicil—Construction—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 21.—Where unattested alterations have been made in a will after the execution thereof, and the testator has afterwards executed a codicil confirming the will, it is in all cases a question of the construction of the codicil whether he has confirmed the will as originally executed or as subsequently altered. A "will" means an instrument executed in conformity with the requirements of the Wills Act; consequently, where the codicil purports to confirm the "will," no effect is to be given to the subsequent alterations.

A testatrix gave legacies to A., B., C. Afterwards, by her directions, the legacies were crossed out. The obliteration was not executed in the manner required by the Wills Act for the execution of the will. Subsequently she executed a codicil to her "will" revoking the legacy to B., and in other respects confirming her said will.

Held, that the legacies to A. and C. were valid, and payable to them.—HAY, RE, KERR v. STINNEAR, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 92; [1904] 1 Ch. 317; 73 L. J. Ch. 33.

3. Condition—Marriage with consent of mother—Withdrawal of consent.—Where a testator regulates the enjoyment of property given by his will according as the beneficiary shall or shall not marry with the consent of her mother, but prescribes no particular form of consent, the court will treat such consent as a matter of substance rather than of form; it will not allow such consent, if once given, to be capriciously withdrawn.—BROWN, RE, INGALL v. BROWN, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 173; [1904] 1 Ch. 120; 73 L. J. Ch. 130; 90 L. T. 220.

4. Construction—Advancement—Duty to account.—A testator's will gave his widow a power of appointing his residuary estate among his children, and also contained advancement and hotchpot clauses. Four children survived him. During his widow's lifetime, advances, which purported to be made under the advancement clause, were made to one of the children. The widow, by the will, appointed the estate among her children equally.

Held, that the hotchpot clause had no application, and that there was no intention that the advanced sums should be brought into account by the advanced child.—FOX, RE, WODEHOUSE v. FOX, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 229; [1904] 1 Ch. 480; 73 L. J. Ch. 314; 90 L. T. 477.

5. Construction—Ambiguity—Codicil—Explanation by reference—Gift to a class—Common characteristic.—It is permissible to refer to a codicil to clear up an ambiguity in a will where the recital of the will in the codicil is not obviously erroneous.

Darley v. Martin, 13 C. B. 683, and Groves v. Raper, 5 W. R. 134, followed.—VENN, RE, LINDON v. INGRAM, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 603; [1904] 2 Ch. 52; 73 L. J. Ch. 507; 90 L. T. 502.

6. Construction—Bequest of "all securities for money standing invested in my name."—A testatrix made a bequest of "all securities for money standing invested in my name." Her personal property comprised the following items: Mortgage bonds, India Stock, perpetual debenture stocks, perpetual preference stocks, and shares in a limited company. After the testatrix's death a list in her handwriting containing the above items and headed "Securities" was found.

Held, that the words in question referred to the investments generally which were standing in the testatrix's name at the time of her death, the word "invested" relating to the word "money"; and that therefore all the stocks and shares were included in the bequest.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (89 L. T. Rep. 84), affirmed.—JOHNSON, RE, GREENWOOD v. GREENWOOD, C.A.; 89 L. T. 520.

7. Construction—Bequest to voluntary schools—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42).—By his will in 1886 testator bequeathed shares in a bank to the managers of voluntary schools upon trust to pay the income thereof to the said schools so long as they should be supported by voluntary subscriptions, but, in the event of the said schools ceasing to be so supported or becoming subject to the control of a school board, a gift over.

Held, that the schools had not ceased to be supported by voluntary subscriptions, and that the gift over had not taken effect in consequence of the Education Act, 1902.—BEARD'S TRUSTS, RE, BUTLIN v. HARRIS, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 312; [1904] 1 Ch. 270; 73 L. J. Ch. 176; 90 L. T. 274.

8. Construction—Estate tail—Cy-près—Perpetual succession of life estates—Distribution per stirpes.—In a devise to A. for life, and after her death to her child or children, equally between them share and share alike if more than one, and if but one to such only child for life, and so to be continued and distributed in a descending line per stirpes from issue to issue for life so long any issue should be living descendant from A., the children of the parent dying taking their parents' share equally between them in all cases of decease, there being no gift over on failure of the issue of A.,

Held, that no estate tail, by the operation of the doctrine of cy-près, was given to A., and that the limitations subsequent to the life estate of A. being void for remoteness, there was an intestacy on the death of A.

Seaward v. Willock, 5 East 198, applied.

Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 274; Forsbrook v. Forsbrook, 16 W. R. 290, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 93; and Parfitt v. Hember, L. R. 4 Eq. 443, distinguished.—RICHARDSON, RE, PARRY v. HOLMES, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 119; [1904] 1 Ch. 332; 73 L. J. Ch. 153.

9. Construction—Gift to class of children—Period for ascertaining class—Prior trust for accumulation of income—Remoteness—Provision for raising portions—

Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), s. 2.—The rule that, where there is a gift to a class of children, the class shall be incapable of being increased, so soon as any child would, if the class were not susceptible of increase, be entitled to call for payment, does not apply where there is a direction to accumulate for a period extending beyond the time fixed for distribution.

A testator directed that out of the income of his estate there should be accumulated a yearly sum of £24 while there should be a child of S. B. for the time being under twenty-one, and that the accumulated fund should be in trust for the children of S. B. who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, the shares of such children to be vested in and payable to them at twenty-one. Subject thereto he gave the income of his estate to S. B. for life.

Held, (1) that the period directed for accumulation was so long as there should be any child of S. B. for the time being under twenty-one, irrespective of the date when such child was born; (2) following Beech v. Lord St. Vincent, 3 De G. & Sm. 678, that the direction to accumulate was a provision for raising portions within section 2 of the Thellusson Act, and that, consequently, it was not rendered void by that Act; (3) that the class of children could not be ascertained until the termination of the period directed for accumulation, and, consequently, that until that date the accumulated fund did not become divisible.

Watson v. Young, 33 W. R. 637, 28 Ch. D. 436, followed.—STEPHENS, RE, KILBY v. BETTS, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 89; [1904] 1 Ch. 322; 73 L. J. Ch. 3.

10. Construction—Gift "to the eldest son of my sister"—Intestacy.—A testator by his will made in 1822 devised real estate in strict settlement, and, in the event of the failure of the previous limitations, which happened, "to the eldest son of my sister, F. M. G., and his heirs for ever." The testator died in 1860. At the date of the will F. M. G. had two sons, both of whom died in the lifetime of the testator intestate and without issue. Two other sons, born after the date of the will, survived the testator. One died intestate and without issue before the failure of the previous limitations. The fourth born son of F. M. G. was her eldest surviving son at the time of the failure of the previous limitations.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that there was an intestacy.—AMYOT v. DWARRIS, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 268; 73 L. J. P. C. 40; 90 L. T. 102.

11. Construction—Gift to tenant for life with remainder to a class, their children to take by substitution—Occurrence of events not contemplated by testator.—A gift by will to a class to take effect after a life estate, with a substitutional gift to the children of deceased members of the class, expressed in words of futurity, does not let in the children of a member of the class in a case where, he having survived the tenant for life, both die after the date of the will during testator's life.—KINNEAR, RE, KINNEAR v. BARNETT, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 90 L. T. 537.

12. Construction—"In the event of either of my two sons dying before his brother."—A testator by his will left the residue of his estate "to be divided equally between" his two sons, and continued: "In the event of either of my two sons dying before his brother without legitimate issue, then his share shall become the property of his surviving brother."

Held, that the words pointed to the death of either of the sons without issue at any time, and should not be confined to the event of the death of either in the lifetime of the testator.—DUFFILL v. DUFFILL, P.C.; [1903] A. C. 491; 72 L. J. P. C. 97; 89 L. T. 82.

13. Construction — Investment — "Securities" — Evidence.—A testator gave all his property, real and personal, to trustees upon trust for conversion, and continued: "I declare that all moneys liable to be invested under this my will may be invested in such securities as my trustees in their absolute discretion shall think fit. And I authorise my trustees to continue or leave any moneys invested at my death in or upon the same securities."

Held, that the testator had not used the word "securities" in its strict and primary sense of "money secured on property," but in its popular sense, so as to include railway stocks and shares.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.—The meaning of a word is relative to the circumstances and occasion and date on which the word is used, and it is the duty of a judge to inform his mind, not only by reference to dictionaries, but also by evidence, of the meaning ordinarily given to such a word.—RAYNER, RE, RAYNER v. RAYNER, C.A., 273; [1904] 1 Ch. 176; 73 L. J. Ch. 111; 89 L. T. 681.

14. Construction — Personalty — Local situation—Bequests of property in United Kingdom and in South Africa—Separate trusts and trustees—South African debtors by specialty and simple contract—Shares in South African companies transferable both there and in London—Certificates at London banks.—For the purpose of construing a will which disposes of "personalty in the United Kingdom" in one way, and "personalty in South Africa" in another way, the debts owing to testator, whether on simple contract or by specialty, are to be considered as locally situated where the debtors are, the distinction made between simple contract and specialty debts in relation to probate duty not holding good in questions of construction.

In construing such a will, shares in companies constituted according to the law of a South African state, but having offices both there and in London, in either of which places transfers can be registered and certificates issued are to be considered as locally situated in that one of the two countries in which the share certificates are kept at the date of the testator's death.—CLARK, RE, MCKECHNIE v. CLARK, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 212; [1904] 1 Ch. 94; 73 L. J. Ch. 188; 89 L. T. 736.

15. Construction—Settlement—Successive life estates and successive estates tail.—W. P. H. by his will devised as follows: "I devise all my real estate to my godson P. C. H. for his life with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, with remainder to the eldest and every other son of the said Sir C. H. for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of such sons of Sir C. H. in tail, with remainder to my own right heirs."

The testator died on the 20th of February, 1859.

Sir C. H. had several sons, of whom P. C. H. was the second and Sir J. W. H. the eldest. P. C. H. died on the 14th of July, 1902, without ever having been married. Sir J. W. H. thereupon became entitled to the estates for his life. C. J. H., the eldest son of Sir J. W. H., had disentailed, his father joining in the deed, and, by virtue of that deed and of a transfer of the life interest of his father, he now claimed to be entitled in fee simple in possession to the hereditaments comprised in the testator's will, and asked for a declaration accordingly.

Held, that, applying the reasoning of Lewis v. Waters, 6 East, 336, and Cradock v. Cradock, 4 Jur.

N. S. 626, the eldest and every other son of Sir C. H. took successive life estates, and that the first and other sons of such sons of Sir C. H. took successive estates in tail, but that the limitations did not enable the first and other sons of the eldest son of the said Sir C. H. to take until after the death of all the tenants for life.—HONYWOOD v. HONYWOOD, C.A.; 89 L. T. 378.

16. Construction — Specific devise of freeholds—Direction to pay "my duties"—Estate and settlement estate duties—Freeholds exonerated - Finance Acts, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 5 (1), 6 (2), 8 (3) (4), 9 (1)(4), and 14 (1); and 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19—Direction to pay incumbrances—Mortgage on freeholds—Further security—Apportionment—Locke-King's Acts (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 69). —A testator devised freeholds in trust for his daughter and her children, and gave the residue of his estate, both real and personal, in trust for sale and conversion, the clear residue to be divided, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and duties, and any incumbrances charged on his said estate.

Held, a direction to pay all duties arising by reason of the dispositions of the will, and therefore to pay estate and settlement estate duties on the freeholds.

The same freeholds were subject to a mortgage, for which a life policy (which formed part of the residue) had been deposited as further security.

Held, that the mortgage debt must be apportioned according to the respective values of the properties charged, and that the proportion on the policy moneys should alone be paid out of residue.

In re Athill, 29 W. R. 309, 16 Ch. D. 211, followed.—PIMM, RE, SHARPE v. HODGSON, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 648.

17. Construction—Tenant for life and remainder-man—Specific gift—Property of a wasting nature or involving onerous obligations — Gift of business—Profits arising from business pending sale—Enjoyment in specie.—A specific bequest to a tenant for life of property of a wasting nature or involving onerous obligations entitles the tenant for life to enjoy the property in specie; it is immaterial whether the bequest be that of a leasehold or of a business. To enable executors in such a case to carry on a business, it is not necessary to find in the will a distinct authority for that purpose; the authority may be inferred from the general terms of the will.

A testator gave to his wife, during her widowhood, all his real and personal estate, and at her death all to be divided amongst his children, also his shares in certain businesses. There was no express trust for conversion or power to carry on the businesses. The shares were not converted during the tenancy of the widow. The question arising whether the whole of the profits earned during the tenancy belonged to the widow or only such proportion as represented £4 per cent. per annum on the capital value of the shares,

Held, that the gift of the shares to the widow during her tenancy was specific, that she was entitled to enjoy them in specie, and, consequently, that the whole of the profits belonged to her.

Kirkman v. Booth, 11 Beav. 273, distinguished.

In re Chancellor, 32 W. R. 465, 26 Ch. D. 42, followed. — STAINER v. HODGKINSON, Ch.D. Buckley J., 260.

18. Forfeiture—"Alienate or incumber"—Bankruptcy—Petition by debtor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52).—Property was given under a will to life tenants with a gift over in the event of any of them "alienating or incumbering, or agreeing to alienate or incumber" their shares or interests. One of the life tenants presented a petition in bankruptcy, which was followed by adjudication on his own application.

Held, that this constituted an alienation, and that the gift over took effect.

In re Amherst, 20 W. R. 290, 13 Eq. 464, followed.—COTGRAVE, RE, MYNORS v. COTGRAVE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 411; [1903] 2 Ch. 705; 72 L. J. Ch. 777; 89 L. T. 433.

19. Forfeiture—Construction—"Become payable" —Equitable charge—Cancellation of charge.—B., being entitled under a will to a life interest in a share of the testator's estate, executed a document charging his interest with the repayment to the lenders of a sum advanced. The will contained a clause that B. should not have power to dispose of his share by way of anticipation, and that if he did anything whereby his share, or any part thereof, "would become payable to or vested in some other person," it was to go to his son. Upon becoming aware of the forfeiture clause, and before any payment of capital or interest had been made by B., under the charge, B , and the lenders cancelled it.

Held, that some part of B.'s share became payable to other persons immediately upon the execution of the charge; that the forfeiture took effect, and that the subsequent cancellation made no difference. —BAKER, RE. BAKER v. BAKER, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 213; [1904] 1 Ch. 157; 73 L. J. Ch. 172; 89 L. T. 742.

20. Forfeiture clause — Marriage of a son or daughter prohibited within certain degrees—Applicable after death of testator—Alienation or bankruptcy—Words of futurity.—A testator devised all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and to be divided, after certain payments, among his children, sons and daughters (other than A., a daughter), in equal shares; he then inserted a clause to the effect that if any child should contract a marriage with any person of any degree of kindred, unless more remote than third cousin, and also in the case of a daughter, without the previous written consent of the trustees or trustee of his will, then he or she should forfeit his or her right to the share in his trust estate. Subsequently the plaintiff, another daughter, married her first cousin, and on her father's death claimed to be entitled to a share in his trust estate.

Held (by Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.; Cozens-Hardy, L.J., dissenting), that there was sufficient in the will to show that the testator intended that these acts of forfeiture should take effect only after his death, and as the plaintiff had married within the prohibited degrees during the lifetime of the testator, she had not forfeited her interest in his trust estate.

Metcalfe v. Metcalfe, [1891] 3 Ch. 1, 40 W. R. Dig. 280, discussed and distinguished.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.—CHAPMAN, RE, PERKINS v. CHAPMAN, C.A., 467; [1904] 1 Ch. 431; 73 L. J. Ch. 291; 90 L. T. 339.

21. Gift in satisfaction of debt—General power of appointment—Lapse.—Where, under a general testamentary power, a sum of money is appointed in satisfaction of a debt, such appointment will not fail owing to the death of the appointee in the testator's lifetime.

The trustee of a marriage settlement made certain over-payments to the tenants for life of the settled fund. In compliance with an order of the court the tenant for life by her will appointed a sum equal to the amount overpaid to her in favour of the said trustee, who subsequently died in her lifetime.

Held, that there was no lapse, and that the sum appointed as aforesaid became payable to the estate of the deceased trustee on the death of the tenant for life.

Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Y. & C. Ex. 208, and In re Sowerby's Trust, 2 K. & J. 630, followed.—STEVENS v. KING, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 443; [1904] 2 Ch. 30; 73 L. J. Ch. 535; 90 L. T. 665.

22. Name and arms clause—Direction to "lawfully assume" arms—Meaning of—Condition subsequent—Impossibility of performance.—A person cannot "lawfully assume" a coat of arms by mere user, or otherwise than by obtaining a grant of the arms in one or other of the ways recognized by the custom and usages of society with regard to arms—viz., by an Act of Parliament, a grant from the College of Heralds, or a Royal License.

As to the meaning of "assume" standing alone, quære.

A testator directed that every person becoming entitled under his will to his settled real estates should in certain events "lawfully assume" a coat of arms used by the testator (but being in fact the arms of certain ancient families with which the testator could not be proved to be connected), and in default should (in effect) forfeit his estate. Upon evidence being given as to the impossibility of obtaining a grant of the arms from the Heralds' College to the plaintiff, who was devisee of the settled estates,

Held, that the direction in his will was void as a condition subsequent which was impossible of performance, and that the plaintiff's estate was not forfeited.—CROXON, RE, CROXON v. FERRERS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 343; [1904] 1 Ch. 252; 73 L. J. Ch. 170; 89 L. T. 733.

23. Precatory trust—Absolute gift followed by expression of desire.—The decisions of the Court of Appeal in In re Diggles, 39 Ch. D. 253, In re Hamilton, [1895] 2 Ch. 370, and In re Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. 12, are not inconsistent with the rule laid down by Lord Alvanley in Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. 333, 335, as to what creates a trust in the case of a gift, which was approved of by the House of Lords in Knight v. Broughton, 11 Cl. & F. 513, 548.

Testatrix bequeathed all her real and personal property equally amongst her two daughters as tenants in common for their own absolute use and benefit, and appointed them her executrixes. She then continued: "My desire is that each of my said two daughters shall during the lifetime of my son pay to him one-third of the respective incomes of my said two daughters accruing from the moneys and investments under this my will."

Held, that the expression of the testatrix's desire was not sufficient to cut down the former absolute gift, and no trust was created in favour of the son.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.—OLDFIELD, RE, OLDFIELD v. OLDFIELD, C.A.; [1904] 1 Ch. 549; 73 L. J. Ch. 433; 90 L. T. 392.

24. Precatory trust—Gift beneficial or in trust—Absolute gift to wife "in confidence"—Gift over in default—Power of appointment—Absolute donee.—A testator gave, bequeathed, and devised to his wife the whole of his real and personal estate absolutely "in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit; and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces." The testator died childless, leaving a widow and seven nieces surviving him.

Held (by Vaughan Williams and Stirling, LJJ., Cozens-Hardy, L.J., dissenting), that the widow took the property absolutely for her own benefit, and that no trust was created in favour of the nieces.

Per Cozens-Hardy, L.J.—Upon the construction of the will as a whole the widow took more than a life interest, and if all the nieces died before her the absolute gift would remain. But it was clear the testator intended that the nieces should take a share, either as she should determine or in default in equal shares.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.—HANBURY, RE, HANBURY v. FISHER, C.A., 662; [1904] 1 Ch. 415; 73 L. J. Ch. 222; 90 L. T. 66.

25. Remoteness—Limitations in strict settlement—Contingent remainders or executory devises—Failure for remoteness.—A will, dated in 1854, contained a series of limitations in strict settlement under which, on the death of A. without issue in 1891, B. became tenant for life in possession, with remainder to the plaintiff, his eldest son, an infant, as tenant in tail, with divers remainders over, including a remainder to C., the plaintiff's uncle, who was born in 1860, for life, with remainders over.

By a codicil, dated in 1868, the testator directed and declared that no devisee of any of his real estates devised under or by virtue of his will should have a vested interest therein or be entitled to the possession of the same until the attainment of the age of twenty-four years, anything contained in his will or any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

The testator died in 1879.

Held, that, regard being had to the terms of the codicil, the limitations of the will took effect by way of executory devise and not by way of contingent remainder, and had failed for remoteness.

Decision of Farwell, J., affirmed.—WRIGHTSON, RE, BATTIE-WRIGHTSON v. THOMAS, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 95; 90 L. T. 748.

26. Rent-charge—Excepted gift—Residuary gift—Codicil—Intestacy—Rent-charge issuing out of leaseholds—Chattel real—Vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money — Next-of-kin — Locke-King's Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113), s. 1—Amending Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 69)—Amending Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 34), s. 1.—When in a will property is specifically excepted from a general gift and is afterwards specifically bequeathed, but the bequest fails by lapse or otherwise, then it is to be taken that the object of the testator in making the exception was simply to give the property to the specific legatee, and, that being the sole object, upon the failure of the bequest it will be held to be included in the residuary gift. If, however, the testator makes no disposition by will of the excepted property, this reasoning does not apply, and the property passes as on an intestacy. Where, therefore, a testator having made a bequest of his personal estate except chattels real, and bequeathed the chattels real to a legatee who predeceased him subsequently made a codicil in which he referred to the death of the legatee and confirmed his said will, without making any disposition of the chattels real,

Held, that the chattels real passed to the next-of-kin, and did not fall into residue.

Held, also, that a rent-charge issuing out of leaseholds is a chattel real. A rent-charge of this nature is within the provisions of Locke-King's Act, 1854, read together with the Amending Acts of 1867 and 1877. Consequently where a testator, who has contracted to purchase such a rent-charge dies intestate in respect thereof, it passes to the next-of-kin subject to the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money.

Decision of Byrne, J. ([1904] 1 Ch. 111), on this point affirmed.—FRASER, RE, LOWTHER v. FRASER. C.A., 516; [1904] 1 Ch. 726; 73 L. J. Ch. 481.

27. Substitutional gift—Gift to the children of A.—"Die without leaving children"—Vested interests.—A testator gave his property in trust for his wife for life and upon her death to his daughter A., but if she should be then dead to any child or children of A., and "failing such issue of" A. to his daughter B., but if she should be then dead to any child or children of B.; but should A. and B. be then both dead "leaving no issue," then, in case of each or either of them being married leaving a husband or husbands them surviving, to the husbands or survivor of such husband.

B. was dead, leaving one child.

A. was still living, and had three children.

Held, that the case fell within the rule that where a vested interest was given to children it was not to be divested by a gift over if the parent died without leaving children.

Treharne v. Layton, L. R. 10 Q. B. 459, at p. 463, considered and applied.

In re Ball, Slattery v. Ball, 59 L. T. Rep. 800; 40 Ch. Div. 11, distinguished.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.—BRADBURY, RE, WING v. BRADBURY, C.A.; 73 L. J. Ch. 591; 90 L. T. 824.

28. Testamentary expenses—Settlement estate duty—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19, sub-section 1.—A mere direction in a will that the executors are to pay testamentary expenses out of residue does not extend to settlement estate duty and is not an express provision that it is not to be borne by the settled property within the meaning of sub-section 1 of section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28).—KING, RE, TRAVERS v. KELLY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 230; [1904] 1 Ch. 363; 73 L. J. Ch. 210; 90 L. T. 281.

29. Wasting security—Notional conversion—Tenant for life and remainderman—Rate of interest—Interest upon surplus income.—Where there is a notional conversion of a wasting security, as in Meyer v. Simonsen, 5 De G. & Sm. 723, interest thereon should now be allowed to the tenant for life at the rate of 3 per cent. only.

The surplus income of the wasting security, after providing for the 3 per cent., goes to capital, but the interest thereon to the tenant for life.—WOODS, RE, GABELLINI v. WOODS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 4; 73 L. J. Ch. 204; 90 L. T. 8.

WORKMAN.—See Master and Servant.

WRIT OF POSSESSION.—See Receiver, 4.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 674